Mr. ROBINSON. Very well, Mr. President; I think that is a reasonable suggestion. We have had an extremely illuminating debate today; and if there is no other business to come before the Senate at this juncture, I shall move an executive session.

I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Reports of committees are in order.

If there be no reports of committees, the clerk will state the nominations on the calendar.

POSTMASTER

The Chief Clerk read the nomination of William J. Hughes to be postmaster at Loris, S. C.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

IN THE NAVY

The Chief Clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations in the Navy.

Mr. ROBINSON. I ask unanimous consent that the various nominations in the Navy be confirmed en bloc.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered, and the nominations are confirmed.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE

The Chief Clerk read the nomination of George S. Messersmith, of Delaware, to be an Assistant Secretary of State.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the President be notified of the confirmation of the nomination of Mr. Messersmith.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered, and the President will be notified.

DIPLOMATIC AND FOREIGN SERVICE

The Chief Clerk read the nomination of Jefferson Caffery, of Louisiana, to be Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary to Brazil.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

The Chief Clerk read the nomination of Hugh S. Gibson, of California, to be Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary to Belgium; also Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary to Luxemburg.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I have been requested to bring to the attention of the Senate the very great service rendered by the former Ambassador to Cuba, now made Ambassador to Brazil, and by the two gentlemen from the State of Illinois, Mr. Atherton and Mr. Harrison, who have been nominated, respectively, to represent our country in Bulgaria and in Switzerland. As to their service I shall not enter into detail, but I desire to assure the Senate that their nominations are very much appreciated in their homes, and their confirmation very much desired.

The Chief Clerk read the nomination of Grenville T. Emmet, of New York, to be Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary to Austria.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

The Chief Clerk read the nomination of Ray Atherton, of Illinois to be Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary to Bulgaria.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

The Chief Clerk read the nomination of Wilbur J. Carr, of New York, to be Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary to Czechoslovakia.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

The Chief Clerk read the nomination of Ferdinand L. Mayer, of Indiana, to be Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary to Haiti.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection the nomination is confirmed.

The Chief Clerk read the nomination of Leland Harrison, of Illinois, to be envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary to Switzerland.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

The Chief Clerk read the nomination of William E. Chapman, of Oklahoma, to be secretary in the diplomatic service.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

WORKS PROGRESS ADMINISTRATION

The Chief Clerk read the nomination of Fred G. Healy to be State administrator for New Mexico.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

RECESS

The Senate resumed legislative session.

Mr. ROBINSON. I move that the Senate take a recess until 12 o'clock noon tomorrow.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 4 o'clock and 22 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until tomorrow, Friday, July 9, 1937, at 12 o'clock meridian.

CONFIRMATIONS

Executive nominations confirmed by the Senate July 8 (legislative day of July 6), 1937

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

THURSDAY, JULY 8, 1937

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Lord, our God and our Father, from whom nothing is hid, cleanse our thoughts by the inspiration of Thy holy spirit. Help us to be free from all guile, and with firm and steadfast steps may we walk worthy of our vocation. Let Thy word be a lamp unto our feet. Love thinketh no evil. A soft answer turneth away wrath. Behold how good and how pleasant it is for brethren to dwell together in unity. A good deed touches the hearts of men. God is love. We pray Thee, Heavenly Father, that we may treasure Thy teaching in our hearts. Bid us go forward to the things that make for contentment, peace, happiness, and good will. May they be accentuated in the home, State, and Nation, to the honor and glory of Thy holy name. Under all the conflicting circumstances of public and private life we pray Thee to help us quit ourselves like men. In the name of Jesus. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Tuesday, July 6, 1937, was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Frazier, its legislative clerk, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment a joint resolution of the House of the following title:

H. J. Res. 379. Joint resolution authorizing Federal participation in the New York World's Fair, 1939.

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the amendment of the House to the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 88) entitled "Joint resolution providing for the participation of the United States in the world's fair to be held by the San Francisco Bay Exposition, Inc., in the city of San Francisco during the year 1939, and for other purposes."

The message also announced that the Senate insists upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 2229) entitled "An act for the relief of Florida O. McLain, widow of Calvin E. McLain", disagreed to by the House, agrees to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. BAILEY, Mr. HUGHES, and Mr. CAPPER to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the amendments of the House to bills of the Senate of the following titles:

S. 114. An act for the relief of Mildred Moore;

S. 828. An act for the relief of Ellen Taylor; and

S. 1934. An act for the relief of Halle D. McCullough.

NONMILITARY ACTIVITIES, WAR DEPARTMENT, APPROPRIATION BILL—1938

Mr. SNYDER of Pennsylvania submitted conference report (No. 1187) and statement on the bill H. R. 7493, making appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1938, for civil functions administered by the War Department, and for other purposes.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. LAMNECK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein a speech delivered over the radio by Gen. Hugh Johnson on June 15, 1937.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. KRAMER and Mr. DICKSTEIN asked and were given permission to extend their own remarks in the RECORD.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 3 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

THREE HUNDRED AND FIFTIETH ANNIVERSARY OF THE BIRTH OF VIRGINIA DARE

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Speaker, I wish to extend a very genuine and sincere invitation to all Members of the House and their families to visit a celebration that is now taking place at Fort Raleigh, Roanoke Island, N. C. This commemorates the oldest event in our history, as it is the three hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the birth of Virginia Dare, the first child of English parentage to be born on this continent, and the same anniversary of the disappearance of Sir Walter Raleigh's last colony, known in history as the Lost Colony.

Mr. Speaker, had this occurred in any other section of the Nation, I am sure that the Congress would have been asked to appropriate at least a million dollars to commemorate the event. We, however, decided upon another course and asked for nothing. A coin bill was passed, the President has authorized the issuance of a special commemorative stamp, and the Congress will be represented by a special committee. We desired nothing more.

There is a pageant entitled "The Lost Colony" being shown on each Friday, Saturday, and Sunday night for the next 5 weeks, as well as on certain special nights. It was written by Paul Green, the noted playwright and Pulitzer prize winner, and is under his personal supervision. I can only describe this pageant as something beautiful and grand, and every American ought to see it. The natural amphitheater seating 4,000 people goes down to the edge of the water where Sir Walter Raleigh's ships first landed, and the entire setting with the lighting effect is really magnificent. It will not be commercialized and there will be no news reels or motion pictures made, nor will the play be shown at any other place but Fort Raleigh. The celebration will reach its climax on August 18 when President Franklin D. Roosevelt will deliver the address.

Roanoke Island, N. C., is 300 miles from Washington, D. C., by an all-paved road. Visitors from here should go to Petersburg, Va., and then on to Suffolk and Norfolk, Va., and on to Roanoke Island. There are no toll bridges in North Carolina. Accommodations may be secured at several hotels on the beach at Nags Head, N. C., a very popular summer resort about 6 miles from Fort Raleigh.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks and also include a short speech I made at Fort Raleigh on the night of July 4.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

The address referred to follows:

We initiate tonight the beginning of a commemoration that signified the first civilization on the American Continent for July 4, 1584, the date of the first landing of the English on this soil, is in truth the birthday of the American people.

Three hundred and fifty years have passed since the first of the English set their feet, built their dwellings, sowed their crops, and performed their religious devotions in the western world. Three and a half centuries have fled since upon this small island the first English women crossed the ocean to find homes upon a newly discovered land, and one of whom gave birth on this spot to the first English child who saw the light of day in the New World.

On past occasions the hardihood and courage of those who made up the three expeditions of Sir Walter Raleigh have been extolled. That they crossed trackless and uncharted seas, that they suffered untold hardships and privations; that they set themselves down in the wilderness among another and unfriendly race; that they founded here a government and lived under its laws; and that they finally disappeared in an unsolved fate, has all been recounted by the historians through the ages.

Officially we look upon the celebration as the anniversary of the disappearance of the third and last colony that came here, known as the Lost Colony. We observe the same anniversary of the birth of a baby girl, who was the first of her race in this land.

To me these annual occasions have always had a far greater significance. I would never minimize that this was Virginia Dare's birthday. There is a romanticism that will always attach to her memory. But all we know is that here she was born, here she was christened by the Church of England, and here she was a suckling babe. After that all is mystery.

We should never give significance to the fact that the colonists failed to establish here a permanent settlement. That the light of civilization kindled here failed, and that the repeated effort to plant the colony ended in disaster, counts for nothing. The history of the Anglo-Saxon is full of failure, but each failure has marked a surer and firmer advance. It merely illustrates the fiber and splendid tenacity of the race. What we should never lose sight of is that here was the first feeble effort by the English to possess and to colonize, which in the fullness of time was to bring forth the great galaxy of States forming the American Union, and was to make the British Empire a place upon which the sun never sets.

Had there been no Roanoke Island and Fort Raleigh, it is doubtful if there would have been a Jamestown or a Plymouth Rock, for in the intervening time the boundaries of nations were changing, but the right of settlement had been established here and no one dared to dispute the grant of England's virgin queen.

How fortunate it was for America and for humanity that this first lodgment on our coast was by a race ardently attached to freedom and personal liberty and trained to the usages and customs of the realm of England. What a rich heritage has come to us from across the seas. Ties of language, friendship, and blood have linked us together until today we stand as the only two great democracies on earth. May God preserve this common friendship and may it always exist between the two great English speaking races. So long as that continues, so long as the liberties of their people are cherished and protected, then so long will civilization exist. World peace, contentment, and happiness will not depend upon leagues of nations and world courts, as it will depend upon the sustained friendship and mutual understanding of our two great countries.

So, when we embark tonight upon an occasion that will bring thousands to this hallowed spot, let us not forget that the 91 men, 17 women, and 11 children who disappeared from the face of the earth, were but the vanguard of the greatest colonization that the world has ever known, and it was by a people from whose loins we sprang. Let us not forget that Virginia Dare was the forerunner of the countless millions that came after to constitute a mighty people. Let us never forget that it was the Anglo-Saxon pioneer, the Anglo-Saxon character, the Anglo-Saxon determination, and the Anglo-Saxon vision that gave us a land where justice and liberty will always be preserved.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein certain extracts from reports by governmental agencies.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Colorado?

There was no objection.

MARRIED PERSONS IN THE GOVERNMENT SERVICE

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Rules I call up House Resolution 260 and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution as follows:

House Resolution 260

Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of H. R. 3408, a bill to amend the Civil Service Act approved January 16, 1883 (22 Stat. 403), and for other purposes. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and shall continue not to exceed 1 hour, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on the Civil Service, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the reading of the bill for amendment the Committee shall rise and report the same to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit, with or without instructions.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. TAYLOR] and yield myself 5 minutes.

Mr. Speaker, this is a rule for the consideration of the bill coming from the Committee on the Civil Service, for the repeal of what is known as section 213 of the Economy Act. As you all know, section 213 is that section of the act which discriminated against and prevented the employment of married women or married men when their husbands or wives were in the Government service. This has been the cause of a good deal of confusion, much injustice, and a good deal of complaint.

The bill which has been reported by the Committee on the Civil Service is in the nature of a compromise. The net effect of this bill will be to permit the employment of husbands and wives only in those cases where the joint salaries of both husband and wife do not exceed the sum of $4,000. I think the only reason this bill was ever enacted was that there were certain cases where a husband was drawing a large salary and his wife was probably drawing a large salary, which created a condition that was not right. I do not think the Congress ever had the intention of requiring departments to discharge a wife whose husband was working for the Government where both were getting insignificant salaries. The bill was aimed originally at those cases where the two members of the families were getting large salaries. The effect of that bill in many cases has been to prevent young people who worked in Government departments on small salaries from getting married, because they knew that immediately they were married one or the other of them would have to resign from the Government service.

It seems to me it is eminently fair that this bill should be passed, as it only extends the rule in cases where both the husband and wife are drawing very small salaries which do not in the aggregate exceed the sum of $4,000.

While I understand there will be some little opposition, perhaps, to the bill, my information is that there is no opposition to this rule. After yielding to the gentlewoman from New York [Mrs. O'DAY] and to the chairman of the Committee on the Civil Service, if it is agreeable to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. TAYLOR], after he has yielded such time as he needs, I am going to move the previous question on the rule as soon as possible.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD by printing an address delivered by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. HANCOCK] on June 25, 1937, at Blowing Rock, N. C., to the North Carolina Building and Loan League, in which he discussed a national housing policy.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

MARRIED PERSONS IN THE GOVERNMENT SERVICE

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I regret very much to find myself in opposition to this rule. I think section 213 of the so-called Economy Act has been generally misunderstood. The understanding has been that it is a discrimination against women. As a matter of fact, it is not a discrimination against women. The question of gender does not enter into the proposition at all. The section was written into the Economy Act with a view of helping to solve the unemployment situation, where two or more members of the same family were employed in the Government service. The section does not apply to women alone, but applies to men and women alike. The section is as follows:

SEC. 213. In any reduction of personnel in any branch or service of the United States Government or the District of Columbia, married persons (living with husband or wife) employed in the class to be reduced, shall be dismissed before any other persons employed in such class are dismissed, if such husband or wife is also in the service of the United States or the District of Columbia. In the appointment of persons to the classified civil service, preference shall be given to persons other than married persons living with husband or wife, such husband or wife being in the service of the United States or the District of Columbia.

The purpose of this provision in the so-called Economy Act was to help improve the unemployment situation. It does not mean that simply because persons happen to be husbands or wives of Government employees they must be eliminated from the service, but it means that in case of a reduction of force, then the husband or wife shall be given first consideration in the matter of retirement from the service.

This is just another method of approaching the problem of nepotism in the Government. We are all interested in spreading employment. The effect of this law is that where a person has a husband or a wife in the service and there happens to be a reduction in force, then such person shall be first considered for elimination from the service, which I think is entirely commendable.

Mr. Speaker, I am in favor of continuing this section in the so-called Economy Act, for the reason that I am opposed to nepotism in government. I can see no reason why a man and his wife or his children should be continued in the service when there are thousands of people who are unemployed who can perform the service just as well.

Mr. TERRY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Yes; I yield.

Mr. TERRY. Is there anything in the law which is sought to be repealed which has reference to the maximum amount of the joint salaries of the husband and wife?

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Not in the original act, no; but there is in this amendment, that where the salaries aggregate as much as $4,000 or more, then this act shall apply.

Mr. TERRY. I had understood that the original law was being or had been enforced as to the smaller salary brackets, but was disregarded as to the higher brackets. Does the gentleman know anything about that?

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. I do not know what the practice has been, but, of course, this amendment is an improvement on the original act because the original act had no reference whatever to salaries.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Yes.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I happen to know that those in the higher brackets were not affected. If the gentleman will go over the records of the different departments he will find that the married couples in the higher brackets were kept, when the husband was drawing a large salary and the wife was drawing a large salary, while those in the lower brackets were affected. I think the gentleman will find every department will give him such an answer.

Mr. TERRY. One or the other was dismissed in the lower brackets?

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Yes; in the lower brackets, but those in the higher brackets are still employed; they never were dismissed.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. I cannot understand why the principle should not be applied to both brackets, the lower and the higher.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. DONDERO. I wonder if the gentleman would approve of this proposed legislation if the amount were reduced from $4,000 to $3,000?

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. I think such an amendment would improve the situation very much. There is no question about it, but both the amendment and the resolution should be defeated.

Mr. DONDERO. Would it bring it more within the line of reason if the amount were reduced from $4,000 to $3,000?

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. I would support an amendment of that kind. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentlewoman from New York [Mrs. O'DAY].

Mrs. O'DAY. Mr. Speaker, the work of the world has always been done by men and women together. We get a fine record of this from the Good Book, which tells us that it was Eve who was out rustling for food. She found it; Adam shared it with her; he turned state's evidence and thus escaped the biological penalty that was visited on Eve when they were both driven out of the Garden of Eden. [Laughter.]

Well, as civilization advanced the character of the share of women's work changed, went through successive changes, and at the early time in our country's history it was the women who did the spinning and the weaving and the fashioning of garments and the baking and the brewing and the preserving. Then men came into the homes and took these industries out of the homes, put them into factories, and there the women had to follow them because of economic necessity.

During the war the great expanse of Government work drew to Washington large numbers of our finest young men and women, drew them into Government service, but at very low wages. It was marriage time for these young people, and, quite naturally, they fell in love, wanted to marry; they wanted to establish homes and raise families. They could not do this on the low salaries that ranged from $1,400 to $1,700, but they could combine their salaries and set up their household, and this they did. Then there came the depression and the Economy Act and section 213. This was a gesture toward spreading employment, but it only affected 1,835 jobs; and in June of 1935 a questionnaire was sent out to over 1,000 men and women all over the country who had been dismissed under section 213. There were 697 replies, and most of those who answered were under 40 years of age but had been in the service from 10 to 15 years, and some even longer. Of this number only 56 owned their homes completely. Four hundred and seven had lost their homes because they were in process of buying them and could not pay the mortgage interest. They had to sell their homes in some cases, rent them in others, and move to less desirable localities where the living was cheaper.

This was misguided economy, because it struck at one of our fundamental democratic principles—the merit system.

When the farm-tenancy bill was argued the other day I think every speaker from the well spoke of the sanctity of the home, stating that the small home is the foundation of our American way of living, and yet because of section 213, 407 of these little foundation units were lost in the maelstrom of the depression. I am told that this section is about the last of the emergency sections.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentlewoman from New York 1 additional minute.

Mrs. O'DAY. The Republican platform of 1936—and we are grateful for it—has a plank calling for the repeal of this section, and the repeal of this section is the only measure on record that has the unanimous endorsement of all the women's organizations in the country. Now, if 6,000,000 federated women oppose section 213 and ask for its repeal, they must be right, and they ask for its repeal in order that our civil-service system may not be impaired longer by having to select its personnel on the basis of marital status and not on the basis of merit. [Applause.]

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. LAMBERTSON].

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kansas?

There was no objection.

THE SECOND JEFFERSON MEMORIAL IN ST. LOUIS

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Mr. Speaker and colleagues, the following information from Mr. Tolson, Assistant Director, National Park Service, was given by him over the telephone this week and taken in shorthand:

The Thomas Jefferson Memorial in St. Louis was set up as a project by Executive order of the President. The city of St. Louis has matched one for every three dollars that the Federal Government has put in. The city has turned over to the Government $2,250,000 and the Government has put up $6,750,000 for the acquisition of land, making available $9,000,000 for the purchase of land included in 37 blocks along the waterfront, which is to be the site of a memorial project for commemoration of the westward expansion, the Louisiana Purchase, and of Thomas Jefferson himself. Some people out there have filed injunctions to prevent the purchase of this land. The matter got as far as the Supreme Court but was thrown out. Another suit is now pending, and the result of these suits has been to prevent the purchase of any land. The only money expended up to May 31, 1937, the latest date available, amounted to $92,921.08. This sum was for administrative expenses.

Mr. Speaker and Members, you will note that less than one-tenth of $1,000,000 has been spent on this project and all for administrative purposes. We could yet save the $29,907,000 if we can stop this thing now. Note, too, that the Assistant Director says that the available $9,000,000 is for the purchase of the land in the 37 blocks, which means, of course, for the land and buildings. That is all the money that is available and three-fourths of it has been taken from relief money which was intended to feed the hungry and one-fourth from the city of St. Louis, stolen from the taxpayers by a corrupt bond election.

Note, also, that this great scheme was set up by Executive order, contrary to expressed statutes. Shame again on our National Park Service for ever dirtying their hands with it. It will blacken their face eventually. Congress never authorized this project and it will never complete it. Congress refused to touch it first of all and they will be more against it than ever when they are asked for the remaining $15,000,000 of their part which has been planned for them to appropriate. Not a Member from the great State of Missouri dares to raise his voice to defend this real-estate scheme. Cannot more of you help us get this thing stopped?

A NATIONAL SCANDAL BREWING

Mr. Speaker, today in St. Louis a Federal judge will hear arguments and listen to citations as to whether or not the National Park Service and the Federal Government should be enjoined from proceeding with the condemnation of property and the building of the proposed $30,000,000 second memorial to Thomas Jefferson in that city.

This Federal judge lives in St. Louis. Undoubtedly he is entirely familiar with all the facts in the matter and by reading the local newspapers is thoroughly informed of the charges of fraud which I have previously brought to the attention of the Congress. Attorneys for the Government can be depended upon to resort to every possible legal technicality which will enable the National Park Service to continue with the project.

This injunction suit by the citizens of St. Louis presents a situation where technicalities ought not to be allowed to overwhelm the dictates of reason and justice, which is the intent of all law.

Fraud has been disclosed. This cannot be denied. This is a Federal project now, and the fraud now becomes a fraud against the Federal Government. The least that should follow is an investigation by a Federal grand jury.

Attorneys for the Government will possibly argue the Federal court has no jurisdiction. They may claim the State courts are the place for the taxpayers to get relief. This claim is a shallow one, for the courts of St. Louis have been overwhelmed by some mysterious influence, which causes them to follow the letter of the law instead of the law's intent.

On previous occasions I have laid the background which I hope will spur the Members of this body to institute an independent investigation of the great fraud which is about to be committed unless this Federal judge in St. Louis shall, in the wisdom of his decision, decide that elections which are permeated with fraud, and through corrupt practices for a proposal in which the Federal Government has a major interest, is a matter of national concern and over which there extends Federal jurisdiction.

IMPORTANT ISSUES AT STAKE

Mr. Speaker, there are several important public issues at stake in this suit of the St. Louis citizens against the National Park Service.

The principle issue is whether or not the Executive has the right to assume the functions of the Congress, and also whether or not money appropriated by Congress for relief and work relief can properly be diverted for the purchase of 37 blocks of property in St. Louis for the building of this memorial.

FURTHER POSSIBILITIES OF FRAUD

Aside from the facts I have heretofore presented, there are many other combinations of happenings prior to and immediately after this bond-issue election in St. Louis, to which I have previously referred, which need to be publicly mentioned. Among the combination of conditions which possibly operated to thwart the public desires in the matter of this memorial was the padding of the city's registration books.

Mr. Speaker, at the time of this bond-issue election there were hundreds of places in St. Louis from which persons, who later could not be found, were registered. Among these places were vacant lots, vacant buildings, and even places known as disorderly houses. While this padding of the registration books in the city had been more or less a matter of speculation as to the extent, the full extent to which the practice had been carried out was not actually established until nearly a year after the bond-issue election, when the St. Louis Post-Dispatch commenced the publication of a series of copyrighted articles charging wholesale fraud in the registration for the August primary election.

The facts upon which the Post-Dispatch based their articles were obtained through the efforts of the Citizens' Nonpartisan Committee and their own investigators. Subsequently fraud was uncovered in the memorial bond-issue election through the same channels.

In a recheck forced upon the board of election commissioners after publication of the charges of fraud in the registration, which were amply illustrated, 46,252 of the alleged registrants were reported as "not found" by the official canvassers.

At the primary election on August 4 more than 40,000 of these "ghost voters" stayed away from the polls, which fact allows me to draw the conclusion that a large part of this "ghost vote" was unlawfully drawn upon in perfecting and certifying a false return in the bond-issue election of September 10, 1935. A significant fact to be kept in mind is that the forms showing the time and condition of the voting on the day of the election have mysteriously disappeared from the records of the election commissioners' office.

The ballot boxes and their contents are presumably still intact, but all efforts so far to get a recount of their actual ballots has been unavailing by the ordinary court processes.

A CHANGE OF LESS THAN 8,000 VOTES WOULD HAVE CHANGED THE RESULTS OF THE ELECTION

Keeping in mind the proposal was for the city to issue $7,500,000 of their bonds as a contribution toward a total fund of $30,000,000, and that the voters were specifically and unequivocally told the Federal Government was going to provide without question $22,500,000 for the project, which later was established to be a deceptive statement on the part of the promoters, it is pertinent to know that fewer than 8,000 votes decided the issue.

It a later recheck of the "ghost registrations" it was determined that 25,150 of those reported as not found were in the Eleventh Congressional District, which is the district in which many of the weird returns were made which I mentioned last week. Now it is not beyond the realm of possibility that more than enough of this "ghost vote" was actually cast so that a result satisfactory to those who promoted the project was obtained.

RESULT OF FRAUD SATISFACTORY

Now, if this was one of the methods used in committing the frauds, it has been eminently satisfactory to the promoters, to those who furnished the money, and to those who later furnished legal assistance and bail for those who have been indicted for similar irregularities in the 1936 primary registrations. The results must have been satisfactory, for none of these have joined in the demand which citizens have made for a complete investigation. Yet by the work of these promoters the National Park Service proposes to proceed with the project, ignoring the fraud, ignoring the corruption, and ignoring the basic principles of common honesty which should permeate every Federal enterprise.

While no individual could possibly be singly responsible for this situation, the promoters collectively stand indicted at the bar of public opinion by their willingness to acquiesce in the project at this time.

FURTHER FACTS

But to return to the election and where else the "ghost vote" might have been utilized in arriving at a satisfactory result. In 57 of the city's 669 precincts the returns for the bond issue were 22,948 to 758.

In the identical wards from which these precincts were selected, a total of 26,281 of the registrants could not be found on the recheck by the canvassers in July.

Here is a possibility where the 7,329 majority necessary to carry the issue might have been "machine made."

The hundreds of affidavits which are held by the Citizens' Nonpartisan Committee indicate that either the "ghost vote" was resorted to or there was just some plain and fancy ballot-box stuffing in certain wards on September 10, 1935.

COURT WILL HAVE FRAUDS CHARGE BEFORE IT

Mr. Speaker, the Federal court in St. Louis will have before it the definite allegation that fraud was committed in the election. By that fraud it is charged the taxpayers of St. Louis have been wrongfully obligated to the extent of $2,250,000.

Unless an injunction is granted, or this project halted by an investigation of this Congress, the people of St. Louis will be obligated for $5,250,000 more if the bonds are ever sold.

Without bringing into the forefront the matter of these questionable historic sites which the National Park Service seeks so assiduously to preserve, I do want to express my opinion of those who would take advantage of the small home owners and other taxpayers of St. Louis by allowing this fraudulent project to proceed.

Mr. Speaker, there is an old saying that there is honor among thieves. These memorial promoters of St. Louis by their very silence remind me of a bunch of pickpockets. No one ever heard of pickpockets knowingly preying on each other, but these memorial promoters are perfectly willing and still stand by, ready to pick the pockets of the taxpayers of St. Louis under the guise of civic leadership and national pride.

Where have they exhibited any of either in this promotion?

Mr. Speaker, I again beseech the Members of this Congress to give this matter some study, and be prepared to vote for an investigation of the whole distasteful business.

MARRIED PERSONS IN THE GOVERNMENT SERVICE

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, as I stated at the outset, this is not a discrimination against women at all. It affects both men and women and the purpose of the original act was to reduce or destroy nepotism in the Government service. It should have applied not only to the administrative branch of the Government but to the legislative and judicial branch as well.

We have from my delegation in Tennessee a gentleman who has given a great deal of thought and a great deal of time to this subject of nepotism and for this reason I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MITCHELL].

Mr. MITCHELL of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I have just gotten in the hall and I am not entirely familiar with the bill that is pending, except in a general way. To my mind, under conditions that obtain in this country, with so many applications for employment, the further we can get removed from the family circle, the more wholesome will be the legislation. I do not mean to personally criticize others who feel that they are warranted in appointing their next of kin, and that is really what this measure amounts to. They may feel justified in so doing, but the practice is very greatly abused and I oppose it. Especially is it abused in the departments here in the city of Washington. From a report that I received recently more than 10,000 Government employees in the city of Washington are related to those who make the appointments. I think the tendency is to destroy the morale in the different departments. Especially is that true when so many of the next of kin, so many of the same name, make up the appointments. In the District of Columbia more than 10,000 are related to those making the appointments and the taxpayers of America do not look upon this with favor. I hope this rule will not pass. I do not believe it should pass. I do not think it is the proper kind of legislation. Conditions have been unusual throughout the United States. No Member of this House but receives many, many applications from constituents for positions and places to be filled daily in the Government service. I know how much grief and worry the Members of the House have because of that situation.

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MITCHELL of Tennessee. Just a moment. I know this legislation provides that members of the same family are eligible for appointment, provided the combined salary is under $4,000, under provisions of the civil-service regulations. There has been more or less criticism about the civil-service regulations and the Civil Service Commission. That would obtain perhaps even if this law were not in effect, but it opens the door to criticism; it opens the door for unfavorable comment upon the Congress, in my judgment. It smacks more or less of the royal blood; and, if indeed and in fact we believe in equality of opportunity, we should help the other fellow and not be selfish about it. A condition obtaining with many members of the same family on the pay roll does not make for efficiency in government. If the head of a board or bureau has his relatives and next of kin working under him, the tendency is to destroy the morale in that department or bureau, in the official family, and among the employees.

Mr. TERRY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MITCHELL of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. TERRY. I agree with the gentleman generally in what he has to say with reference to nepotism. I do not believe in a man in office employing his next of kin or his kinsfolk, but this bill has nothing to do with that. This is not a question of a man employing his relatives. This is a matter of husband and wife being on the pay roll at the same time. It is not a question of who appoints them.

Mr. MITCHELL of Tennessee. I appreciate what my colleague from Arkansas has to say with reference to that, but the point I desire to make is that it does open the door to criticism and complaint and is closely related.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BOILEAU].

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Speaker, I believe we made a mistake when we first enacted section 213. It is rank discrimination, and the way to correct that mistake is to repeal section 213. I do not believe that we should carry the provisions of the committee amendment into effect, because that continues discrimination, and, as a matter of fact, the committee amendment to the bill now before us embodies even greater discrimination than was contained in the original section 213.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOILEAU. Yes.

Mr. CELLER. I am in accord with the gentleman, and when I offered my bill originally it provided for outright repeal, but this is a compromise, and half a loaf is better than no loaf at all.

Mr. BOILEAU. I appreciate what the gentleman says, but I submit that the compromise agreed upon is perhaps not as good as half a loaf. It does not amount to very much. I should vote for the bill even with this committee amendment, but would do so with many misgivings, realizing that we are creating additional discrimination against a group of people who were not discriminated against in the original section 213. This committee amendment provides that no original appointment to one of said grades may hereafter be approved in any case where the combined salaries of the members of a family after such appointment would equal or exceed $4,000. It does not confine it to husband and wife, but it embraces all the members of a family. The original act passed in 1883 contained the same expression, "members of a family", and I am informed that has been interpreted by various Government agencies, including the Civil Service Commission, to mean all members who live under the same roof. In other words, a man and wife and such children, regardless of their age, who may live with their father and mother. So that if there is a man in the District of Columbia or in any other part of the country who is employed under the Civil Service Act who receives a salary of $4,000 a year, this amendment would not only preclude his wife but his son or his daughter, the members of his family, from ever working for the Government of the United States.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOILEAU. I will yield if the gentleman wishes to correct me.

Mr. CELLER. I think the gentleman has been in error. That has always been the statute.

Mr. BOILEAU. No; the statute in the old days provided they could not employ more than two people, or, rather, it provided that if two or more people were then employed they could not thereafter employ another. This bill does not restrict itself to the number of people, but to the amount of money which the combined members of the family receive. Therefore if the father receives a salary of $4,000, then his family in the District of Columbia, these boys and girls who are reared here, brought up in this community, where the only place for employment is with the Government—at least that is the only industry of any importance that gives jobs—because of the fact that the father receives a salary of $4,000, hereafter his son cannot get a job if his son lives in his father's home, even though he be 25 or 30 years of age.

Neither can that daughter who was born and reared in this community receive a job from the Government. So what will be the result? Families will have to be divided. Young men and young women reared here with their fathers and mothers, who still live at home, cannot find a job, cannot live here, and the only result will be to divide that family and say to that son or that daughter, "You cannot make a living in the home town of your father and mother. You must go some place else to get a job." The result will be he will go out into my State or out into your State or some place else and compete with somebody else in getting a job.

The sum total of the number of people employed in this country will not be changed one bit. But we are creating discrimination against these people. The only way to correct the mistake we made some time ago is to provide for the outright repeal of this section. There is no member of this committee who can defend the provisions of this amendment unless they want to say that a young man or a young woman should be deprived of the right to work for their Government. Regardless of their abilities, regardless of their education and their qualification, they should be barred just because their father happens to hold a civil-service job and is competent enough and able enough to hold a job that pays $4,000 a year. It is rank discrimination. I appeal to the Members of this House to vote down the committee amendment. I serve notice now that if the House adopts the committee amendment, I, for one, shall ask for a separate vote in the House to strike out the committee amendment, so that the original bill providing for outright repeal will be before the House. I appeal to the Members of this House who do not want to provide for further discrimination to support me in my effort in the House, unless some member of the committee desires to ask for that action, to strike out the committee amendment and approve the original bill.

Mr. FORD of California. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOILEAU. I yield.

Mr. FORD of California. Does the gentleman believe this is constitutional?

Mr. BOILEAU. I do not believe it is; but I am not going to argue the constitutional phase of it, because I have not had an opportunity to go into that at length.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOILEAU. I yield.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I think the section to which the gentleman refers was in the original act of 1883.

Mr. BOILEAU. No. The gentlewoman is mistaken, I am sure. The original act of 1883 provided that when two or more people worked for the Government under civil service, no additional member of the family could be put on the pay roll. The original act at least provided for two members of the family. This amendment would provide that "no original appointment to one of said grades may hereafter be approved in any case where the combined salaries of the members of a family after such appointment would equal or exceed $4,000." So that if there is one member of the family receiving $4,000 at the present time, no additional member of that family—wife, son, or daughter—who lives in the same family, could get a job. So this bill is a departure. At least under the old law two people could work for the Government, and now they are restricted to one, if that one receives $4,000.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. But the gentleman knows that that was never enforced.

Mr. BOILEAU. Whether it was enforced or not, now is the time for us to use a little common sense. After all, if you take the position that we are giving these people something because we give them a job with the Government, you take a different position than I do. If you take the position that people should be given a position in the Government service because of ability, and retain their position because they are capable of doing their tasks, then you are not giving them anything. It seems to me like nonsense to provide that because one person receives $4,000 a year, his children should not be qualified to serve their Government. Has it come to the point when American citizens are to be deprived of doing their duty, working for their Government, if they have the proper qualification? Does that make sense?

Mr. FORD of California. Could not four people get $1,000 a year, all in one family?

Mr. BOILEAU. They could under this amendment, except the law of 1883 prevents that. That law provides that not more than two people, regardless of salary, shall be employed.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOILEAU. I yield.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I would like to know who this legislation will benefit outside of the District of Columbia. I do not believe there is a husband and wife in my congressional district that have jobs in the employ of the Government.

Mr. BOILEAU. It does not affect only husband and wife. If you happened to have a man in your district working for the civil service as a mail carrier, and his daughter or some other member of his family wanted to obtain a Government position, they would be debarred from taking such a job if their salary combined with that of the father exceeded $4,000.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. If the gentleman will permit, what worries me is the millions of husbands and wives in this country who have no jobs.

Mr. BOILEAU. This is not going to distribute the jobs. If you take a job away from a man here and he goes and takes the job away from another man somewhere else, how has there been any decrease in unemployment? The way to decrease unemployment is to create more jobs and not pass such hit-and-miss and ridiculous things as this proposal.

Mr. PATRICK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOILEAU. I yield.

Mr. PATRICK. Does not this merely mean, in view of the provisions of the civil-service law, that the wife cannot get employment if one member of the family is already employed?

Mr. BOILEAU. It might be son, daughter, or somebody drawing $25,000 a year back home in some industry.

Mr. PATRICK. I had reference to employment in the Government service.

Mr. BOILEAU. This will not create any more jobs; we are not adding to the number of jobs by passing legislation of this type. How are we distributing work if we take a man out of a job in Washington and send him back home, where he takes a job away from somebody else? I submit that this amendment is ridiculous and should be voted down.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. PETTENGILL] such time as he desires.

Mr. PETTENGILL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentlewoman from Oregon [Mrs. HONEYMAN] 3 minutes.

Mrs. HONEYMAN. Mr. Speaker, I am in favor of the bill, H. R. 3408, because it is a step toward repeal of section 213 of the Economy Act, which is generally known as the married woman's clause—incidentally "clause" is not spelled with a "w." I am in favor of this bill because I think that section 213 of the Economy Act has no place in a merit system or in any normal social system. We cannot consider the civil service a merit system when it excludes from Government employment a large group of citizens regardless of their training and fitness to hold these positions.

The advantages of civil service are too well known to be repeated here, but higher efficiency and greater economy cannot be effected as long as the civil-service law is exclusive rather than inclusive.

Section 213 undoubtedly worked a hardship on a great many families. This, however, is not my chief concern at present. In time economic adjustments can be made in like cases, but economic adjustments cannot be made in the civil-service law, nor can we re-adhere to real fundamental civil-service principles until we repeal section 213. [Applause.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. IGLESIAS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein some opinions of the Secretary of Agriculture and the Secretary of the Interior on sugar and on agriculture generally.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the Delegate from Puerto Rico?

There was no objection.

MARRIED PERSONS IN THE GOVERNMENT SERVICE

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. RAMSPECK].

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Speaker, in the few minutes at my disposal I wish to call attention to some things about this matter which I think are misunderstood.

In the first place, section 213 of the Economy Act does not eliminate from the Government service all married couples. It has in practice eliminated from the Government service only those with the lower incomes. There are still hundreds of married couples in the Government service with joint salaries running from $6,000 to $10,000 a year who have not been and never will be eliminated by section 213, because its application is limited to reductions within certain grades; and unless there is a reduction of force within the grade where a person is employed, he or she is not affected by section 213. If, therefore, you are disposed to support the retention of section 213 on the theory that you are getting rid of married women in the Government service, you certainly are not going to accomplish that purpose. In addition, it does not affect a single married woman or married man where the married woman's husband is employed in private industry or where the wife is employed in private industry. He or she may have a splendid job outside of the Government service, but the other spouse cannot be affected.

Section 213 of the Economy Act has affected, so far as we know, about 1,800 people. It has not, therefore, done much to spread employment. In practically every one of these cases the people dismissed were making less than $2,000 a year, and the greatest majority of them less than $1,500 a year.

If I had the time, I could tell you of hundreds of cases that are distressing in the extreme. I mention only one, which is the most distressing I have heard of and involves a woman with one child whose husband is in the Marine Corps getting $16 a month. She was earning $1,260 a year with the Government and was dismissed under this section. I think you will all agree with me that was a foolish procedure.

Mr. CELLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAMSPECK. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. CELLER. We have had a great many men in the Army, Navy, and Marine Corps earning $55 a month, and if any of these men had a wife in the Government service, the wife had to go?

Mr. RAMSPECK. That is true.

Mr. TARVER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAMSPECK. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. TARVER. Could not the committee reach that situation by providing a limitation of $3,000 a year as to the combined salaries of the man and wife and providing that in such cases section 213 should not apply?

Mr. RAMSPECK. That is what we are doing in here, except the limitation is $4,000.

Mr. TARVER. But the $4,000 limitation in this bill does not have any relation to those already in the service?

Mr. RAMSPECK. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. TARVER. It applies only to those who may hereafter be appointed.

Mr. RAMSPECK. I do not believe the Government has any right to change the rules of employment after they have employed people. I think they ought to fix the rules of employment before they take people into the Government service, and if those people want to get married afterward, that is their business. [Applause.]

Mr. McFARLANE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAMSPECK. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. McFARLANE. Under what line of reasoning can the gentleman substantiate that kind of statement when an employee of the Government knows at the time of his employment he has not the right to expect any definite, fixed term of employment for the future?

Mr. RAMSPECK. On the ground of public policy. I do not mean to say we have not the legal right to do it, but on the ground of policy. I do not believe the gentleman wants to defend a practice which keeps young people from the opportunity of getting married simply because they may be in the Government service.

Mr. McFARLANE. I do not think that a limitation, such as the gentleman from Georgia mentions, would spread employment throughout the country. I do not think such an amendment limiting the salary of any family to $3,000 a year will keep a couple from getting married. I think that is all "baloney."

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAMSPECK. I yield to the gentlewoman from Massachusetts.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. As a matter of economy, it has not resulted in economy at all, has it?

Mr. RAMSPECK. No.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. These places have been filled by married women who have had husbands employed in civil pursuits in many instances.

Mr. RAMSPECK. There is no economy in this section, and nobody has made that claim for it that I know of.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I may say when people enter the civil service, they feel they are entering on a life service, just as when they enter the Army and Navy and many of the civil-service employees do render a marvelous service to the country?

Mr. RAMSPECK. Yes.

Mr. AMLIE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAMSPECK. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. AMLIE. If 1,800 people have been affected and if these married people were to get their jobs back, it would merely mean that 1,800 people who are now employed would lose the jobs they now have?

Mr. RAMSPECK. Of course, under this provision they cannot get their jobs back, but they would be eligible for reinstatement if the joint salaries did not equal or exceed the $4,000. This could not displace anybody.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman 5 additional minutes.

Mr. SHORT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAMSPECK. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. SHORT. Does not the gentleman feel that efficiency rather than the status of the individual should be the correct standard for Government employees?

Mr. RAMSPECK. Yes; I would say so.

Mr. SHORT. If the basis for Government employees is to be based upon need, why should the Government discharge a married person who has children or parents to support, and at the same time keep on in the employment of the Government single persons who have no dependents?

Mr. MAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAMSPECK. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. MAY. I am a little puzzled at the gentleman's statement that nobody claimed that section 213, now under consideration, was an economy measure. As a matter of fact, the gentleman will remember the first bill that came into the Seventy-first Congress was a bill which authorized the President to close the banks, and bill no. 2 was a bill to maintain the credit of the United States Government, which bill contained section 213.

Mr. RAMSPECK. The gentleman is entirely mistaken. Section 213 was passed during tne administration of President Hoover as a part of the economy act. It was passed by the Seventy-first or Seventy-second Congress. It was not passed during this administration. It was passed in June 1932.

I want to answer the gentleman from Tennessee, who spoke on the question of nepotism. The gentleman is not familiar with what we are trying to do here. The present provision applies only to husband and wife. The amendment which we are proposing puts a limitation on the salaries of all members of a family of not to exceed $4,000 a year; therefore there might be four members of a family who would be affected by what we are proposing to do, but the thing we are trying to repeal cannot affect anybody but husband and wife.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAMSPECK. I yield to the gentleman from Arizona.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. Is it not the gentleman's observation that public employees in this city, where the husband only is on a salary, are in a precarious position and unable to live according to the accepted standards that we have?

Mr. RAMSPECK. On account of the high cost of living in Washington, it is very difficult for the average family to live on many of the salaries received, especially in the lower paid groups, and those are the people, I may say to the gentleman, who lost their jobs under section 213. The people who are getting plenty of money were not affected and never will be affected by this section.

Mr. BRADLEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAMSPECK. Yes.

Mr. BRADLEY. Does the gentleman think it just, in view of the millions of young men and young women who are unemployed and the millions of married women whose husbands are unemployed, for the Government of the United States to adopt a policy of providing employment for a husband and wife when there are so many married men in the United States without any income?

Mr. RAMSPECK. Yes.

Mr. BRADLEY. Does not the gentleman think the women of this country would be equally protected if opportunity were given men who are fathers of families to get these jobs in place of men and women whose husbands or wives are employed by the Government?

Mr. RAMSPECK. If the gentleman will look in the Appendix of the RECORD he will find that on page 1689 there was inserted a speech, by a lady from Connecticut, giving the statistics about married women who work, and the gentleman will find there are only 360,000 married women doing clerical work in the whole United States; so if you took them all out, you would not solve the problem of unemployment.

Mr. BRADLEY. It is the principle involved.

Mr. RAMSPECK. After all, does not the gentleman think the basis of the economic independence of this country is the family income, rather than the question of whether or not the husband or the wife is employed? It may be that where there is one job in a family its members are much better off economically than where there are three jobs in a family. The gentleman, of course, is familiar with such situations.

Mr. BRADLEY. As long as the husband and wife both work and by their combined wages secure an income sufficient to support themselves, just so long will they be contented with that situation, and they are a deterrent factor on those who are trying to elevate the wage scale of the United States to the place where a married man can secure sufficient income from his own efforts to support his family.

Mr. RAMSPECK. I think the gentleman is mistaken about that.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I may say that there is no opposition to the rule. The only people I know who are opposed to the bill want to fight it out on its merits. Therefore, let us adopt the rule and go into this matter, and in the debate on the bill I shall be pleased to answer insofar as I can all the questions asked. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the resolution.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. MCFARLANE) there were—ayes 95, noes 6.

So the resolution was agreed to.

FLOOD-CONTROL PROJECTS

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York, from the Committee on Rules, submitted the following resolution, House Resolution 269, for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7646) to amend an act entitled "An act authorizing the construction of certain public works on rivers and harbors for flood control, and for other purposes", approved June 22, 1936 (Rept. No. 1189), which was referred to the House Calendar and ordered printed:

House Resolution 269

Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of H. R. 7646, a bill to amend an act entitled "An act authorizing the construction of certain public works on rivers and harbors for flood control, and for other purposes", approved June 22, 1936. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and continue not to exceed 2 hours, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Flood Control, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the reading of the bill for amendment, the Committee shall rise and report the same to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit, with or without instructions.

NATIONAL PLAN FOR FLOOD CONTROL

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York, from the Committee on Rules, submitted the following resolution (H. Res. 270) for the consideration of the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 175) to authorize the submission to Congress of a comprehensive national plan for the prevention and control of floods of all the major rivers of the United States, and for other purposes (Rept. No. 1190), which was referred to the House Calendar and ordered printed:

House Resolution 270

Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of House Joint Resolution 175, a joint resolution to authorize the submission to Congress of a comprehensive national plan for the prevention and control of floods of all the major rivers of the United States, and for other purposes. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the joint resolution and continue not to exceed 1 hour, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking member of the Committee on Flood Control, the joint resolution shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the reading of the joint resolution for amendment, the Committee shall rise and report the same to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the joint resolution and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit, with or without instructions.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Monday next, after the disposition of matters on the Speaker's table and the legislative business of the day, I may be permitted to address the House for 20 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

CALL OF THE HOUSE

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and twenty-three Members are present, not a quorum.

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

[Roll No. 102]

Allen, Del.	Ellenbogen	Kloeb	Sadowski
Andrews	Ferguson	Knutson	Schneider, Wis.
Arnold	Fernandez	Kopplemann	Schuetz
Bernard	Frey, Pa.	Kvale	Scrugham
Brewster	Fulmer	Lemke	Sheppard

Disney	Jarrett	Oliver	Williams
Douglas	Jenkins, Ohio	Peyser	Wolcott
Eaton	Johnson, Minn.	Rabaut	Wood
Eckert	Keller	Rich	Woodruff
Edmiston	Kelly, N. Y.	Romjue

The SPEAKER. Three hundred and fifty Members have answered to their names, a quorum.

On motion of Mr. RAMSPECK, further proceedings under the call were dispensed with.

COMMITTEE ON INTERSTATE AND FOREIGN COMMERCE

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the subcommittee of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce which is considering the cancer bill may have permission to sit during the sessions of the House today.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

MARRIED PERSONS IN THE GOVERNMENT SERVICE

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 3408) to amend the Civil Service Act approved January 16, 1883 (22 Stat. 403), and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly, the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole Houes on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 3408, with Mr. JONES in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The first reading of the bill was dispensed with.

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN].

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, I happen to be the villain in this drama. I am the one who conceived the thought which resulted in the adoption of section 213 of the Economy Act. Do not blame former President Hoover, blame me. I was willing to take the blame then and I am willing to take it now.

There has been more misrepresentation in regard to this law than in regard to any law that has ever been on the statute books. You all know the unemployment condition of the country at the time this law was passed, and every fair-minded man and woman knows that the unemployment condition of the country has not changed up to the present time. Dismiss from your minds the charge that this law discriminates against women. There is absolutely no discrimination against women in this law, because the act is in the event of a reduction in force, either the husband or wife must be furloughed before a man is furloughed whose wife is not working for the Government or before a woman is furloughed whose husband is not working for the Government. Where is there any discrimination against women there?

You hear a lot of talk about how this has affected the persons in the low-salaried jobs. The law has also affected those in the higher brackets. It was offered for that purpose and it cannot be ignored provided there is a reduction in force.

Let me call your attention to the fact that we have more people working for the Government of the United States today than at any time in the history of the country during peacetimes, and the number almost equals the number who were employed by the Government during the period of the war.

The President of the United States within the last 48 hours has said to every Government agency, "You must reduce your expenses during the coming year 10 percent." What does this mean? This means a reduction in personnel, and when this reduction in personnel comes, then section 213 applies, because the law provides that in furloughing employees either the husband or the wife must go before a single person is furloughed or before a married person is separated from the service where both the husband and wife are not employed by the Government.

We do not control industry. If we did, I would offer an amendment to make this law apply to industry, but you know it would not be constitutional.

Let me tell you something about what is occurring around the country. Just forget Washington. We all have some respect for the polls of the Institute of Public Opinion. They have taken many polls throughout the country on subjects of outstanding interest, but in no poll that they have ever taken has there been such a tremendous majority vote as was registered in opposition to husband and wife working for the Federal Government. The result shows:

The Nation votes overwhelmingly against both husband and wife holding Government jobs—89 percent to 11 percent.

Your constituents and my constituents are recorded in this poll. How can you go back home and say to your constituents that you voted for a law to keep husband and wife on the pay roll of the Federal Government and let a man be discharged who had a wife and five children at home? This is exactly what you are doing if you vote to repeal this law today. This is just as plain as the nose on your face.

I think I know a little bit about politics, and I will tell you that you will find there is political dynamite in this matter when you go back and face your people after voting to let both husband and wife work for the Government and discharge a man who has a wife and children at home.

Out in my section of the country I can get you all the stenographers and clerks you want who will work for $65 or $75 a month. They are fine, honorable people, and if you will get them such a job they will never forget you.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COCHRAN. I yield to the gentlewoman from Massachusetts.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. The gentleman knows this does not affect Government employees in the higher salary brackets, and that is one reason the repeal of this section would be just and fair to the little fellow, because the higher-salaried person has not been hurt at all.

Mr. COCHRAN. I will say to the gentlewoman from Massachusetts that this section does affect those in the higher brackets whenever a reduction comes, and I sincerely hope that when the time comes, under the President's demand to reduce expenditures 10 percent, it will affect the higher-salaried people. It has hit some of them already and it will hit others when a further reduction comes.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Can the gentleman name a single high-salaried person who has been dropped because of this section.

Mr. COCHRAN. I may say to the gentlewoman from Massachusetts that I have in my office any amount of literature on this subject which I could present if I had the time. My telephone has been ringing almost constantly since this rule came out of the Rules Committee, with wives who are not employed by the Government pleading with me at my office and at my home not to give up the fight, saying, "Do not let our husbands be discharged while husband and wife hold positions."

You talk about industry. In my own home city, the Union Electric Light & Power Co., the largest utility in that section of the country, issued an order similar to this, but it went further. They do not wait for any reduction in force. They gave orders that within 30 days every woman working for them whose husband was also employed must leave their service. The same thing occurred up in Boston, according to a letter I received this morning.

The gentleman talked about a letter he had received which he had placed in the RECORD. I wish the House would permit me for once to violate the rules, which I have never done, by placing a similar letter in the RECORD from an individual representing some clubs.

Mr. RAMSPECK. If the gentleman will permit, I never violated any rule.

Mr. COCHRAN. I did not mean to imply that. I should not have used the words so they might be misconstrued.

Mr. RAMSPECK. I had unanimous consent to put in the RECORD a speech delivered before the League of Women's Voters.

Mr. COCHRAN. The gentleman got unanimous consent and I do not charge him with violating any rules, but I would like to put in the RECORD a letter I got this morning from Boston. It would offset the statement the gentleman put in the RECORD. The letter I referred to and which I received permission to place in the RECORD follows:

MASSACHUSETTS WOMEN'S POLITICAL CLUB, INC.,
Boston, July 8, 1937.

Hon. JOHN J. COCHRAN,
Member of Congress, House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN COCHRAN: This organization, the Massachusetts Women's Political Club, Inc., stands firmly behind you in your endeavors to bar married women from jobs if their husbands are employed.

Civilization does not advance unless the mother can stay home in comfort and perform the functions allotted her by divine providence.

The Government must set the example to large corporations who want to employ married women. These respond to calls for part-time work for wages that a single woman with responsibilities or married men could not accept. Women in high-salaried political jobs, who also had husbands working, lobbied terrifically against a bill which we had in the Massachusetts Legislature to bar married women from civil service. This passed the house, but was not given fair treatment in the senate.

If financially independent married women were removed from jobs, thousands of positions would automatically be opened for those without work and needing work to live. With so many professional, technical, and industrial workers jobless, 100 perfectly competent applicants can be found for every civil-service position, or any position vacated by a married woman, who has a husband employed, no matter how capable she may be.

It is the absolute duty of the State and Nation to provide work for the jobless without increasing taxes to the point that they become confiscatory, as is now the case, due to relief loads and to expensive relief projects, which, ironically enough, furnish careers for many financially independent married women, who, before the depression made this work relief possible, were housewives. How does this relieve the unemployment situation? Jobless citizens, by hidden taxes that raise the cost of living, are forced to support them, as well as politicians' henchmen.

The public demands any sane plan to distribute jobs. The soaring cost of living requires that job distribution be placed on a businesslike basis.

Recently John J. Foster, treasurer of the Florence Stove Co., stated that his organization planned to distribute jobs more evenly by ruling that girls who marry must quit.

Businessmen realize that a double income in favored families, while others have no income, is poor policy. We can never have prosperity unless we increase purchasing power, and an army of welfare recipients prevent this.

Gov. Robert E. Quinn, of Rhode Island, did not wait for legislation but announced that all married women in State jobs whose husbands are gainfully employed should leave by the first of the fiscal year on July 1.

Senator DAVID I. WALSH, for many years chairman of the Senate Committee on Labor, sees eye to eye with our organization on this subject and went on record supporting our bill. In this connection it must be remembered that Senator WALSH, as Governor of Massachusetts, placed the mothers' aid law on the statute books of this State. He wants only to help the women least able to help themselves, as we do.

Labor organizations and many clubs sent in their support, like the Hoisting and Portable, Power Shovel, and Dredge Engineers, Locals 4 and 4B, I. U. of O. E., affiliated with the American Federation of Labor. The recording secretary wrote:

"This is to inform you that Local Union No. 4 of the Hoisting and Portable Engineers' Union voted to favor your proposed bill, and we are so notifying the Massachusetts State branch of the American Federation of Labor."

The Boston City Council unanimously supported a resolution presented by Councilor Henry Selvitella: "That the City Council of Boston hereby favors legislation which will in substance prohibit the employment in the public service of married women, not legally separated from their husbands, except in cases where the husband is incapacitated or his wages are too meager to support the family."

Prof. Guillermo Hall, head of the department of social sciences, Boston University, College of Business Administration, Boston, wrote:

"It should be quite clear to any clear-minded person that married women, especially those with children, who on account of death or disability of the husband, have to assume the economic responsibility of their households, should by all means be retained in any positions they may hold.

"I believe, however, in the forced retirement of married women who have husbands gainfully occupied."

Our American system of government is based on the family unit. Abandon that and we lay the groundwork for communism with children as wards of the state, or communism.

Mrs. Vincent L. Greene, chairman of Diocesan Congress of Catholic Women, when opening the drive against communism, stated:

"Communism's main attack is directed against the family as a unit of society. The salvation of the United States depends on the preservation of this unit."

Married women in jobs disrupt the family, neglect their children—if they have any—and further burden taxpayers by filling our institutions with juvenile delinquents and our hospitals with uncared for little ones.

Retaining married women in jobs is an act of injustice to citizens on the part of our elected public officials who appoint them and who tolerate them. Needy citizens with financial responsibilities should have their places.

An article in the June 5 issue of the Saturday Evening Post, by Gretta Palmer, brings out the point that national women's magazines have discovered that their housewife readers are bored by articles on career women, for their own husbands are out of work and they resent double incomes in families with none in their own.

The Massachusetts Women's Political Club, which claims the distinction of being the only women's organization in this State to fight for women to obtain jobs, views the problem of married women working from many angles, but the argument that we feel settles all others is that men and women have different functions in life. Married women are meant by Divine Providence to be homemakers. Married men, by Divine and man-made laws, are supporters of the home.

Legislation barring married women from civil-service jobs will not retard but advance women. There is no advancement for our sex while thousands of single women and widows in this Commonwealth, and in the United States, are driven to desperation through lack of work.

Records of hearings on this legislation will prove that the great support of it was not confined to single women, most of whom are graduates several years out of school and still jobless. Mothers concerned about the plight of their jobless grown children, civic-minded Americans, oppressed taxpayers, and unemployed men with families to keep appeared to give hearty, eager endorsement.

Sincerely yours for good government,
FLORENCE BIRMINGHAM, President.

I may say to the gentleman, with respect to the League of Women Voters, that all of their members in my home city are not in favor of repealing this law. I have talked with many about it. The League of Professional Women sent letters to all their members in St. Louis, and within 24 hours after they were received I had several of them, people came to see me and said, "You are right; do not give up the fight." I have defied the women's organizations to bring up this issue in my campaigns since the law has been enacted. I have pleaded with them but they have refused to do so, and when they refused to bring it up, I brought up the matter myself.

There was no statement I could make to the people in my district that brought me more applause than when I told them that if they wanted a man in Congress to repeal section 213 they should not vote for me; and I came back here with an increased majority in every one of the six times I have faced the people of my district. If there is any one question that will send me back to Congress a year from now it will be for the women's organizations of the country to go out in my district and fight me on the repeal of section 213.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. But does it not seem to be a matter of justice, and not a matter of whether we come back to Congress or not? Let us leave the women voters out of it. It is a matter of justice to these workers who have been put out of a job, married people, when married people have taken their places, whose husband or wife has a job on the cutside.

Mr. COCHRAN. I say to the gentlewoman from Massachusetts, for whom I have the greatest respect——

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. And I have the greatest respect for the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. COCHRAN. We generally agree on every subject, but this is one time when we do not. I have fought here for the merit system. Just the other day when there was a rising vote here, there were three Members on my side of the aisle who opposed taking the merit system away from certain Social Security employees, and I was one of the three.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has expired.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I yield the gentleman 5 minutes more. Will the gentleman not change and fight for the merit system in this instance?

Mr. COCHRAN. I am fighting for the merit system all the time, and I will vote for it, and I shall go on record now to put every position in the Government service under civil service, without exception.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Then I say keep them in it.

Mr. COCHRAN. I have always done that, and my record will show it. I think the chairman of the committee will bear me out in that statement. I have stood with him on this floor and have spoken in behalf of the merit system every time there was opportunity. I was the first one to speak against the section in the independent offices appropriation bill the other day when the amendment was under consideration in reference to Social Security Board, and I went to the conferees that handled the relief appropriation and begged them not to agree to the Senate amendment, which would have done the same thing to W. P. A.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. That is why I think the gentleman is so mistaken in this matter.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COCHRAN. Yes.

Mr. LUCAS. Has the gentleman any record of the number of employees that have been discharged under the present law?

Mr. COCHRAN. They run up to several thousand, but the more you reduce the force—and it is coming within the next year—the more are going to be furloughed, where husband and wife work for the Government.

Mrs. O'DAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COCHRAN. Yes.

Mrs. O'DAY. The record given me says that 1,835 jobs have been affected by section 213.

Mr. COCHRAN. I receive a report once a year on this law. The bill to repeal the law came from my committee, and in order to get it before another committee the author reworded the bill. Why? Because it leaked out that in the committee of which I am chairman, 19 out of 21 men were present, and that 19 of them wanted to put teeth into the law and not repeal it. They demanded that a subcommittee be appointed to investigate its operations. The subcommittee was appointed, but in order to be fair I did not even name the subcommittee; I let the subcommittee name themselves.

Mr. MILLARD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COCHRAN. Yes. I yield to the gentleman from New York who introduced the bill to repeal the law.

Mr. MILLARD. Yes. The gentleman must know that this is one bill that every woman's organization in the United States is in favor of.

Mr. COCHRAN. And I say to the gentleman that when he talks about every woman's organization being in favor of it, he simply means the head of the organization, the executive committees. Take the Federal employees' organization. Ninety percent of the men and women working for the Government, where the man and the wife are not employed, are in favor of section 213 and in favoring of putting teeth in it. A former Member of this House, now head of an employees' organization, has been around here lobbying, and he is here now in the lobby, and he was here Tuesday in the cloak room. I have not tried to get a single vote against the gentleman's bill. All I want is to have the Members of this House know what they are voting on, and then I am satisfied. I have received letters and telephone messages since this law was enacted. I have been abused and villified in anonymous communications and telephone calls, but I say to you now there is only one regret so far as I am concerned, and that is that this law was drawn too hurriedly. It does not take in the District of Columbia employees and the emergency organizations, and if Members will support me today when the time comes, I will offer an amendment to include the emergency organizations and to include the District of Columbia. [Applause.]

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COCHRAN. Yes.

Mr. McFARLANE. The gentleman referred a while ago to some poll, but he did not make it clear to the House what poll it is and just what it says. I wish the gentleman would enlighten the membership of the House and also give the date of it.

Mr. COCHRAN. It is dated November 15, 1936. That is the poll of the Institute of Public Opinion, which appears almost weekly in the large newspapers of the country. The question asked was whether the people were in favor of a husband and wife working for the Government, and the answer was to this effect: Eighty-nine percent said "no" and 11 percent said "yes." [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has again expired.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. SHORT].

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Chairman, I want to congratulate my colleague from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN] in being honest and admitting that he is chiefly responsible for the enactment of section 213 into law. The able and eminent chairman of the Committee on the Civil Service [Mr. RAMSPECK] stated in the consideration of the rule that this section was enacted during President Hoover's administration, but of course I am sure he realizes that at that time his own Democratic Party had a majority in the House of Representatives.

Mr. Chairman, this is not and should not be a partisan matter. It should be considered solely upon the basis of merit. I am glad there are so many of us on the Republican side who are strongly in favor of the repeal of this unjust provision, as are many Members on the Democratic side.

The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN] has appealed to the Members of the House to vote against this bill because it will benefit them in a political way back home. The gentleman attributes his increased majority to the fact that he supported section 213, and does not discuss the merits of the measure itself. Surely my friend from St. Louis would not want to see one or the other of a married couple employed by the Government discharged while many unmarried employees of the Government, some from wealthy homes and many with no dependents whatever, are held on in the Government service. Now, that is the gist of the whole matter.

I have had many cases brought to my attention. There is one where a couple were contemplating divorce, and the man was asked if they were going to be divorced. He said, "No; but we would never have married and attempted to live on one salary." There is another where a wife lost her job under section 213, and after 2 years of desperate effort to survive economically, she ended in the divorce court.

The following example shows the serious situation created as the result of dismissals under the act: One husband answered that after many years of Government service he was discharged, and though he and his wife had children of their own, and parents as well as other in-laws to support, after being forced to give up his job under this provision, naturally many of his relatives were thrown upon the relief rolls.

I think the Members of the House should consider this proposition purely from the standpoint of merit. If we repeal section 213, that does not necessarily mean that the unmarried employees in Government service will be discharged. It simply means that the discrimination now existing will be removed, and married people will be put on an equal footing with the unmarried employees, and all be given the same consideration. It appears to me it is more a matter of administration than of legislation, and that if we repealed section 213 we would allow many married couples in the lower brackets of the Government service who find it difficult because of the high cost of living in the District of Columbia to continue upon a decent plane of living; whereas if we fail to repeal this section, we will force many of them or their dependents upon the relief rolls or into the divorce courts.

Mr. MILLARD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHORT. I yield.

Mr. MILLARD. The gentleman from St. Louis [Mr. COCHRAN] spoke about a poll. He was speaking about a poll on the complete repeal of the Economy Act. The bill before the House today is to repeal everything under $4,000. It does not affect any joint salary above $4,000. So that the poll he was talking about does not apply.

Mr. SHORT. The gentleman from New York [Mr. MILLARD] is correct; but I do not care what the results of any particular poll show. The results of that poll do not necessarily make it just and right. Often the majority are wrong.

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHORT. I yield.

Mr. LAMBERTSON. The gentleman spoke about discrimination between married and single women. Does not the gentleman recognize that in industry they have been discriminated against for half a hundred years?

Mr. SHORT. Yes; and I want to point out the further fact that a married woman in middle life who is discharged from Government service finds it exceedingly difficult to find employment in industry because of the pension regulations and requirements in industry.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. SHORT] has expired.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman from Missouri 3 additional minutes in order to ask a question.

I believe this should be called the married couple's clause rather than the married women's clause, because in many instances it has been the husband who has been robbed. Because he was earning the lower salary he has been thrown out of work. It is natural for a family to want as large a salary as possible, as it is natural for the one with the lower pay to take the dismissal. He has had to stay at home and take care of the children, and in many instances it has not come out very well, because his wife feels resentment because she is working, and the husband feels humiliated because he is not working. It should be called the married couple's clause instead of the married women's clause. Do not put it all on the women.

Mr. SHORT. The gentlewoman from Massachusetts is absolutely correct.

Here is another case. A wife who had been working for 10 years, 40 years old, with a salary of $1,900, was compelled to resign. With her dismissal her father went on relief and a family that had been given clothing for three children is now entirely on relief. In another instance a wife helped clothe five children of a brother who was ill and out of work in a southern city. She got $1,740 and was 45 years old. Her husband, who had been with the Government 29 years and 9 months, was 63 years old, and received $2,800, and was dismissed under section 213. The family which the wife was helping had to go on relief, and no funds are available to send the children to school.

For 2 years one couple had kept seven children in their home. When the woman lost her job, however, merely because her husband also was employed by the Government, three of these people went on relief. The wife had worked 15 years and was earning a salary of $2,100, at the time of her dismissal.

If I had time, Mr. Chairman, I could go on citing innumerable instances of hardship that have been worked on married couples under the provisions of this particular act.

Mr. DEMUTH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHORT. I yield.

Mr. DEMUTH. Will the gentleman tell us what the husband of this woman was doing?

Mr. SHORT. The husbands of these women after their dismissal, merely because they were married, could not find employment even after 5 years of the New Deal in which you have practically doubled our national debt and have ended each year with a huge deficit ranging all the way from $2,000,000,000 to $4,500,000,000. [Applause.] They cannot yet find employment.

Mr. DEMUTH. Put the women back in the homes and give the husbands the jobs they should have and they will be able to support their families as every red-blooded American should do.

Mr. SHORT. I have some sympathy with that statement and these men would like to do it if they had the opportunity. Under section 213 they do not have the opportunity and that is why the section should be repealed.

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHORT. I yield.

Mr. NICHOLS. The gentleman comes from a great section of the United States. Is it not and has it not for a great many years in that section of the country been the custom that the head of the family should earn the living for the family?

Mr. SHORT. Why, certainly, as it should be, and as it still is.

Mr. NICHOLS. If the head of the family is employed in the Government the gentleman does not think other members of the family should be put on the pay roll of the Government does he?

Mr. SHORT. If the other member of the family is capable and rendering efficient service I see no reason under God's sun why he or she should be discharged from the pay roll of the Government whether he or she be married or single, in favor of some inefficient person. Qualification and performance rather than marital status of the individual should be the criterion in selecting Government employees.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Chairman, I yield 4 minutes to the gentlewoman from Indiana [Mrs. JENCKES].

Mrs. JENCKES of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I appeal to my colleagues to repeal this unfair act known as section 213, which discriminates against women. I believe in absolute equality between men and women. Women have demonstrated their ability to assume, in addition to the duties of homemaker, the additional duties of public service.

Section 213 was enacted as an economy act. It was presumed that by depriving a married woman of the privilege of helping her husband by accepting employment with the Government that a position would be made for someone else.

As it is well known that Government employees are underpaid for the type of service they render and are subject to the strictest of regulations and rules, it is the extra money a wife might make serving the Government, while of importance to the family, is not a factor in Government economy.

I have voted against this notorious section on every occasion. When I voted against the original Economy Act in the Seventy-third Congress I did so in order that I might protect those very fine women who, in addition to the duties of making a home, were willing to assume additional duties in order that the family income might be increased. I think this is a most commendable attitude on the part of women who desire to help their husbands, and I protest against the Federal Government interfering with the efforts of man and wife in their struggle for economic security.

Women are casting 50 percent of every vote in every election, municipal, State, and Federal, and women are entitled to an equal standing with men at all times. Women are going to demand that all discrimination against women by our Federal Government be eliminated immediately. The Democratic Party has always stood for equality for women. It was the Democratic Party that gave women the right to vote, and it was our present Democratic administration under our great President, Franklin Delano Roosevelt, who first recognized the ability of women by placing them in high positions of public service and public trust. So, let us not disgrace that glorious record by retaining an unfair law, passed in the name of economy, which cruelly discriminates against women who are standing shoulder to shoulder with their husbands in the fight for economic security.

There are many other ways in which direct and genuine economy can be effected in public service. The taxpayers are groaning under the heavy taxes which they are paying in order to overcome the evil forces of the depression. But now that we have again been faced toward prosperity by our Democratic administration, let us not discriminate against those fine American women who are setting such a glorious example by their willingness to work in order that the family income might be increased and in order that this increased income might provide funds for those useful purposes which such loyal wives desire to possess for the benefit of their families.

I appeal to every Member of Congress to keep faith with your feminine constituents by voting to eliminate this un-American act which has been made law during a period of national distress. I call upon every American woman to become politically militant and demand that discrimination against women in America shall not find a place in the laws of our Nation.

I thank you. [Applause.]

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. MILLARD].

Mr. MILLARD. Mr. Chairman, on the first day of the session I introduced a bill to repeal section 213 of the Economy Act, but it seemed impossible for the opposition to put the complete bill through. Probably, the best and fairest bill may be the one that is presented for our consideration this morning for I am inclined to think I went too far in my original bill.

The bill under consideration affects those in the lower brackets, where the joint salaries of husband and wife amount to less than $4,000. Where they amount to more than $4,000 they are still subject to the Economy Act passed several years ago.

It seems to me awfully unfair to make the women choose between a job and a husband. Women love and women marry for exactly the same reason they have always loved and married, but the economic condition has gotten tremendously acute and it would wreck the world to take all women out of industry and put all the earning power today on the backs of men.

I asked your committee to repeal section 213 of the Economy Act, to correct what I deem to be rank discrimination and a very grave injustice. This bill is more fair. It has given rise to partiality. It was put into the Legislative Appropriation Act of 1932, I believe, as an expediency, so as to spread jobs; but apparently is being held in the body politic as a permanent proposition and, certainly, it has not had the original effect or intent of spreading jobs. On the contrary, it has given rise to a great deal of discrimination; and, a great deal of rank injustice in penalizing woman, for example, because she is married, irrespective of her qualifications and fitness for the job. This practice is not only unscientific but a discrimination, and is highly violative of what we are very proud to proclaim as equal rights. [Applause.]

In going through some of the departments and some of the bureaus, we find that in some they enforce the act but in a great many others, I am credibly informed, they do not.

There are approximately 36,000 married women in the Government service; of there married women there are about 1,600 whose husbands are on Federal pay rolls. I have been informed that there were about 16,000 spouses affected by that act so that when we thought in the beginning we were to spread jobs, all we did was to affect 1,600 jobs, as it were, which is utterly ridiculous. Some bureaus apply the standard and other bureaus do not apply the standard, and very strange to relate when it comes to those women, those married women whose husbands are in the service who get larger salaries, are not affected because of varying reasons which I am unable to disclose at this time.

If it is to apply to all jobs, let it also apply to the legislative branch of the service also. You members of the committee know that there are many men in Congress and men in very high positions in the Government who have their wives and members of their families on the roster of Government employees. So if you are going to insist that spouses of employees of the Government no longer obtain their salaries, then I say apply it to all manner and kinds of service, the legislative branch as well.

The following organizations will support this bill and many have representatives present to testify today.

When a married woman who has been in the service for a great many years is dismissed because of marriage she loses not only her civil-service status but all of her pension rights. Certainly this should be taken into consideration by your honorable committee. The following organizations approve the repeal of section 213: The American Federation of Government Employees, the National Women's Trade Union League, the National League of Women Voters, the National Federation of Business and Professional Women's Clubs, the National Educational Association, the National Association of Women Lawyers, the American Federation of Teachers, the Women's Homeopathic Medical Fraternity, the Women's Bar Association, the American Association of University Women, the Medical Women's National Association, the National Women's Party, the Government Workers' Council, the Washington Chapter of American Association of Social Workers.

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. CELLER].

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, there is no perfect answer to this problem. I offered the original bill which had for its purpose the outright repeal of section 213 of the Economy Act which to my mind was and still is a rank discrimination against marriage, and, as a result, necessarily against married women, because the stigma or the burden falls primarily on the married women. The female suffers primarily, not the male spouse. This bill is a compromise, and I hope in the spirit of compromise that the members of the committee will accept this bill.

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CELLER. I yield.

Mr. SHORT. At a time when every other nation in the world is encouraging marriage we are discouraging it in this country.

Mr. CELLER. I quite agree with the gentleman.

Mr. SHORT. The effect of section 213 has been to result in many secret marriages and in a great deal of mental and moral struggle, especially where children were born.

Mr. CELLER. I urge the Members to read the hearings, particularly page 51, to learn how illicit relationships have been encouraged. This indicates succinctly how serious this situation is. Hundreds of couples are living in sin in this city and the rest of the country because of the stubbornness of some of the Members of Congress who fail to see the light on this subject.

Mr. E. Claude Babcock, president, American Federation of Government Employees, testified as follows:

Girls come in here from the States under the apportionment provisions of the civil-service law, and they go to work in the Federal establishments. They have no social connections in Washington. Boys come in from the States, and they have no social connections in Washington. The very first and the most natural thing which occurs is for the boys and girls to go to movies together, or to walk down the streets together, or for a boy to accompany a girl home.

Section 213 did not change the law of nature. The result is that these people are both building up in themselves a resentment against the Federal Government for preventing them from having the normal marital relationship on the one hand, and if they refrain from any breach of the present code of ethics or code of morals they resent the Federal Government's efforts to make them refrain from a perfectly normal marriage.

But, unfortunately, many of them—and I am speaking now from actual cases—many of them do not refrain. The law is not severe enough. Absence from their homes and the normal restraints about the home make it an actual fact that many of them are living together actually. These facts are known definitely, not only to myself but many people here in Washington. My office happens to be a sort of clearing house where the cases come up.

I had very recently the unfortunate task of removing a girl from an office who was in hysterics, put her on a train so that she could have her baby without too much trouble, too much notoriety. That is just one case, but there are others—I would say scores of others. And there are scores of cases in which there have not been babies, but in which perfectly good, normal American boys and girls are living together outside of matrimony, not because they happen to be Government employees, not because they are less moral than anybody else, but because they regard this law as an attack on a basic human right, a basic human right higher, if you please, than the Constitution of the United States, the right of men and women to love each other and to live together.

A lot of them are just overlooking marriage. A lot of them are going through secret marriages or concealed marriages, and all of these things are nothing other than the very reasons for which our law, our American law, provides and prohibits any restriction on marriage.

It seems to me that this is the crux, the immediate crux of this whole situation: That Congress in its wisdom might desire to prevent appointments. In that case it would not be as much from the moral standpoint, because I doubt very much whether any person, or many persons at least, would decline to marry because it would make him lose the opportunity to get a job, but because the loss of a job is an entirely different matter, and the economic unstability resulting from the loss of a job is often just enough of a factor to bring about nonmarriage, and that is a point that I want to particularly make, Mr. Chairman. I feel this very deeply. I have been concerned with the attacks on Congress and that which is a derogation of the rights of women. I think in practice it has had that effect, but I do not feel that the Government or Congress intended that effect. I am highly concerned, as a citizen of the country, that the Congress shall not, that the State shall not, in following the example of Congress, put a positive, definite penalty on marriage.

This section 213 was originally a part of the Economy Act. We were supposed to save jobs and conserve salaries, but no economy was involved. Just as soon as one married woman was put out of the service, somebody took her place. The original bill, section 213, was to apply only in case of "reduction in force." But it applied even when there was no reduction. Furthermore, only those in lower grades were affected. Those in higher grades were always left unmolested—I mean the high-salaried jobs. Those holding such jobs were deemed indispensable. They remained always unscathed, unmolested. But the little fellows—spouses with small salaries; they had no influence, no friend at court—they were always the first to go. Charwomen, typists, stenographers, women in lower grades, they were never saved. Wives of enlisted men—soldiers and sailors—with $55 per month, they were always compelled to leave the service. They had no choice. Their enlisted husbands could not leave the service and thus save the jobs of their spouses.

When we speak of economy, it is woefully ridiculous. There was no spread of employment. There were no new jobs created. One job vacated by one was filled by another. In fact, section 213 is the only section left of the Hoover Economy Act. Pass my bill and get rid of it.

When we hear statements that there is no discrimination, I say that argument is ridiculous, and I make the statement with all due respect to the gentleman from Missouri, my distinguished friend. There are 36,000 married women in the entire civil service out of some 700,000 employees, and 80 percent of the married couples affected involved women being compelled to leave the Government service.

When it comes to couples involved, and 80 percent of the burden falls upon the women, and you tell me there is no discrimination, I say you are woefully lacking in ordinary understanding. You say no discrimination? What about the legislative branch of the Government? The Members of the House and Members of the Senate have many wives on their pay roll. The distinguished head of the other body has his wife on the pay roll. Is not that discrimination? Is that not discrimination against the poor charwoman that was dismissed because of the salary her enlisted husband receives, namely, $55 per month?

What about the alphabetical bureaus? I will name you some departments where one of the married spouses may be in the alphabetical bureau and another spouse may be under the civil service, and together they can earn $15,000 a year and still remain in Government employment. Do you call that discrimination? I do. Section 213 did not apply to the N. R. A. It did not apply to the A. A. A. It does not apply to the R. F. C. It does not apply to the S. E. C. It does not apply to the Rural Electrification Administration, the Federal Home Loan Bank, the Electric Home and Farm Authority, the National Youth Administration, the Commodities Credit Corporation, the citizens' civilian camps, or the T. V. A. Where in the world do you get the argument that there is no discrimination?

Apply it to all those bureaus, apply it to the legislative branch of the Government, apply it to the executive branch of the Government, and when you so apply it then I will admit there is no discrimination; but until then we have the vilest kind of discrimination. That is what I am trying to weed out. I cannot weed it out in its entirety because, as I said in the inception of my remarks, this is a compromise measure. We seek to help those couples who earn less than $4,000 a year. We do not want to hurt the little ones. Now we find, as someone indicated, that practically every female organization of prominence in this country is behind this measure. I will say that almost all important male organizations as well are behind the bill. [Applause.]

In this country, where equal opportunity for life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness is supposed to be guaranteed to all, women of wealth and distinction are accorded a privilege which is denied by law to those in less fortunate circumstances.

Many people who are clamoring for these positions preferred to remain on the outside at larger salaries while Government workers served faithfully for $1,000 a year or less.

Women entered the Government service through competitive examinations. No question as to their marital status was raised. The requisites to retain the positions were high efficiency and good conduct.

The law is an attack upon civil-service system, since it makes the marital status of an employee the basis for dismissal rather than his or her efficiency rating.

No question is ever raised over single persons with no dependents drawing salaries of $5,000 or $10,000. There is no thought of cutting their salaries in half.

The average Government salary is less than $1,500 per annum. When these women lose their positions they lose their rights to annuities which, in the case of small-salaried people, means the difference between a provided-for old age and one spent on charity.

The present retirement laws provide that a person of 45 or more who has had 15 years of service and who is involuntarily separated from the service is entitled to a deferred annuity beginning on his or her fifty-fifth birthday. Many of these women who have been separated from the service were within a few years of their forty-fifth birthday. Scores of others were over this date, some of them well along in years, so much so that they will never be reemployed, but had not served the required 15 years. A few months' service—a year's time in many cases—would have allowed them this old-age insurance.

Section 213 destroyed many pension privileges and retirement rights, and destroyed the same unnecessarily. Many men and women were near the retirement age when they were summarily dropped. These people were, I would say, all in their late forties and fifties. Some of the men had well over 30 years of service, others had served 15, 20, and 25 years, and some of the women had as much as 27 years of service. You know, in Government employment, employees are entitled to retire after 30 years' service when they have reached a certain age, and so these men and women were anxious to see not only that the one whose service was the longest be protected, but also that the one who could obtain work, paying employment on the outside, be the one to go. There was a good deal of discussion backward and forward among the about 40 or 50 families, and finally a number of the men decided to take the dismissal rather than force their wives out. This law has been used as an absolute barrier for the reemployment of those men; in fact some of them have gone so far as to state that they have been blacklisted for their type of work. It really has been a tragedy.

I repeat again, I would rather have the limitation of $4,000 out of the bill than in it. It is a compromise. I do not like it. If one man or one woman—each single—is worth $6,000 each to the Government, either can get such salary. But if husband and wife together are both worth more than $4,000 to the Government, they cannot get it.

Data on the effect of section 213 was collected by the Government Workers' Council and was correlated and analyzed by the Woman's Bureau of the Department of Labor. Following are excerpts from this data together with comments.

In June 1935 about 1,900 questionnaires were sent out by the Government Workers' Council to people who had been dismissed under section 213. The names of these people were secured from Government departments.

Returns were received from 697 persons—568 women, 129 men—living in various parts of the country, from Maine to Florida, and from New Jersey to California, including the Canal Zone and the District of Columbia.

Their employments had comprised many skilled and highly trained occupations, including several of the professions, besides occupations of less skill; in addition to clerical workers the questionnaires indicate that among the persons dismissed were teachers, draftsmen, technicians, laboratory assistants, library assistants, printing operators, and so on, as well as charwomen, elevator operators, and laborers.

The measure under discussion was passed with the object of economy. Also, it was hoped that it would spread work. Four-fifths of the 581 replies covering the permanence of the vacancy stated either that places vacated were filled or that the agency took on additional personnel, in many cases shortly after the dismissal.

Persons who lost their jobs were largely among the lower-paid employees. Of 643 reporting their basic salaries, over one-fourth—27.8 percent—had earned under $1,500; one-half—51 percent—had received between $1,000 and $1,800. Over 60 percent of the men and more than 70 percent of the women had basic salaries of less than $2,000.

By basic salary is meant the salary of the employee before deductions for retirement and for the economy pay cut were taken out; that is, a $2,000 basic salary actually amounted to only $1,629.84 during the time the 15-percent cut was operative—April 1, 1933, to January 31, 1934—and to $1,729.84 when the cut was reduced to 10 percent—February 1 to June 30, 1934. The remaining 5-percent pay cut was not removed until March 31, 1935. In addition to these reductions, some cases show that Government departments imposed still further reduction by means of the furlough, and in one case a 10-percent salary cut throughout a department is mentioned.

More than two-thirds of those reporting had been in the Government service for 10 years or longer.

Nearly one-tenth of the 695 reporting age were 50 or more, larger proportions of the dismissed men than of the dismissed women having reached such ages. Practically 38 percent of those reporting were at least 40 years of age, and nearly 30 percent in addition were 35 and under 40.

Of 673 individuals reporting their present status and earnings, 80 percent were entirely unemployed, and another 15 percent had work that paid them less than they earned before.

If you take a job away from one woman whose husband works for the Government and give it to a woman whose husband works outside of the Government—how are we spreading jobs? Yet this is possible under section 213. Why limit the ban to spouses? Why should not children, brothers, sisters, nephews, and nieces be included? In that sense, the President himself is not guiltless—however, I do not criticize the President. Why lay down the condition "if either spouse is in the Government service?" Why limit the condition to "Government service?" Why not add the condition "Government or private employment", so that if one spouse is privately employed, the other spouse would be barred from Government service, and vice versa?

Mrs. Roosevelt earns money on the radio. Therefore, by that argument, the President would be disqualified—that is the argument of spreading employment, a type of argument, we see, that can easily be reduced to absurdity. We all know, of course, that our country is all the more greatly benefited by both Mrs. Roosevelt's worthy activities and the President's splendid services to the country.

Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt has added her voice to those who have pronounced as unfair that section of the economy act under which married women have been dismissed if their husbands also worked for the Government.

Saying that she agreed with a statement made by Miss Francis Perkins, Secretary of Labor, Mrs. Roosevelt gave it as her personal view that dismissals should be a question of efficiency, and the good of the service.

The mere fact that two married persons were working for the Government, she pronounced a poor reason for dismissal of one of them, especially in view of the fact that Federal salaries are so low it would take the earnings of two people to educate four or five children and support a father and mother.

Continue section 213, and you place a bar sinister on marriage. You discourage young people in Washington and elsewhere from marriage. Take the case of the teachers. You would never dream that this section would affect the teachers in the District of Columbia. Yet it did. Mrs. Page Kirk, representing the Senior and Junior High School Association of the District, made some very telling contributions at the hearings. She said:

There are 2,880 teachers in the District. Of those, 299 are married persons who are directly affected by clause 213. There are also young teachers, mostly in the lower grades, who would like to be married. They are not included in that 299, but they are affected also.

We made a survey, or my association did, a year ago of the teachers who had been forced to resign because of 213. We found that most of them were supporting children or other dependents. A large percentage of them originally came back into the schools to educate their children. They are professional people with college educations, generally married to college men, and they wish a college education for their children. You cannot send a boy or girl through college without more money than these fathers made. Therefore the mothers went back to school teaching. That was one of the commonest reasons given for mothers working.

Another reason with younger women was that they wanted to buy and pay for their homes. When this was done the wife would resign and start a family. Because doctors' bills and other expenses come, and families have many times lost partially paid-for homes where one salary is not enough. These wives wish to work for pay for a few years after marriage.

There was a third reason. Many are supporting or helping to support mothers, fathers, or other relations of her own. A self-respecting woman likes to take that responsibility on her own shoulders, if she can, not ask her husband to take it.

There is one side of the married-teacher problem that I do not think has been considered—that of the children taught. Perhaps because I myself am a mother it has always struck me particularly. Here in Washington we have very nearly 100,000 children in the public schools. They are mostly taught by unmarried women. If we had men teaching the boys, it would help, but we cannot get men into the schools. As it is now, the salary is not enough for a man to support a family; therefore, few men teach. The few we have are mostly in the executive positions, the higher-salaried group. That means that our children have unmarried women teachers only, if our married women are to be forced out.

Marriage is a natural relationship. Penalize it and you run two risks. You may drive from the teaching profession fine young women with the natural, the normal, desire for a husband and children, and you keep in it, to train our boys and girls for life, a group of women who have never lived a complete life themselves.

I do not wish to criticize the unmarried teachers; there are many splendid ones in our schools, but they are excellent in spite of, not because of, spinsterhood. They should not have the entire training of the youth of our country.

Civil service assures, supposedly, first, merit in service; and, second, security of tenure. Both of these provisions are violated by section 213. A man may have a percentage of 99.9, but he would be barred if his wife is employed in the Government. However, if his son and daughter were employed in Government service and lived separate from him, he would not be barred.

Marriage is certainly an extraneous factor as far as civil service is concerned. It has not the remotest connection as to, first, fitness; and, second, qualifications. Yet, if you apply the marriage test, many other unrelated tests may be applied. It would be an entering wedge. It would be just as logical to inject the question of race, religion, or nationality. Furthermore, govermental discrimination against married women would set an example for discrimination outside of Government service.

Some very interesting findings made by the Women's Bureau of the Department of Labor on the effects of dismissing married persons from the civil service, are herewith set forth:

EFFECTS OF DISMISSING MARRIED PERSONS FROM THE CIVIL SERVICE

Provision for the dismissal of married persons, in the case of reduction in personnel in any classification in the Government service, if the spouse is employed also by the Government, was made in section 213 of the Economy Act of June 30, 1932. While the history of section 213 cannot be discussed here, it can be said briefly that opinion was sharply divided as to the wisdom of the measure, but it was included as a part of the whole plan to effect reduction in Government expenses.

The report that follows is based on data collected by the Government Workers' Council, which endeavored to determine the actual results of section 213 as reflected in the lives of the people affected. In June 1935 about 1,900 questionnaires[1] were sent out to people who had been dismissed[2] under this section. Returns were received from 697 persons (568 women, 129 men) living in various parts of the country, from Maine to Florida, and from New Jersey to California, including also the Canal Zone and the District of Columbia. Data from the questionnaires have been tabulated and analyzed by the Women's Bureau of the United States Department of Labor.

Their employments had comprised many skilled and highly trained occupations, including several of the professions, besides occupations of less skill; in addition to clerical workers the questionnaires indicate that among the persons dismissed were teachers, draftsmen, technicians, laboratory assistants, library assistants, printing operators, and so on, as well as charwomen, elevator operators, and laborers.

GENERAL SUMMARY OF FINDINGS

Measure effected but little economy: The measure under discussion was passed with the ostensible object of economy. That it resulted in little or no economy is indicated by the fact that four-fifths of the 581 replies covering the permanence of the vacancy stated either that places vacated were filled or that the agency took on additional personnel, in many cases shortly after the dismissal.

The small proportionate saving in Government expenditure is further indicated by the fact that the persons who lost their jobs were largely among the very low-paid employees. Of 643 reporting their basic salaries, over one-fourth (27.8 percent) had earned under $1,500; one-half (51 percent) had received $1,000 and less than $1,800. Over 60 percent of the men and more than 70 percent of the women had basic salaries of less than $2,000.[3]

Measure seriously undermined social security: Even had some small saving been made, it would have been at the heavy expense of the social security which is being sought so urgently by both National and State Governments, especially since those affected were for the most part employees of long service who had been appointed originally after passing examinations and were highly experienced. More than two-thirds of those reporting had been in the Government service for 10 years or longer.

Another serious undermining of social security is represented in the age of those dismissed persons, many of whom had reached the years when it is almost impossible to obtain remunerative work, especially in depressed times. Nearly one-tenth of the 695 reporting age were 50 or more, much larger proportions of the dismissed men than of the dismissed women having reached such ages. Practically 38 percent of those reporting were at least 40 years of age, and nearly 30 percent in addition were 35 and under 40.

Measure had serious results for families affected: The lowered living standard resulting from the act is indicated in the fact that of 673 individuals reporting their present status and earnings, almost 80 percent were entirely unemployed and another 15 percent had work that paid them less than they earned before. Naturally, the combined family earnings were cut sharply in most cases. Certain of the disastrous effects of this situation are indicated in the following facts:

Nearly three-fourths of the 697 families reporting had persons entirely dependent upon them for support. There were at least 2,927 persons actually affected by the dismissal of these 697.

In 266 families there were children in the family, practically all of them dependent on their parents. In very many cases there were other relatives, sometimes whole families, often with children, dependent on the families whose earnings were cut.

In many cases the family was forced to reduce expenses by dismissing household helpers, often with families dependent upon them.

In many instances in which the family of the dismissed Government employee was forced to withdraw support, the families of relatives or household employees were thrown directly on relief.

In a considerable number of instances, homes were lost or payments could not be kept up because of loss of job by one of the family wage earners.

Measure affected veterans adversely: Though the questionnaire sent out did not inquire as to veteran status of the person dismissed, 29 replies volunteered the information that those who had lost their places were veterans, and 22 of these still were without jobs.

FINDINGS OF EARLIER STUDY SUMMARIZED

A preliminary study of the application of section 213, issued by the Women's Bureau of the Department of Labor in April 1935, covers data secured by consultation with those Government departments coming under this law (the newly created agencies were considered generally not under its jurisdiction); the information was gathered in the main from personnel officers and includes estimates of the numbers affected and of the salary ranges of the dismissed employees, as well as comments on the law as administered in their respective departments. Its findings as of the date of survey may be summarized briefly at this point.

Of the 685,975 employees in the service of the Federal Government or the District of Columbia on December 31, 1934, 1,603 employees were reported to have been separated from these services because of section 213. More than three-fourths of these separations were of married women, the remainder being married men. In actual numbers, the separations were heaviest in the Treasury Department, the Veterans' Administration, and the Department of Commerce.

LOWER-PAID EMPLOYEES SUFFERED MOST FREQUENTLY

Salaries of well over half of all those separated were obtained, and these show that over 80 percent of the dismissed employees had basic salaries of less than $2,000. Departments not furnishing specific salary data stated that the middle and lower groups had been affected to a far greater extent than the higher-paid employees. This was due chiefly to the fact that naturally it was thought wise, wherever possible, to retain for the efficient conduct of Government business employees who were carrying on executive and administrative work requiring a high degree of skill and experience.

Merit suffered: In many cases departments had to lose employees regarded as especially fitted for the service they were rendering, only to learn that some other department not subject to section 213 took them on. Where married couples themselves decided which should leave the service, as was a common practice, the law operated to defeat the purpose of reduction, as frequently it left on the rolls the person whose services were not required further, and at the same time took from another department the spouse whose services may have been in demand. In departments having employees classified both within and outside of the civil service, the cut was first applied to those employees not under the civil service, and because it met with immediate opposition from political supporters of those appointees, the cut then was directed to the civil-service class, though the department often would have preferred to retain these more experienced workers.

RELIEF ROLLS INCREASED

That the law was applied in many cases without regard to the effect the dismissal of husband or wife would have in increasing the relief rolls of the county and the National Government is shown by the questionnaires here considered. Inability to continue the support of dependents (many of them aged) was the direct result in case after case of dismissal, and not one dependent alone was forced on relief due to depleted family income but in some whole families of five or more who had been supported by a Government employee now dismissed. Some examples follow.

[1] One thousand six hundred and thirty-five names of persons who suffered loss of jobs under sec. 213 were secured from Government departments; of the forms sent to these, 289 were not delivered, chiefly through lack of proper address. In addition, questionnaires were sent to about 40 teachers and to about 25 other people whose names later were furnished as not being on the Government lists of persons dismissed.

[2] In the discussion following, the term "dismissal" is used to cover both the situation where actual dismissal took place and that where a husband or wife, given a choice, resigned to save the partner's job in another branch of the Government service.

[3] By basic salary is meant the salary of the employee before deductions for retirement and for the economy pay cut were taken out; i. e., a $2,000 basic salary actually amounted to only $1,629.84 during the time the 15-percent cut was operative (Apr. 1, 1933 to Jan. 31, 1934) and to $1,729.84 when the cut was reduced to 10 percent (Feb. 1 to June 30, 1934). The remaining 5 percent pay cut was not removed until Mar. 31, 1935. In addition to these reductions, some cases show that Government departments imposed still further reduction by means of the furlough, and in one case a 10 percent salary cut throughout a department is mentioned.

A wife helped clothe five children of a brother who was ill and out of work in a Southern State; she got $1,740 and was 45 years old; her husband, who had been with the Government 29 years, 8 months, and was 63 years old, receiving $2,800, was dismissed under section 213 of the Economy Act. The family the wife was helping had to go on relief, and no funds even are available to send the children to school.

For 2 years a couple had kept seven people in their home, and when the woman lost her job because her husband was working for the Government also, three of those people went "on welfare" and are living elsewhere. The wife had worked for 15 years, and her salary was $2,100.

A wife who had worked 10 years and was 40 years old, with a salary of $1,900, had to resign; with her dismissal her father went on relief, and a family that had been given clothing for its three little children whose parents were on the county, is now entirely on relief.

Loss of a wife's job resulted in placing two other families, in different parts of the country, on relief; together she and her husband had been supporting them.

A father and widowed sister of a Government worker are now on relief due to the dismissal of a married woman in Government service whose husband also worked for the Government. She had worked for 15 years.

The father and mother of a married woman forced to resign her job are now on relief; she and her husband each got $1,680; they have two children to support, and with the loss of her job her parents could not be supported any longer and had to apply for relief.

Besides the relatives thrown on relief by the dismissal of married persons, many of those who lost their jobs had to let go their household employees and helpers of various types, thus further swelling the relief rolls and the lists of applicants to employment agencies. The dismissal of laundresses, cooks, and maids is shown by the questionnaires; such groups of working people had been discharged from homes where the income was suddenly and without warning cut when married persons lost their jobs under section 213. The following are typical examples of this situation:

"A wife who resigned to make her husband's job safe had to let a servant go who was supporting nine people on her wages. The wife was receiving $1,900 at the time of dismissal and was 46 years old. (The other results in this case include her own insurance dropped, as well as the two children's, money borrowed on husband's insurance to tide over expenses, with payments on their home reduced 50 percent, the property deteriorating, and the family in debt at present.)"

When the wife in one houshold resigned her job to save her husband's position in another Government department their woman housekeeper, with three children and unemployed husband, was discharged and the housekeeper's family all are on welfare now.

VACATED JOBS FILLED

Before discussing the changed circumstances that are found in the personal lives of the individuals dismissed under section 213 it should be emphasized here that evidence seems to show that the law was used as a reason for the dismissal of married persons as such. In slightly over four-fifths of the cases reporting the job had been filled, or additional personnel had been taken on, often shortly after the dismissal of the married person. The opening phrase of section 213 sets forth the condition under which it was intended to be operative since it reads, "in any reduction of personnel" an employee whose spouse is also in Government service shall be the first to be dismissed.

One reply reports that their branch office received a blanket order from the department at Washington to dismiss all married persons whose spouses were in Government service, and, she adds, though the office in which she worked had the necessary funds to cover salaries, she had to resign when the order came in.

As to whether the job vacated was filled after dismissal of the married person, 581 questionnaires contained answers to this question. It is significant to note that 474 replied that their jobs had been filled. And there were 116 that made no report on this question. Yet they were told "reduction in force" or "lack of funds" made necessary the dismissal of some employee and their marital status marked them as the first to have to go. One reply reported that the force was more than doubled subsequently.

One man who was forced to resign after working for 12 years, with aged parents dependent on him, states that 1 month after his dismissal hundreds of men were taken.

One reply states that after the discharge of 45 employees because of "reduction in force", the following week 50 were employed.

A married woman who had to resign her job because of section 213 reported that her job was filled by a married woman whose husband also was in the Government service. This dismissed employee had worked 16 years at her job, was 43 years old, and had a dependent mother.

Following the dismissal of one married woman from her job, and others likewise affected in her office, the very next week or two after they were let out, the department hired hundreds of people to fill their places and newly created jobs.

For a year after the dismissal of one married woman the money for her salary was sent to the station every month and was returned to Washington each time; her husband was a veteran and was employed in the Government service also; her dismissal meant discharging a full-time maid, who was thrown on relief, and ceasing her aid to a brother she had been helping, who got F. E. R. A. work later.

LENGTH OF SERVICE FOR THE GOVERNMENT

After years of work at one special job, one's aptitude in other lines of work necessarily is limited, and the problem of finding new employment is so difficult as to be almost hopeless in the eyes of the person dismissed. The questionnaire replies show that one result of the law has been the discharge of persons having served the Government for long periods. About 68 percent of those reporting length of time in the service had worked for 10 years or over, a period that it would seem should insure security in a civil-service job; moreover, there were 42 cases in this group that had worked 20 years or longer.[4]

A larger proportion of women than of men losing their jobs had worked for the Government 10 but less than 20 years, but more men than women in proportion had been with the Government anywhere from 20 to 38 years. Table 2 shows the complete data on length of service.

SALARY SINCE DISMISSAL

Of the 693 persons who lost their jobs and who reported as to their employment status in June 1935, when the questions were asked, almost 80 percent were not working (469 women and 70 men); 3 of these (1 man and 2 women) were retired. Moreover, 73 percent of those finding employment after dismissal and reporting salaries had taken jobs at lower pay than received in Government service.

After their dismissal, jobs were found by only 154. Eliminating some 20 whose later earnings do not permit comparison with job earnings under the Government (for example, salesmen on commission), almost three-fourths of these 134 persons now with jobs are working at a lower salary, and at least half of this group suffered a decrease of anywhere from 15 to 78 percent. In 13 cases the job found after dismissal paid the same salary as the Government position, and for 23 individuals the new job meant increased earnings.

At least one wife was reported as keeping her job because it was permanent and her husband was only a temporary employee. In some cases the reason given for the wife's not resigning her job was that she had worked longer than her husband and was nearer the retirement age, and it would be unfortunate to lose the full retirement pension. In other cases, however, the decision was made on the opposite basis, because though the salary of the spouse left in the service was lower than that of the person dismissed (and who was nearer retirement), they were assured a larger income over a longer period than if the person near retirement had kept the job. In the latter case, after a few years there would be only the retirement pay to support them. For example:

A husband at $2,100 with 26 years' service resigned to allow his wife, receiving $2,100 but whose service was only 17 years, to keep her job; there were 2 boys to be educated and more years at a better income could be expected if the wife stayed with her job.

CHANGE IN MARITAL STATUS

Answers to the question as to the change in marital status due to section 213 show the serious effect such legislation had on these lives and therefore on society as a whole. There were 16 couples who reported separation in order to regain their jobs, and 7 couples got divorces for the same purpose. In two cases in the group first named there was one child, and in three cases there were two children. Of the divorced group, four couples had one child each. Some of the replies show definitely that marriage would not have been contemplated if such a law could have been foreseen. To many employees this law seemed unduly ironical, since one large Government department in 1921 had issued formal notices that allowed women employees to marry and keep their jobs.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. REES].

Mr. REES of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that we are considerably misunderstood in the consideration of this particular bill. The gentleman who just spoke called our attention to the fact that at the present time and under the present law, we have a discrimination that should be removed. Under our present system all the so-called economic royalists hold their jobs. Those persons employed by the Government and getting from $5,000 to $10,000 a year hold their jobs, and nothing at all is done with reference to that group. The unfairness is that under this system we are pinching the little fellow. Under our present system, regardless of a person's efficiency, we release him or her, as the case may be, if married; and this measure applies to men as well as women.

The law under consideration does not affect the alphabetical agencies under this Government that are too numerous to mention. If we would bring in all of these agencies and treat all Government employees alike, it would present a different story. But it does not seem fair to pick out a small group of persons who are getting the lowest salaries and put them out of their jobs and at the same time allow high-salaried groups to hold their jobs. If we vote against the bill, that is the turn it will take, as I understand it.

[4] It is also important here to note that the service period of 5 years is recognized by civil service as qualifying a former employee for reinstatement at any future time without examination.

We are supposed to have a merit civil-service system. The practice under the present law is to remove a number of low-salaried persons regardless of efficiency, who are employed in clerical positions in certain departments, and have been for years. We do not touch the many, many persons who are appointed under the many alphabetical agencies of the Government, and those employed at high salaries under Government civil service. I am informed that instances are very rare where employees who are members of the same family, receiving high salaries from the Government, are removed.

I am in favor of a real civil service merit system in all departments of the Government. If we are to have a system where not more than one member of the family is to be allowed on the Government pay roll, let us serve notice now, if this is to be our policy, so that the public and future employees may know what to expect in that regard. As I said, let it apply in all departments of Government—executive, legislative, and judicial. Treat them all alike. Let us get away as far as we can from "political pulls" for appointive jobs and give these positions to those persons who merit them by reason of being trained and qualified and entitled to them.

Someone said that the Congressman from St. Louis stated that by voting against this bill before the House today he could be returned to Congress. I would suggest that we should vote for or against this bill on its merits. If it is right, we ought to vote for it. If it is wrong, we ought to vote against it, whether we are permitted to return to Congress or not. That is one of the criticisms that has been leveled against this body. We have a tendency to vote for or against a bill because it is popular to do so. It seems to me that we ought to give this legislation the fair consideration to which it is entitled and vote our better judgments. As I said before, our great trouble is that we do not touch the high-salaried groups, drawing thousands of dollars from the Government, but discriminate against a small group employed under civil service who receive small salaries. [Applause.]

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BIGELOW].

Mr. BIGELOW. Mr. Chairman, I feel it is an honor if only for 2 minutes to stand up in this House and enroll myself with the women of the world in their centuries-old struggle for equality of rights for women. [Applause.]

Section 213 seems to me to be an unwarranted interference with marriage relations and is a discrimination against women. Here are two sweethearts. Section 213 under certain conditions virtually says to them, "Though it is the natural and wholesome thing for you to get married, you shall not be married."

I feel we ought to forget the matter of sex and marriage relations. That is why I so much favor the bill that the chairman of the Civil Service Committee has brought in here for consideration. It attempts to fix a certain maximum income for the family, disregarding private status, and it seems to me that is the better way of trying to spread employment than the other way. [Applause.]

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MAAS].

Mr. MAAS. Mr. Chairman, I think that we ought to repeal this section, principally because under 213 there is a discrimination against the low-paid employees. If the provision extended to all departments of the Government and was applied to all the salary brackets, there might be some argument to be made in favor of it. I can see perfectly well that there is a question involved as to whether two Government employees should get married. But there are many people who have no jobs at all, and they cannot get married because neither one of them can get a job. There are many husbands and wives who do not work for the Government nor for anybody else, and I am sure they would be satisfied to have even one working for the Government. But that is not the issue involved today. The issue before us is whether we are going to penalize a small group of underpaid, or at least low-paid, Government employees and permit those in the high brackets to have the whole family on the pay roll. We have such examples from the top of the Government down, including the legislative branch, and I think if we are going to be fair, honest, and consistent we ought to either make this apply to every office in the Government or repeal it. We certainly should not make it apply only to one small group.

Since we know we are not going to make it apply to the higher brackets, and we are not going to make it apply to all other branches, let us be fair and just to those in the lower brackets in the classified service.

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAAS. I yield.

Mr. COOLEY. To what Government employees does section 213 now apply?

Mr. MAAS. All those the section has affected have been low-paid employees in the civil service.

Mr. COOLEY. Does the law apply to others than the low-paid employees?

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAAS. Yes.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. As a practical matter it does not. When the bill was passed it was the understanding of the Members of Congress that it would apply to those in the higher brackets, but it does not apply to the "economic royalists", those getting the high salaries in the Government service. It does apply to and does hurt the people in the lower brackets.

Mr. COOLEY. Why does it not apply as Congress intended it should apply?

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Because it is a matter of administration, and there is also a joker in the wording of the amendment.

Mr. COOLEY. Could not the law be amended to make it applicable to all classes? Would not that be sufficient?

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. It was to apply only to dismissals. The heads of the departments can put the workers in the higher brackets and dismiss those in the lower brackets.

Mrs. ROGERS of Masssachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 additional minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MAAS].

Mr. MAAS. While it is true the present law was, perhaps, intended to apply to all brackets, in practical operation it does not so apply, which is the reason I am appealing for the repeal of the section. The law applied only in the case of dismissals, and as we know, in the economy drives the dismissals were always at the bottom. No high-paid executives were dismissed under the Economy Act, and when we get another economy drive, as we will have to, the dismissals again are going to be at the bottom. Those with the higher-paid jobs are not going to be affected at all.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAAS. Yes.

Mr. BOILEAU. Has the gentleman observed the language of section 2 of the committee amendment, which makes additional discriminations? It provides that the members of a family cannot receive more than $4,000 altogether. Therefore section 2 of the committee amendment to the bill provides for a further discrimination. I hope the gentleman will assist us in first repealing section 213 and then in keeping any riders from being added to the bill.

Mr. MAAS. I do not agree with the gentleman from Wisconsin. I think $4,000 is adequate. In fact, I think a maximum of $3,000 is adequate.

Mr. BOILEAU. Does the gentleman believe a young man or a young woman living with his father and mother should be deprived of the opportunity to work for the Government if the father happens to be drawing a salary of $4,000 a year?

Mr. MAAS. If he is drawing it from the Government, yes; $3,000 is way above the average citizen's income.

Mr. BOILEAU. Does the gentleman mean that a son who is 25 years of age, may we say, should be forced to live some place else or that a daughter should be forced to live some place else?

Mr. MAAS. Yes. If they want to draw their money from the Government, I do.

After all, if we pay both a husband and a wife on the Government pay roll, we must also support some other family on relief, which family otherwise could be supported by either the husband or wife if employed by the Government. While I recognize the situation, on the other hand, this is temporary. Permanent legislation should not set up any other test or qualification for Government employment than merit. I shall support repeal as a matter of principle to uphold the merit system as a permanent institution, even though I deprecate members of the same family seeking Government employment during a time of widespread unemployment.

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PEARSON].

Mr. PEARSON. Mr. Chairman, from listening to this discussion I have reached the conclusion there is a misunderstanding in regard to what the repeal of section 213 really means. When I heard the gentleman from Missouri discuss the matter of the employment of a husband and wife, and the injustice in the situation which might arise in the event this section is repealed, I felt that even he misunderstands the situation. We do not have upon the Federal statute books today a law which prohibits the employment of husband and wife in the Government service. We have only section 213, which provides that in dismissals people having husbands or wives in the Government service shall have their services terminated first. The result is we have a statute which is being improperly administered by the officials of the Government agencies, bringing about the great hardships which have been described by previous speakers.

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PEARSON. Not now, Mr. Chairman.

The proper way to correct the things to which the gentleman from Missouri is objecting is to put upon the statute books a law which will prohibit the employment of married people or else put in our civil-service statute a provision that when a man or woman is ready to enter the service of this Government, if he or she is married, then he cannot qualify under civil-service regulations. Otherwise, we have men and women who have spent from 10 to 30 years in the service and who, by virtue of the provisions of section 213, have suddenly awakened to find their necks chopped off and their jobs gone. This section has been utterly a failure so far as its administration is concerned, Mr. Chairman. The only way to correct the injustice of the situation is to repeal section 213.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 3 minutes.

I think there has been very great misunderstanding about this bill. In fact, I am sure of it from the debate on the floor and the questions asked.

I believe in the merit system. I know this retards the merit system, but I am not going to stress that question at this point, Mr. Chairman, because the tears and distress over the merit system by this administration have been amusing. This should not be a party matter. An appeal to the majority regarding merit would probably fall on deaf ears. It should not be made a partisan matter. Section 213 was passed with a Republican President in office and a Democratic Congress. I know that when the bill was passed the Members did not realize that the people in the higher brackets would not be affected and would be allowed to keep their positions. There was apparently a joker in the bill. Section 213 applies only to dismissals. Of course, a chief of section can say, "I need the man or the woman with the higher salary and do not need the man or the woman in the lower bracket." Men and women have been dismissed who have served the Government for 15 years. I have tried to make a careful check-up, and I find in most instances that the men and women who have been dismissed are those who are older, men and women with families, men and women who find great difficulty in finding outside employment because their training has been only in Government work.

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentlewoman yield?

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Yes.

Mr. NICHOLS. In the event of the dismissal of a husband or a wife from the Federal pay roll, the other spouse is left on the pay roll?

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. It leaves the other spouse on the pay roll, but usually the spouse dismissed is a person who has been in the service a long time and has acquired not a small family but a large family with a good many dependents. Mr. Chairman, the farce about the whole amendment is that there has been no economy in its administration, because the position is filled by a married woman from the outside who has had no experience in the civil service and is not a good worker for the Government in the civil service. In almost every instance I have investigated I have found the woman's husband has a job on the outside.

Mr. NICHOLS. If her husband had a job outside of the Government, the wife, in that event, would not be fired.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Yes; and that is a discrimination against civil-service workers. When replacements are made or when a man or woman is dropped, the position is usually filled by a married person who has a wife or husband with a good position on the outside. I think if the gentleman would go into the various cases he will find I am correct in this respect.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself one-half minute additional.

I earnestly hope that section 213 will be repealed. It seems only a matter of common justice, and if you had seen the cases I have observed after investigation, I am sure you would want to equalize things and be fair to the little fellow in the civil service as well as to the so-called economic royalists in the civil service. This administration has talked so often and so loud about the people of small pay—this is a chance to help the little fellow. I hope the measure will pass, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. MURDOCK].

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. Mr. Chairman, I am heartily in accord with the words just spoken by the gentlewoman from Massachusetts [Mrs. ROGERS]. She speaks of equality between the bigger-salaried man and the smaller-salaried man. She might, with due propriety, I think, have paid respect to her sex and also mentioned that this is a matter of equality of sex as well. It is really a matter of equal rights, as my colleague from Ohio just pointed out.

As a school man, I have noticed that married women have been discriminated against in public employment as school teachers. This, I think, is poor public policy. Of course, I can see a difference between married women teaching and married women in Government service, but, Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that the question of "equal rights" is involved in both cases. In considering this whole matter it is not so much a question of furnishing jobs as getting the most efficient people on the jobs. Schools do not exist for the purpose of providing teaching work, nor does Government work exist merely to provide jobs. Efficiency is what counts and efficient married women should have equal chance in employment.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Arizona in order that he may answer a question.

Is it not true that these workers in the Government who have been there for 15 years or longer are not suited for employment on the outside, and upon entering Government service they thought it would be a life work or a life service?

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. Very likely that is true in most cases, and they ought not be penalized for marrying nor prevented from marrying through fear of dismissal. At a time when we are trying to create opportunities for careers in the public service, I see no reason why married women should be discriminated against. If they have the ability and competency, they should have an equal chance of a career in the public service.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. The men also have been discriminated against oftentimes in these cases, because married men have also been displaced in many instances.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. So, Mr. Chairman, I hope that the measure prevails and that the former law is hereby repealed.

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentlewoman from New Jersey [Mrs. NORTON].

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, I regret I shall only have 1 minute. I would like to have a little more time.

I sincerely hope that the Congress today will repeal section 213. This was emergency legislation enacted into law at a time when jobs were scarce; but that emergency, as you know, has passed; and as all other emergency legislation has been repealed, certainly this should be. There are many reasons why it should be repealed. Up to 1935, 1,835 people had been laid off under this act, and up to now, although no statistics are available, the number is estimated at about 2,500. These are almost entirely people who were receiving salaries in the lower brackets. These are the ones who need two salaries to support their families and bring up their children.

Continued enactment of this law would tend to lower the birth rate in this country and increase the number of divorces.

If we say that one salary is enough for a family should we not know what that salary is? If it is only $1,000, surely that is not enough to support a family of five or six or even three. If the wife can work, why not allow her to do so?

Congress has never passed a law forbidding a farmer's wife from helping him in the fields nor a wife from helping her husband in business. We have many outstanding examples of this, even here in Congress.

Of necessity it is the lower-bracket salaries that suffer most in this section, as when a reduction in personnel is contemplated it is always the low-salaried people who are affected.

I insist that continued enactment of this law would tend to lower the birth rate in this country and raise the number of divorces. In families where two salaries do not combine to make a good wage or enough to support a family, divorce has often not only been contemplated but finally resorted to when the wife has had to give up her job and so leave the family without enough to exist on.

Section 213 is completely unfair, as it almost never affects higher-bracket salaries. Unfortunately, the people in those brackets usually have enough "pull" to keep their jobs, and it is not at all unusual to find cases even now where both husband and wife are working and where their combined salaries average more than $10,000.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself one-half minute and yield one-half minute to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. Chairman, there is one point that has not been brought out, and that is that this provision has been very expensive to operate.

I have talked with the Civil Service, and I had some figures upon this subject that I would like to put in the RECORD. It has cost a good deal to investigate these cases and has taken the time of the civil-service people away from other work that we all want to have done. Also, it has taken up a great deal of the time of the chiefs of sections in the various departments, which has proved costly.

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Chairman, under the present law, section 213, if there is a reduction in force in any department that is under civil service—and that is all the law applies to—within a grade, for example, if it is grade CAF 4, they investigate the people in that grade, and they first discharge the married people. That means, of course, that unless there is a reduction in the upper grades, where the salaries are higher, there may be a reduction of force in a certain bureau or department, but it will not touch the married people who are making the higher salaries. Naturally in the Government service there are far more people at the lower-grade salaries than at the upper-grade salaries, and the fact is that of the 1,800 people who were dismissed under this provision, practically none of them made more than $2,000 a year, and a vast majority of them made less than $1,500 a year. That is the practical situation as the law stands today. Under the amendment which the committee is bringing here, if it prevails, we would stop the employment in the civil service of a second member of a family if the combined salary of all of the members of the family equaled or exceeded $4,000 a year.

In the short time I have left, I want to tell you exactly why I am in favor of this bill. I am not as much concerned as some of my friends about the married woman's part of it. It has not worried me so much, but I am concerned that the Congress of the United States should be on record as approving a public policy which says to a boy from your district or a girl from my district who comes here to work for the Government, "You cannot get married without losing your job."

I had that happen to a young lady from my district who was getting $1,260 a year and who was sending part of it back home to her father, who went on relief after she lost her job. She married a boy from South Dakota. Within about 7 months she had to quit her job, although they had married secretly. She was going to have a baby. She had to quit her job, and her family back in Georgia went on relief, and her husband and she are struggling today to live on $1,260 a year, which is what he makes in the A. A. A. I think that is poor public policy on the part of the Federal Congress, and I do not believe the Congress wants to be on record as in favor of a law which says to the young people who come to Washington to work for the Government that if they get married they are going to lose their jobs. It has not affected a great number of people, it is true, but it has discriminated against the woman, not in the law but in the application of the law.

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAMSPECK. Yes.

Mrs. NORTON. Is it not a fact that a great many men and women in the higher brackets who are earning over $4,000 a year are not affected?

Mr. RAMSPECK. That is absolutely true, and they are still holding their jobs and working every day and making more than $4,000 a year.

Mr. COLE of Maryland. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield ?

Mr. RAMSPECK. Yes.

Mr. COLE of Maryland. I gather from what the gentleman, the chairman of the committee bringing in this bill, says that the inevitable effect of the existing law, mandatory as it is in its provisions, is to place a premium upon secret marriage.

Mr. RAMSPECK. That is true. I hope this House will repeal this section and accept the substitute, the provisions of which take effect at the time of appointment and do not interfere with the right of people who come here to work for the Government to marry or not to marry after they are employed by the Government. I think we ought to be courageous enough if what the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN] says is true—and I do not think it is true—and pay no attention to criticism that will be made of us.

I do not think anybody is going to criticize us for having adopted this substitute, because I think it is a fairer provision than the other, and I think any one of us can go on the campaign hustings, if we have to, and explain this situation to the people back home. It is not a question of whether you are going to let married women work for the Government—and there are over 30,000 of them working now and we have not discharged them, but we ought not to keep these young people from getting married if they want to.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Georgia has expired. All time has expired. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That an act entitled "An act to regulate and improve the civil service of the United States" (act of Jan. 16, 1883, 22 Stat. 403), is hereby amended by adding at the end of the sixth paragraph of section 2 of the act a new paragraph, as follows:

"And no person shall be discriminated against in any case because of his or her marital status in examination, appointment, reappointment, reinstatement, reemployment, promotion, transfer, retransfer, demotion, removal, or retirement. All acts or parts of acts inconsistent herewith are hereby repealed."

With the following committee amendment:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

"That section 213 of the act of June 30, 1932 (47 Stat. 406), is hereby repealed.

"SEC. 2. Section 9 of the Civil Service Act of January 16, 1883 (22 Stat. 403), is amended by the insertion of a colon and the following proviso after the word 'grades', which concludes the present section: 'Provided, That no original appointment to one of said grades may hereafter be approved in any case where the combined salaries of the members of a family after such appointment would equal or exceed $4,000.'"

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I think that in important matters like this it is unfortunate that those in opposition to the bill under consideration are compelled to resort to pro-forma amendments under the 5-minute rule in order to express their opinion.

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NICHOLS. Yes.

Mr. RAMSPECK. I yielded one-third of the time I had to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN], who spoke in opposition to the bill.

Mr. NICHOLS. I asked the gentleman for some time myself, and the gentleman did not have it, and I am not complaining about the gentleman. A great deal has been said here today about discrimination against married women and discrimination against married men. Although I am not going to support this bill, I am not one of those who want to discriminate against either married women or married men.

Neither do I want to discriminate against single men and single women. Neither do I want to discriminate against a man who is willing to work and earn a living for his family, as the head of his family, by keeping some man's wife in the position he might fill when her husband is also on the Government pay roll, and thus give one family two jobs while the other family has none. Men as heads of families all over the country are crying for jobs to provide the bare necessities of life for their loved ones. My country is full of them. There are literally thousands of heads of families in the southwestern section of the United States who would be happy to have a job of any kind to work and make a living for his family. [Applause.] You pass this bill and you say to him, go on and starve, the Government does not care because we will let two or three members of some families work for us while you go without work. This simply throws a cloak of protection around civil-service employees. Then it goes a bit further and throws a cloak of protection around married civil-service employees, whose spouse is on the pay roll. Despite the opinion of my distinguished friend from Georgia to the contrary, I think it is sound public policy that no two spouses, no man and wife, be employed by the Federal Government until all the heads of families who are capable and competent of holding one of their jobs is also employed. [Applause.]

I shall support, as soon as it is offered on the floor, an amendment that is to be offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN], an amendment which will, in my judgment, go into the higher brackets and lower brackets alike—and brackets should not make any difference. A man in the lower bracket has no more right to consume two positions than a man in the higher brackets. So I am going to support the amendment which will provide that as long as a man or his wife is employed under civil service, the other shall not be eligible for appointment to a Federal position. I hope that amendment passes and I think it should pass. Section 213 does not have to stand on the proposition that it is an economy measure. You can forget it as far as economy is concerned. You can be for section 213 and also be for the amendment to be offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN] upon the proposition that you want everybody in the United States to be given an equal opportunity to be employed by the Federal Government and not be barred by permitting the Federal Government to pay exorbitant salaries to one particular family.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, I offer a substitute.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri offers a substitute, which the Clerk will report.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BOILEAU. In view of the fact that the amendment I wish to offer is a perfecting amendment to the committee amendment, should that not be offered before the substitute is offered?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has already recognized the gentleman from Missouri. The Chair will state, however, that the perfecting amendment will be acted upon before the substitute is acted upon.

The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN].

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. COCHRAN as a substitute for the committee amendment: That section 213 of the act of June 30, 1932 (47 Stat. 406), is hereby amended to read as follows:

"In any reduction of personnel in any branch or service of the United States Government or the District of Columbia, married persons (living with husband or wife) employed in the class to be reduced shall be dismissed before any other persons employed in such class are dismissed, if such husband or wife is also in the service of the United States or the District of Columbia. In the appointment of persons to the classified civil service, no person shall be eligible for appointment if such person's husband or wife is employed by the United States Government or the District of Columbia."

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of my amendment is to provide that not only the classified service will be affected by the so-called married women's clause but that all Government agencies and the government of the District of Columbia shall likewise be affected. It simply spreads out the wings and takes in all, not only in Washington but in the field service.

Now, let us see just exactly what we are doing today. I will make the situation perfectly plain. The thought back of this entire proposition is that when there is a reduction in force we should keep the earning power in two families rather than double earning power in one family and no earning power in the other. [Applause.] That is all there is to it. You do not have to go any further. The question of discrimination is dismissed entirely, because it has been repeatedly shown here that either husband or wife can leave the service. What we want to do, and what we should do, when there is a reduction in force is keep the earning power in the family of the man who has a wife and children at home, not furlough him and retain two salaries in the home where the wife and husband are both working for the Government.

Mr. HOOK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COCHRAN. I yield.

Mr. HOOK. Does this apply to Members of Congress who have members of their families working in their offices?

Mr. COCHRAN. It does not unless there is a reduction in force; but, as far as I am concerned, you can put all the amendments on there that you desire along that line and I will willingly support them. If they are germane to the bill you can put them on.

I repeat, I would willingly support such an amendment if offered.

Mr. MASON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COCHRAN. I yield.

Mr. MASON. Would this broadened amendment offered by the gentleman apply to the Chief Executive of the Nation?

Mr. COCHRAN. The amendment speaks for itself. We all know that the President's wife is not working for the United States Government.

Mr. MASON. How about other members of the family?

Mr. COCHRAN. I do not yield further. The question should never have been asked.

Mr. MASON. Perhaps not.

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COCHRAN. I yield.

Mr. RAMSPECK. I ask the gentleman why, under the language of the substitute, it would not apply to the legislative branch?

Mr. COCHRAN. I hope it does.

Mr. RAMSPECK. Well, does it?

Mr. COCHRAN. I hope so.

Mr. RAMSPECK. I think it does not.

Mr. COCHRAN. I hope it will be so construed that it will; and the only reason, I presume, why my friend brings that up is because it may get him a few votes for his own bill if the Members thought it did; but I know as well as the gentleman knows that it should apply to the legislative branch also. Now, I hope the gentleman will let me proceed, although I appreciate his great kindness in giving to me 10 minutes of the time which was under his control. He has been perfectly fair.

I think I have made it perfectly plain the purpose of the original proposal and what is proposed by my amendment. It simply spreads the law to take in W. P. A., P. W. A., and other emergency agencies, as well as the District of Columbia, not only in Washington but all over the United States wherever the Government has an office. [Applause].

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Chairman, I shall take just a moment to state exactly what the proposed substitute offered by the gentleman from Missouri does. It simply reenacts the present section 213 of the Economy Act, taking out the limitation of that section to the civil service and making it applicable to all branches of the Government service. In my opinion it would make it apply to employees in the judicial and legislative branches of the Government just as well as to the employees in the executive departments. I may say, however, that there is nothing new about the substitute. The President sometime ago issued an Executive order extending section 213 to apply to the emergency agencies. So we would not accomplish anything by passing the substitute except to perpetuate a system which does take out of the service the lower paid employees who are married and leaves in the service the higher paid—and we have more higher paid employees in proportion to the total number in the emergency agencies than we have in the civil-service agencies. So it is making a bad matter worse to adopt the substitute.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAMSPECK. I yield.

Mr. COCHRAN. The gentleman says that the President has issued an Executive order extending section 213 to the emergency agencies?

Mr. RAMSPECK. That is my understanding.

Mr. COCHRAN. I have letters received in the last 60 days from some of the emergency agencies saying that it does not apply. I am very glad to hear the gentleman say that it does, because it shows beyond question that the statement that was made to the effect that the President wants section 213 repealed is not correct. [Applause.]

Mr. RAMSPECK. I may say to the gentleman from Missouri that when we had this matter up last year Mr. Steve Early telephoned me and said that the President was for the bill as reported by the committee. I have had no word from him this year. I do not know whether he is for it or against it; but for one I do not ask the White House how I shall vote.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAMSPECK. I yield.

Mr. COCHRAN. I am in the same position as the gentleman; but I hope that whenever he wants any opinion as to how the President stands he as well as every other chairman of a committee will not get it from a secretary but will get it from the President direct.

Mr. RAMSPECK. I presume that if he wanted to be mixed up in this fight he would say so. I am not going to ask him to get into it. But I do say that the Democratic Party organization is on record in favor of repeal; so is the Republican organization on record in favor of repeal. Miss Dewson, in a speech at the Philadelphia convention, stated that the party was pledged to the repeal of this section. The women's organizations are in favor of the repeal of it, and all of the Federal employees' organizations are on record in favor of repeal. I think that we ought to get rid of this discrimination and not perpetuate it and extend it. I think, too, that it should apply to the higher paid groups as well, and not alone to the little fellows.

Mr. FORD of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAMSPECK. I yield.

Mr. FORD of Mississippi. Why not repeal section 213 outright?

Mr. RAMSPECK. I am in favor of that, but we had to bring out the bill that the committee wanted, and I shall fight for the bill reported out by the committee.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAMSPECK. I yield.

Mr. COCHRAN. If the gentleman will ask the chairman of the committee on resolutions at the Philadelphia convention, he will find that the committee on resolutions voted down the plea to put that plank in the platform to repeal section 213. I know that because I opposed it at the Philadelphia convention.

Mrs. O'DAY. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield, I was a member of the committee; that is, I was a delegate on the committee. What the gentleman from Missouri states is quite true. But in taking that action the committee on resolutions went against the wishes of every Democratic woman and most of the Democratic men. I know that personally.

Mr. COCHRAN. I know the action the committee took, because I opposed repeal submitting a statement to the committee.

Mr. RAMSPECK. I hope the Committee will vote down this substitute.

Mr. MILLARD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAMSPECK. I yield.

Mr. MILLARD. The Republicans did put a plank in their platform favoring complete repeal.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

Mr. FADDIS. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Wisconsin yield?

Mr. BOILEAU. If it is not taken out of my time.

Mr. FADDIS. Mr. Chairman, I was on my feet propounding a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognized the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BOILEAU]. If the gentleman yields, the Chair will recognize the gentleman for a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. BOILEAU. If it is not taken out my time.

Mr. FADDIS. Mr. Chairman, is it in order to offer an amendment to the amendment or to offer a substitute amendment before all Members wishing to speak for or against the original amendment have been recognized?

The CHAIRMAN. It is in order to offer any amendment and have it pending if it is not in the third degree.

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. NICHOLS. Since the gentleman from Wisconsin has been recognized and his amendment, of course, will be reported by the Clerk, will debate be limited to his amendment? There are many Members who want to debate the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate will be open on all amendments until the debate is exhausted on those amendments. When they are voted on and disposed of, then further amendments may be offered. The gentleman from Wisconsin is recognized.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BOILEAU to the committee amendment: Page 2, line 5, strike out all of section 2 of the committee amendment.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Chairman, this amendment would strike out all of section 2, leaving the language in the committee amendment which repeals all of section 213. In other words, if the amendment I have offered is agreed to, it will leave the committee amendment merely repealing section 213. This is a clear-cut issue on the repeal of section 213, which discriminates against married women.

I want to ask the membership of the House, before voting upon this amendment, to read the full committee amendment. It is very brief. I want to ask the membership to also read the very brief report of the committee. I am sure if you will do that you will realize the action of the Committee on Civil Service, while it attempted to remove some discrimination against married women, by the very amendment offered to the bill, it has discriminated against other people in this country and I do not believe there is any justification for discrimination against young men and women just because their fathers perchance happen to have a job with the Government of the United States.

If the committee amendment is adopted, it will mean that a young man or woman who lives with his or her parents will be obliged to leave home if she or he wants to accept a job with the Federal Government. Youngsters born and raised in Washington will have to leave home if their father happens to have a job and receives a salary of $4,000 a year. That boy or that girl can get a job in the Federal Government provided they leave their father's household. Unmarried young ladies, 20, 21, or 25 years of age, living here with their parents and accepting a Government job may do so provided they leave their parents' home and live around the corner in some apartment house. Is that not a ridiculous and nonsensical thing? There is not a Member of the House who wishes to bring that about but that is what will happen.

These young people are vigorous, they are educated, they want to work, and no other jobs are available to them in the District of Columbia, their home town. They want to work here. What will they do? They will leave their father's and mother's home. Of course, they would rather live there, but they will get an apartment across the street. You will not deprive them of working for the Government, but you will break up a home. Is not that crazy? We realize we made a mistake in 1932 when we passed the original bill, but why go ahead and make more mistakes now? Why not get down to brass tacks and correct the mistakes we made by outright repeal of section 213? I do not believe in discriminating against married women. Neither do I believe in discriminating against young men and women who live with their fathers and mothers.

Mr. Chairman, the issue, in my judgment, is clear-cut. We should by all means repeal section 213, and I advocate the adoption of my amendment, which repeals section 213 and strikes out the language that no original appointment to one of said grades may hereafter be approved in any case where the combined salaries of the members of a family after such appointment would equal or exceed $4,000. Not man and wife but members of a family. The result of that would be the breaking up of homes. We would be forcing young ladies to leave their mothers' homes where you and I want them to stay. We would force them to go across the street and get an apartment with some other young ladies. Is that sensible? I do not believe it is, and I do not think the Members of the House want to accomplish that.

Mr. FADDIS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, what is the order of priority on the bill? Does the author of the bill precede a member who is not a member of the committee?

The CHAIRMAN. If the Chair understands the rule correctly, the members of the committee which report the bill have preference. After that all members of the Committee of the Whole are on equal standing.

Mr. FADDIS. Mr. Chairman, a great deal has been said here this afternoon about section 213 discriminating against married women. It does not discriminate against married women any more than it does against married men. The conditions which it is designed to rectify, however, are conditions which discriminate against unemployed families throughout the entire United States. I have had married women come into my office and demand that I secure for them a job, and state that they desired the job in order to assist them in filling in their leisure time. When I asked them if they thought it was just for a married woman, whose husband was also gainfully employed, to be working, and at the same time for the father of a family to be out of work and unable to put bread in the mouths of his children or shoes on their feet to send them to school, their reply was that such matters were not any concern of theirs. Such an attitude is pure outright selfishness, whether assumed by man or woman.

I am sure this committee does not intend to discriminate against married women. The statement that section 213 is discrimination against married women is a smoke screen. I am sure our intention here this afternoon is to lay down an economic policy for this Nation to follow that will be just to the great majority of the people of the Nation.

Certainly it is poor national economy at such a time as this to have a duplication of salaries within families, and, on the other hand, have thousands upon thousands of fathers of families out of work, with their wives and children looking to them to furnish the necessities of life, and with them unable to do so because a member of some family is working in a Federal position while other members of that family are also gainfully employed and amply able to support the family. It is ridiculous for us to allow the practice of nepotism and at the same time call upon the overburdened taxpayers to provide money for relief of unemployment.

Mr. HOOK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FADDIS. I am sorry; I cannot yield.

Certainly it is poor national economy to have such an act in effect at this time. I do not believe the members of this committee are willing to go on record in that respect.

Statements have been made on the floor this afternoon that all the other provisions of the Economy Act have been repealed. This is not so. There are many provisions of the Economy Act of March 1933 which have not yet been repealed. Many of them which particularly apply to veterans throughout the United States have not been repealed. Here in Washington, because of favoritism, relationship, and internal departmental politics, duplication of jobs within families it particularly conspicuous. It is only one more means to center the bulk of Federal employment in the District of Columbia at the expense of the unemployed from the taxpaying sections of this Nation.

I want you to remember that in voting for the Cochran amendment you are voting for an amendment which extends into all the agencies connected with the Government—permanent and emergency. It extends to the higher brackets as well as those to the lower brackets. Of course we wish to reach persons in the higher brackets because duplication of salaries in families there is more objectionable than it is in the lower brackets. No doubt it will work some hardship, but it will correct hardship tenfold. The duplication of jobs within families is conducive to low wages, and as long as it continues will be partly responsible for a less-than-living wage to heads of families.

I for one have not the conscience to go back and face my constituents and say to the unemployed fathers of families that I voted to allow two salaries to go under the same roof when there are thousands of families existing upon a mere pittance. [Applause.]

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro-forma amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I have the highest regard for the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN], but I believe the amendment he has offered would make confusion worse confounded. The gentleman was asked by one of the speakers whether or not his amendment would apply to all branches of the service, to the executive branch and the legislative branch, and I believe the gentleman was sincere when he answered that he did not know. But that is quite serious. Pause a moment. The gentleman admits he does not know the effect of what he proposes. That lack of knowledge does not bode much good.

We ought to know what we are legislating about. The chairman of the Committee on the Civil Service said that the amendment—and he read it carefully—would apply to all the branches. I think it will apply to all the branches. Let us see who will be affected by it. The President himself will be affected by it, the Vice President will be affected by it, South Trimble will be affected by it, and Dan Roper will be affected by it, as will scores of Members of both Houses. If the gentleman from Missouri wants that, let him candidly admit the bill applies to all the names I have mentioned. He could not get that bill passed in a thousand years, and he knows it.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CELLER. That is why I say the gentleman is making confusion worse confounded. He is simply hurling dust in your eyes.

I now yield to the gentleman from Missouri, for whom I have a real, affectionate regard, despite my disagreement with him.

Mr. COCHRAN. The gentleman knows this applies only when there is a reduction in force?

Mr. CELLER. This bill would apply——

Mr. COCHRAN. Just a second; I asked the gentleman a question. The gentleman stated he would yield.

Mr. CELLER. I read the amendment carefully. It applies only to a reduction in force, but——

Mr. COCHRAN. When they reduce the number of secretaries, then it will apply.

Mr. CELLER. Section 213 applies in so many words when there is a reduction, but it has not been applied that way. Where there was no reduction in force or no desire to have a reduction in force, there were no displacements. That is the way they have enforced that act. All the heads of bureaus and departments have not followed the words of the distinguished gentleman from Missouri. It is not a matter of reduction at all, because there has been no reduction in the number of employees of the Government, as was originally intended. It is simply an exchange. Therefore, I say when it comes to enforcement it is going to apply to all the names I mentioned.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CELLER. I am not going to yield any further, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. COCHRAN. Will the gentleman be fair and yield?

Mr. CELLER. I may say to those on this side of the aisle that I am going to read a letter from the Women's Division of the Democratic National Committee, National Press Building, Washington, D. C., dated March 3, 1936, addressed to Mrs. Edwina Austin Avery, chairman, Government Workers Council. The letter reads as follows:

> MY DEAR MRS. AVERY: Your wire asking for support from Democratic women to have section 213 of the Economy Act repealed—> was presented to a conference of Democratic women representing a great many sections of the country, which had previously been called for March 2.
> The Celler bill—
> These women were all unanimous in their opinion that the act should be repealed. The President has been so advised and I am sure that the women will follow through by giving the matter their individual support.
> CAROLYN WOLFE,
> Director of the Democratic National Committee, Women's Division.

Thus our Democratic women want my bill. Remember, also, the Republican platform offered the country the same.

Mr. BOILEAU. Will the gentleman support my amendment? Will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. CELLER. You are going to flout the will of hundreds of organizations throughout the length and breadth of the land, if you accept the Cochran amendment. Among them are the American Federation of Government Employees, the National Women's Trade Union League, the National League of Women Voters, the National Federation of Business and Professional Women's Clubs, the National Educational Association, the National Association of Women Lawyers, the American Federation of Teachers, the Women's Homeopathic Medical Fraternity, the Women's Bar Association, the American Association of University Women, the Medical Women's National Association, the National Women's Party, the Government Workers Council, the Washington Chapter of American Association of Social Workers, the New Jersey Federation of Women's Clubs, the New York Federation of Women's Clubs, the American Association of Social Workers, the Democratic National Committee, Women's Division the American Anthropological Association, the American Historical Association, the American Economics Association, the American Political Science Association, the American Psychological Association, the American Socialogical Society, the American Statistical Association, and a score of others which have gone on record in favor of this bill.

Mr. MOSER of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I have listened with intense interest to the debate, and as a member of the House Committee on Civil Service, I would like to transgress on your patience sufficiently to state to you that when I entered the classified service of the United States, it was with a full knowledge of the restrictions of the civil-service law, which did not permit more than one member of a family to have employment under the civil service of the United States. This was the status I occupied when I entered the service and that status continued while I was in the civil service of the Government.

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOSER of Pennsylvania. Not at the moment.

I also wish to call your attention to the fact that I served faithfully and continuously in the classified service for a period of 22 years. In that period of time, Mr. Chairman, I call attention to the fact that I have seen just exactly what you have observed, and what the hearts and consciences of my colleagues here dictate to them as being the truth. Merit has been cast out of the window and civil service, as it is practiced today, is subject to the whim of those who are playing personal and not partisan politics within the system of civil service of this Government; in other words, what is commonly known as bureaucracy. You can go to any one of the bureaus and find out how many jobs you can get or how many there are available.

While I sympathize with what the gentlewoman from New Jersey [Mrs. NORTON] has said with respect to this legislation being enacted at a time when jobs were scarce, heaven witness, are they plentiful now? I want you to bear with me and endeavor to find out how difficult it is to get a job for a $1,260 clerk.

I was approached in my office before I had been here a month by one of the people who is employed here. He had transgressed the provisions of section 213 and had married a woman who worked with him for the Government. He was drawing a salary of $1,440 and came to me making the proposition that I go to the floor of this House and support a bill for the repeal of this measure. I could not vote for that, under the circumstances, without my conscience accusing me of having been influenced by that fellow, whom I never saw before in my life, but who came to me with such a contemptible proposition, with a consideration.

There has been something injected into the discussion this afternoon that I want to direct to your attention. The amendment that the gentleman from Missouri has offered applies to reductions exactly the same as section 213. Do not be fooled into believing that if there is any nepotism among my colleagues that it will affect the employment of your son or your daughter or someone else. The only thing that will ever affect you or me, if we are guilty of nepotism, is when we face the electorate at the polls, and you know that as well as I do.

I may say also that mention was made here of the Democratic platform. I am familiar with the construction of the Democratic platform at Philadelphia, because I was born and reared within 50 miles of that city and I went there every day. I want you to know that I have received correspondence since then stating that there was a pledge made to have the Committee on Resolutions adopt a plank in the platform favoring the repeal of section 213, which was overlooked, and because it was overlooked, although someone had made some kind of pledge, I was solicited to come before the House and stand for the repeal of section 213.

Mr. GRAY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOSER of Pennsylvania. I yield.

Mr. GRAY of Pennsylvania. I would like to ask the gentleman this question. In discussing the Democratic platform and our feelings about the provisions in the Democratic platform, would it help the Democratic Members of this House if they had a good example with respect to following the provisions of Democratic platforms adopted in recent years?

Mr. MOSER of Pennsylvania. I believe a good example can be set, I may say to my colleague and the members of the committee, any time we stand up here and are ready to be counted as Members of this House in any cause of this kind, because the gentleman knows, as we all know, what we must face in our own districts. We represent constituencies and when we go back and tell our people that we are restricted in what we can do for them because of civil service; when we know that merit has been discarded, and families are on the Government pay rolls, to the prejudice of a constituent seeking a stenographer's or clerkship classification, let us determine to be honest with ourselves and those whose confidence prompted them to send us here to represent them.

Mr. Chairman, I hope the Committee supports the amendment of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN]. [Applause.]

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate upon this section and all amendments thereto close in 20 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent that all debate upon this section and all amendments thereto close in 20 minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the right to object. I presume that the chairman of the committee in making that request assumes that we gentlemen who have indicated that we want time will be recognized by the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. That would be the purpose of the Chair in the absence of anything to the contrary. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Chairman, I propose to offer an amendment to section 213 should the Cochran amendment be defeated, and I hope the membership of the House will give me their attention for a moment so that I may clear away a little brush to explain the legislative situation confronting the House at this time. Under section 213 as it exists today, and as it exists in this bill before us, we have this situation: Section 213 and the Cochran pending amendment applies only to future reduction of personnel.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McFARLANE. Yes; I yield for a question.

Mr. COCHRAN. If the Boileau amendment is adopted, it means that everybody who has been dismissed under section 213 can get back in, and husbands and wives, where the husbands and wives are working for the Government, can all get in.

Mr. McFARLANE. I understand that, but we do not want to repeal section 213. We want to put some teeth in it. Unfortunately under the parliamentary situation as it has developed during the consideration of this bill it is impossible to offer proper amendments making this measure apply fairly to all Government employees alike. I propose by my amendment, if you vote down the Cochran amendment, and his amendment applies only to future reduction in personnel, to put teeth into the law. I think the temper of this House, and I think it ought to be, is to put some teeth in this law and to make it apply fairly to all Government employees, civil service as well as noncivil service. Where a husband and a wife, both drawing over $3,600, are on the Federal pay roll, it seems nothing but fair and right that we should discharge one of them in order to spread these Government jobs among more of our unemployed people. I think that would be in keeping with sound economic policy in this country to spread employment, and it must be remembered the President had this same idea when last year he issued such an order to all the department heads. Instead of dealing only with the question of any future employees that are dismissed from the pay roll, and let one of those who are on the pay roll, husband and wife, go first before a single person goes. Let us enact a law today that applies to all departments of the Government alike, both the regular and the emergency departments, and let us provide that where the husband and the wife are both employed and they receive in excess of $3,600 a year, one of them goes off the pay roll and that this will be the policy for future employment in the Federal service. I hold in my hand a list of the personnel of the employees of the District of Columbia. This information was compiled by the subcommittee having in charge the District appropriation bill. It was called to the attention of the House recently that down here in the District as many as 78 persons of the same name and kin, related to each other, are on the District pay roll.

Quite a number of these employees, of the same name, all related, run to as high as 25 and 30 and 40 on the pay roll right here in the city of Washington. That is known to the membership of this House; and a similar situation exists as to Government employees throughout the governmental agencies. It is well known that the Government employees when once on the pay roll begin to work in their kinfolks, and something must be done to stop it. How can you sit here with a straight face and condone that kind of a situation when you know that identical situations exist throughout Government service, and when you know and I know that we have thousands upon thousands of people in our districts who are crying for work and cannot get it because of this racket where the husband and the wife are both employed? And you and I know that under the existing set-up the District and the nearby States have their quotas 500 percent and more filled, while we in Texas and other Middle Western States do not have one-third of our quotas of Government employees. I think we owe it to ourselves and to our constituents to correct this situation—not by waiting for future reduction of personnel, not by wiping off the weak law that we now have, but by writing a law that will strike from the pay roll the husband or the wife, whichever the case may be, placing a limitation on combined earning of $3,600 a year, or some such a limitation upon it, and then to make mandatory the selection of future employees from the States whose quotas have not been filled. I expect to offer such an amendment should you vote down the Cochran amendment. I think this House ought to go on record on all these matters.

Mr. SACKS. And would the gentleman include Members of Congress in his amendment?

Mr. McFARLANE. Yes, sir. I provide no exemptions in my amendment. I came to Congress pledging to oppose the further encroachment of nepotism among Members of Congress, and have offered legislation to prohibit same as other Members have done, however, we have never been able to get the committees to act on these bills.

Mr. SABATH. Does not the gentleman think it would be better if he offered his amendment to the Cochran amendment?

Mr. McFARLANE. It cannot be done under the existing situation.

Mr. SABATH. The gentleman's amendment would strengthen the Cochran amendment.

Mr. McFARLANE. I thank the gentleman, however, since the previous question has been agreed to before my amendment was offered I must now wait until the Cochran amendment is disposed of. I expect to vote for the Cochran amendment and should it be adopted offer my amendment later. Vote down the Boileau amendment and then let us put teeth in this law.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. BEVERLY M. VINCENT. Mr. Chairman, I think this is the most selfish matter that has come before the House since I have been here. I have always had the highest regard for women and their organizations, and I am ashamed of their activity today as they press this selfish matter before this Congress. I never had a sister, but my mother reared 10 boys and she was particular to see that every boy had a fair share of any delicacy that came to the table, and she was particularly careful to see that the neighbors who were in trouble had from her all assistance that she could give. I got from her the opinion that women were unselfish; that they were fair and just. Then I see them come here today and say to us "We have some jobs here in Washington, our husbands have jobs, and because we both have jobs we want to squeeze the rest of the people of the country out. We want to freeze those jobs so we can hold them." So they organize and come before this Congress with that purpose. It is a wholly selfish purpose. It is like the man with the selfish prayer. I do not believe in a selfish prayer but this man prayed: "O Lord, have mercy upon me and my wife, my son John and his wife; us four and no more." [Laughter.]

They come up here today and take up our time on this sultry summer afternoon with a selfish purpose only. They threaten us. I am willing to face them in my district when I become a candidate for reelection next year, because I will shame them for their unfairness if they attack me.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Chairman, a great deal continues to be said about discrimination against women and about discrimination against people, men and women, who are employed and married. Let me point this out: Any person who is employed in the Federal Government, a civil-service employee or not, has a decided advantage in getting a job for anybody that he wants to get a job for over anybody else who is not employed by the Federal Government. So that if you give a man a job and he wants to get his wife a job, then you are discriminating against everybody else outside of the Government who is not employed.

Now, let us see what the Cochran amendment provides. The distinguished gentleman from Georgia [Mr. RAMSPECK], I believe, has not read it. I am sure the gentlemen who say that it applies to the executive branch have not read it. I wish it did. I am sure those who say it applies to the legislative branch have not read it. I wish it did. But it simply does not. Let me read it. I will read section 213 as it exists:

In any reduction of personnel in any branch or service of the United States Government or the District of Columbia married persons living with husband or wife—employed in the class to be reduced shall be dismissed before any other persons employed in such class are dismissed, if such husband or wife is also in the service of the United States or the District of Columbia.

They can be married, and if they are not living together it does not count—

Now, that is the law as it exists. The Cochran amendment changes it from there on. I will read the Cochran amendment:

In the appointment of persons to the classified civil service—

Now, get that—

In the appointment of persons to the classified civil service no person shall be eligible for appointment if said person's husband or wife is employed by the United States Government or the District of Columbia.

What does that mean? It means that the only thing that section 213 attempts to control is the classified civil service. If you apply for a position under the classified civil service and your husband or wife is employed in any other department of the Government, then you cannot be employed. Where? By the classified civil service, and that alone. That is as far as the Cochran amendment goes. Is that fair? Certainly. I submit to you that if a man or woman is employed by the Government of the United States, then his or her spouse, if they are red-blooded American citizens, should be willing to take a chance at getting employment in private industry. If one member of a family is lucky enough to be employed by the Federal Government, then if that is not a selfish family they ought to be satisfied. [Applause.]

I sincerely hope the Cochran amendment is adopted. If I had time, I would answer another proposition made by the gentleman from Georgia. Do you know what this bill would do if you adopted it? Let me tell you. It provides:

Section 9 of the Civil Service Act of January 16, 1883, is amended by the insertion of a colon and the following proviso.

Then it is amended by adding the proviso.

Let us read section 9. Have you read it? I will read it to you. It is very short.

SEC. 9. That whenever there are already two or more members of a family in the public service in the grades covered by this act, no other member of such family shall be eligible to appointment to any of said grades.

Then read the proviso. That is all there is to this bill.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. NICHOLS] may be given the time which was yielded back by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BEVERLY M. VINCENT].

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. NICHOLS. Now, this is the proviso. I read from the bill:

Provided, That no original appointment to one of said grades—

Referring back to section 9—

may hereafter be approved in any case where the combined salaries of the members of a family, after such appointment, would equal or exceed $4,000.

They are going even stronger than they intend beyond the husband-and-wife proposition; they are going clear out into the third or fourth degree, because they say "any member of a family." They limit it, of course, to $4,000.

My proposition is that people in the lower brackets are entitled to no more protection for dual employment in the Government service than people in the higher brackets. I do not think that the members of this committee really understood that if this bill were adopted in many instances people would be barred from employment under the provisions of section 9 if any member of their families were employed by the Federal Government. Is that right?

Mr. RAMSPECK. The gentleman is absolutely mistaken. The committee realized that and intended to do that very thing.

Mr. NICHOLS. The committee amendment corrected this, did it not?

Mr. RAMSPECK. The committee amendment intended to limit appointments in one family to a total salary not exceeding $4,000. It is all printed in the report of the committee.

Mr. NICHOLS. Then forget section 9 and go back to 213. That is all there is left. If you think that anybody is entitled to protection from the Government over anybody else, then adopt the Cochran substitute and put all people on an equal footing. Do not give somebody employed by the Government a chance to put his wife and his wife's brother and his brother's wife's brother on the pay roll simply because he is on the inside track and by the operation of the eternal bureaucracy which is growing up in our Government service to get four or five members of a particular family on the pay roll of the Government to the exclusion of honest, capable people. [Applause.]

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Chairman, all the gentleman from Oklahoma had to say with reference to section 9 is printed in the report of the committee. If you will examine the report of the committee, you will find there the language of section 213 as it now exists, the language of section 9 as it now exists, and the language which the committee proposed to add to section 9.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAMSPECK. I yield.

Mr. BOILEAU. The gentleman heard me express myself this afternoon. Is my interpretation correct, that if a man has a salary of $3,500 or $4,000 a year as a Government employee, his son or daughter would not be permitted to work for the Government?

Mr. RAMSPECK. That is true if the son or daughter is living under his roof.

Mr. BOILEAU. That would be discrimination against those people living together in the family.

Mr. RAMSPECK. If they move out, they can be employed.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAMSPECK. I yield.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. But the son or daughter in the employ of the Government would not be dismissed.

Mr. RAMSPECK. No; it applies only to future employment.

These Members who oppose the committee keep talking about keeping married people at work and keeping single people out of jobs, or keeping married people out of jobs who have no wife or husband in the service. I challenge any of them to present an amendment which would deny the right to a married woman to work for the United States Government. Now, which one of you has got the nerve to do it? [Applause.]

The Cochran substitute does not do a thing in the world except to extend section 213 so that if a husband or wife were employed in an emergency agency the other spouse would be denied employment under civil service but could still apply to and work for an emergency agency, even in the same department.

Mr. HARLAN. Does the gentleman have time to yield?

Mr. RAMSPECK. I yield briefly.

Mr. HARLAN. We could avoid all this confusion by adopting the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BOILEAU] to repeal section 213, could we not?

Mr. RAMSPECK. That would get a clear-cut vote, of course, on repeal or nonrepeal; but we reached a compromise in the committee. We have reported what has been carefully considered by the committee. I say quite frankly that the reason for the limitation on the family basis is that it costs a good deal of money to live in Washington and we felt that $4,000 for a family living in the same house was as low a figure as we ought to fix. This is a compromise reached by the committee. It applies to a whole family if they are living in the same household. If the children are out and in separate establishments, of course, this provision which the committee reported would not apply. You have only this choice: To continue section 213, which does not take married women out of the service, which does not take dual employment out of the service in the higher brackets, which does not take any of them out except in a reduction of force—and there are never any reductions in the higher-paid positions that I ever heard of—did you? I would like for anyone to tell me of anybody who lost a job under section 213 who was getting over $4,000 a year. I have never heard of one. So you have the choice between continuing section 213, which has worked a hardship on those in the lower-paid brackets, or you can substitute for it the committee amendment which will protect those who get only $1,500 or $2,000 a year from the Government and allow them to maintain their families in decency.

I hope the Members will go along with the committee for we worked hard on this thing for 2 years.

I think we have reached the best solution we can of a very troublesome problem. I realize that no man likes to stand up and say he is in favor of letting two people in a family have a job and keep somebody out of a job who has none. But this cannot solve that problem. It only separated 1,800 people from the service, and we have 300,000 more jobs in the Government today than at the time they were separated.

Mrs. JENCKES of Indiana. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAMSPECK. I yield to the gentlewoman from Indiana.

Mrs. JENCKES of Indiana. Have we any assurance if section 213 is kept in, after being in effect 4 years, that married people would be put out and unmarried people put in?

Mr. RAMSPECK. Absolutely not. The Cochran substitute amendment will never reach those in the higher-grade positions, the people who could best afford to lose their jobs. Those in the higher brackets are not affected and never will be affected. This other provision, I think, will be a much better one, and I hope it will be adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. All time has expired. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BOILEAU] to the committee amendment.

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. NICHOLS. If the Boileau amendment is agreed to, under the rules would the question then recur on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN]?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair may say to the gentleman that if the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BOILEAU] is adopted, that would be a perfecting amendment to the committee amendment. Then the substitute amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN] would be voted on as a substitute to the amended committee amendment.

Mr. NICHOLS. In either event the Cochran amendment would still be germane and voted on?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the Boileau amendment be read for the information of the Committee.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the amendment, as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BOILEAU to the committee amendment: Page 2, line 5, strike out all of section 2 of the committee amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BOILEAU] to the committee amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BOILEAU) there were—ayes 33, noes 81.

So the amendment to the committee amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the substitute offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN] to the committee amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. RAMSPECK) there were—ayes 84, noes 92.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and the Chair appointed Mr. RAMSPECK and Mr. COCHRAN to act as tellers.

The Committee again divided; and the tellers reported there were—ayes 110, noes 106.

So the substitute to the committee amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now recurs on the committee amendment as amended by the substitute.

The committee amendment as amended was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule the Committee rises.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. JONES, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 3408) to amend the Civil Service Act approved January 16, 1883 (22 Stat. 403), and for other purposes, pursuant to House Resolution 260, he reported the same back to the House with an amendment agreed to in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule the previous question is ordered on the bill and amendment to final passage.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BOILEAU. May I ask the Chair whether or not it is possible to have a separate vote on the committee amendment? There was a committee amendment that was amended by the Cochran amendment. Can we have a separate vote on the committee amendment so that the issue may be drawn as between the committee amendment as amended and the original bill?

The SPEAKER. The Chair may say in reply to the parliamentary inquiry that there is only one vote possible under the report of the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House, and that vote will be upon the committee amendment as amended by the Cochran substitute.

Mr. BOILEAU. That will leave the issue as between the bill as originally introduced and the bill as amended in the Committee of the Whole?

The SPEAKER. That is a correct conclusion.

The question is on the amendment reported from the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. RAMSPECK) there were—ayes 123, noes 115.

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BOILEAU. I hope the Chair will bear with me. I propounded a parliamentary inquiry as to the status of the bill at the present time, and I understood the Chair to say there would be one vote on the amendment, and I understood that vote would be on the committee amendment as amended by the Cochran amendment. When the Chair put the question, he put the question on the Cochran amendment. If the Cochran amendment is voted down, would there be opportunity for a separate vote on the committee amendment as a substitute for the original bill?

The SPEAKER. The Chair is of the opinion that in the event the Cochran amendment should be voted down it would not be possible, under the parliamentary situation, to have a vote on the committee amendment, as reported to the House by the Committee on the Civil Service.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Speaker, could we not have an opportunity to have a separate vote of the House on that amendment?

The SPEAKER. There is no opportunity to do anything at this time except have a yea-and-nay vote on the pending proposition.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Cochran amendment may be read before the roll is called.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. COCHRAN as a substitute for the committee amendment:

"SECTION 1. That section 213 of the act of June 30, 1932 (47 Stat. 406), is hereby amended to read as follows: 'In any reduction of personnel in any branch or service of the United States Government or the District of Columbia, married persons (living with husband or wife) employed in the class to be reduced shall be dismissed before any other persons employed in such class are dismissed, if such husband or wife is also in the service of the United States or the District of Columbia. In the appointment of persons to the classified civil service, no person shall be eligible for appointment if said person, husband or wife, is employed by the United States Government or the District of Columbia.' "

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BOILEAU. In the event the Cochran amendment is voted down, would the bill then before the House for final passage include the committee amendment, or would the committee amendment be out of the bill?

The SPEAKER. If the Cochran amendment should be voted down, then the matter to be voted on would be the original bill as introduced.

Mr. BOILEAU. Without the committee amendment?

The SPEAKER. As introduced; yes.

The yeas and nays have been ordered. The Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 138, nays 203, not voting 90, as follows:

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Speaker, would a motion be in order at this time that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 3408?

The SPEAKER. The Chair replies in the negative to that parliamentary inquiry.

The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed, read a third time, and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the text of the bill for the information of the House.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That an act entitled "An act to regulate and improve the civil service of the United States" (act of January 16, 1883, 22 Stat. 403), is hereby amended by adding at the end of the sixth paragraph of section 2 of the act a new paragraph, as follows:

"And no person shall be discriminated against in any case because of his or her marital status in examination, appointment, reappointment, reinstatement, reemployment, promotion, transfer, retransfer, demotion, removal, or retirement. All acts or parts of acts inconsistent herewith are hereby repealed."

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion to recommit the bill, with an amendment.

The SPEAKER. Is the gentleman opposed to the bill?

Mr. McFARLANE. In its present form, yes, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Is there any member of the minority side of the committee who is opposed to the bill and desires to present a motion to recommit? Is there any member of the minority who is opposed to the bill and desires to make a motion to recommit? If not, the gentleman from Texas is recognized.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. McFARLANE moves to recommit the bill to the Committee on the Civil Service with instructions to that committee to report the same back forthwith, with the following amendment:

"SEC. 213. Any husband or wife employed in any branch or service of the United States Government or the District of Columbia, and both are receiving compensation of a total of more than $3,600 per annum, shall be forthwith dismissed if the other member is also in the service of the United States or the District of Columbia. Hereafter, whenever there is already the husband or wife of a family employed in any such branch or service, and both are receiving compensation at a total of more than $3,600 per annum, the other member of such family shall not be eligible to appointment in the service of the United States or the District of Columbia. This section shall not apply to the enlisted personnel of the Army, Navy, Coast Guard, or Marine Corps."

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the motion to recommit.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Texas to recommit the bill.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. McFARLANE) there were—ayes 87, noes 173.

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were refused.

So the motion to recommit was rejected.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken; and the Chair being in doubt, Mr. COCHRAN and Mr. NICHOLS demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Speaker, is not the present parliamentary situation a vote on the question of whether or not we will repeal section 213, and that question alone?

The SPEAKER. The Chair cannot answer the question in that form, but the Chair will state what is the parliamentary situation. The question now is on the passage of the bill as originally introduced.

Mr. McFARLANE. Without the committee amendment?

The SPEAKER. Without the committee amendment.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 205, nays 129, not voting 97, as follows:

LEAVE TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Tuesday next, after the disposition of business on the Speaker's desk, and the conclusion of the legislative program for the day, I be permitted to address the House for 1 hour.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent that on Tuesday next, after the conclusion of the legislative program for the day, he be permitted to address the House for 1 hour. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that tomorrow, after the disposition of matters on the Speaker's desk and the completion of the legislative program for the day, I be permitted to address the House for 40 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House tomorrow for 20 minutes, after the conclusion of the address of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Cox].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent that at the conclusion of the remarks of the gentleman from Georgia, tomorrow, he be permitted to address the House for 20 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

THE LATE WILLIAM P. CONNERY

Mr. KOPPLEMANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. KOPPLEMANN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to insert in the RECORD the following resolution proposed by John L. Sullivan, of New Britain, Conn., at the Forty-second Annual Convention of the American Federation of Musicians, held at Louisville, Ky., and adopted by that body on the death of our late colleague, William P. Connery:

Whereas the Honorable William P. Connery has consistently and valiantly championed the cause of labor in his deliberations as a Member of Congress; and

Whereas the members of the American Federation of Musicians are bowed down with grief over the sudden and untimely death of their sincere friend and great benefactor: Be it

Resolved, That the American Federation of Musicians, by its delegates in convention assembled at Louisville, Ky., spread upon its imperishable records this resolution of regret over the death of this great statesman and true friend of labor; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be forwarded to the widow of the deceased patriot with the added assurance of our deep sympathy and grave concern for her irreparable loss.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

Mr. WALLGREN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for one-half minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WALLGREN. Mr. Speaker, I take this time to announce that my colleague, Mr. MAGNUSON, who is vitally interested in the legislation just passed this afternoon, was unavoidably absent, attending a cancer hearing before a committee of the Senate.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. JACOBSEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. O'NEILL of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a letter written by Mr. Barry of New York.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all members be allowed to extend their remarks upon this bill for 5 legislative days.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent in the extension of my remarks on this bill just passed to include a letter referred to in my remarks this afternoon.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. DITTER. Mr. Speaker, I have the privilege of addressing the House this afternoon at the conclusion of the time allotted to the gentleman from Montana [Mr. O'CONNELL]. Would it be possible for me to yield that time to my colleague from Pennsylvania [Mr. DORSEY]?

The SPEAKER. It can be done by unanimous consent. The Chair states that because another order was heretofore made for another gentleman to address the House and the Chair thinks it proper that the matter should be brought to the attention of the House.

Mr. DITTER. Then, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the time heretofore allotted to me today, 15 minutes, may be allotted to my colleague from Pennsylvania [Mr. DORSEY] in my stead.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

LYNCHINGS

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 3 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is that agreeable to the gentleman from Montana [Mr. O'CONNELL]?

Mr. O'CONNELL of Montana. Yes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I have asked this time for the purpose of inserting in the RECORD a letter which I have received from Dr. Work, of Tuskegee Institute, with reference to the number of lynchings that occurred last year.

Members of the House will remember that there was some conflict between the number of lynchings, as given by the Association of Southern Women for the Prevention of Lynching, and Dr. Work. Dr. Work at that time stated that there had been nine lynchings during that year. Since that time one of the supposed victims has been found alive. This is fully explained in Dr. Work's letter, which is as follows:

TUSKEGEE NORMAL AND INDUSTRIAL INSTITUTE,
Tuskegee Institute, Ala., June 23, 1937.

The Honorable HATTON W. SUMNERS,
Chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

HONORABLE SIR: I have your letter of June 17 relative to the lynching record for 1936.

Frank Weems, reported to have been lynched at Earle, Crittenden County, Ark., on June 16, 1936, was discovered alive in Chicago May 18, 1937.

It was alleged that Weems, a Negro sharecropper, had been beaten to death. On June 17, 1936, Miss Willie Sue Blagden, social worker of Memphis, Tenn., and the Rev. Claude C. Williams, a Presbyterian minister, of Little Rock, Ark., came to Earle, in Crittenden County, in an attempt to locate the body of Frank Weems and to hold a funeral over the same. They were seized and flogged severely with a large leather strap. Williams was lashed 14 times and Miss Blagden 5. They were then put on a train for Memphis.

The sheriff of Crittenden County maintained that Weems was not lynched, but he gave no explanation concerning Weems' disappearance. In December 1936 the Farmers Tenant Union and other agencies again demanded that the sheriff produce Weems or explain his disappearance; the sheriff failed to do anything; hence, I decided to record the incident as a lynching.

As soon as information was received that Weems was alive and in Chicago, I revised my lynching report.

This revised report is enclosed.

Very sincerely yours,

MONROE N. WORK,
Editor, Negro Year Book.

A copy of the report referred to, as revised, shows that during 1936 there were a total of eight lynchings in the United States, or one for each 16,054,000 population.

Mr. Speaker, while I have this time I want to make a correction of some figures given by me during the debate on the antilynching bill. I can forgive all those who voted against me on that bill, but for nobody, friend or foe, to call my attention to the fact that this thing of percentage does not work the same way in each direction, is one thing that I do not think I can ever forgive. I stated repeatedly that the number of lynchings between 1892, when there were 231 lynchings, with a population of 65,665,810, or 1 for each 284,000 population, and last year, when there were only 8 lynchings, with a population of 128,429,000, or 1 for each 16,054,000, was a reduction between those dates of over 5,000 percent, and nobody corrected me. After it was all over and I got to figuring on it, I found that that was just about 4,900 percent more than it would have been if there had been no lynchings in 1936. That while the percent was over 5,000 greater in 1892 than in 1936, using 1936 as the basis for calculation, coming downhill from 1892 there was shown a reduction of 98 percent.

I was in the situation of the witness who testified out in west Texas in a shooting case. He testified that there were two shots. They asked him how fast the man was shooting, and he said he was shooting at him every jump. On cross-examination he was asked where he, the shootee, was when the shots were fired. "Over there in front of the post office, Judge, when the first shot was fired, and the second one over in front of Wild Pete's saloon. Hold on, Judge," said the witness, "I have got that son of a gun jumping too far." [Laughter and applause.]

I thank you very much.

[Here the gavel fell.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. LEAVY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks and include some extracts from a letter.

The SPEAKER. Is there objetcion?

There was no objection.

LABOR

The SPEAKER. Under the special order of the House the gentleman from Montana [Mr. O'CONNELL] is recognized for 30 minutes.

Mr. O'CONNELL of Montana. Mr. Speaker, for the past few weeks there has been a lot of alarming talk in this House with respect to the steel strike situation and the existence of a civil war in the United States. Yes, my friends, there has been a lot of labor-hating, breast-beating red baiters addressing this House, attacking the administration of the greatest President who ever sat in the White House, attacking members of his Cabinet and attacking the outstanding labor leaders of the United States, and attacking the common people and the laborers of the United States, who are more responsible for the victory of the Democratic Party last November 3 than any other group in this Nation.

There are many labor-hating, red-baiting Tories in this House who raise their voice in protest against the action of the strikers throughout the seven steel States. There are a lot of breast-beating labor haters and reactionaries in this assembly who, on the Democratic side of the House, owe their election to the laboring people and to the farmers of this Nation—owe the election of the President of the United States—yet, now that the election is over, now that they are safely ensconced in a congressional seat, forget their promises, forget their pledges, betray and turn traitor on the laboring people and on the farming people of these United States.

At first I did not take them very seriously and was not going to reply, but in the past few days this attack is evidently a planned one; this attack was planned from the outside by the labor-hating, red-baiting newspapers of this country, and particularly an attack developed by none other than the greatest labor hater in all the world, that greatest provocateur of war in all the world, none other than the notorious Willie Hearst.

I am not alarmed by the Tories on the Republican side, because they are only repaying the money and the campaign boodle given them by the great wealthy entrenched interests of this country, by the greedy, selfish, sinful crowd of the special-privilege seekers who would rule this country or ruin it. But I am indeed surprised when Members rise on the Democratic side and join with them in their attack upon the President of the United States, join with them in their attack upon various members of the Cabinet, and join with them upon their various attacks upon the labor leaders and laboring people of the United States.

I speak here today in my small way to make some answer to those attacks.

The distinguished gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Cox] the other day said that if the labor leaders of this country, if the C. I. O. attempted to organize workers in the South, he told them they would be met by the flower of southern manhood. I do not know what he means by the flower of southern manhood, but if he means that special privilege seeking crowd in the South, if he means those mill owners who have oppressed labor in the South, if he means those labor haters in the South, if he means those red baiters in the South, if he means those who have always fought every piece of progressive and liberal legislation in this country, I want to say to him and say to the flower of southern manhood that the flower of the manhood of the workingmen of this country, the flower of the manhood of the miners and the muckers, of the steel workers, of the automobile workers, of the maritime workers, of every son of those who toil by the sweat of their brows, I want him to know and want him to tell the flower of southern manhood that labor not only in the North but in the South is ready, that the C. I. O. is going into the South, that labor is on the march—that labor is going into the South, organize, and pay the workers of that section the kind of wages they ought to receive instead of starving them to death gradually with the poor pittances they now receive.

Oh, yes; the distinguished gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN] said that he was all ready, all ready to lead this great army of vigilantes of his in to fight those who would attack his home. Oh, I think he is a little bit disturbed. I know what every man who fights labor is afraid of. I know that he is fighting back, if he possibly can, the attacks that will be made upon him in his next political attempt.

Oh, he read a letter here the other day from the wife of somebody who was supposed to be a worker. Now, from my experience, I know what is the matter. That woman happens to be the wife of a scab. And every worker in the world, every laboring man in the world, hates a scab and despises a scab, and that woman has a guilty conscience, that woman knows that her husband has betrayed the workers, that woman knows that her husband has been a traitor to his own cause, and she knows the fate of all traitors, she knows the fate of all those who would scab and betray their own, and so she has secured an automatic to protect her in her guilt—to soothe, if you please, her guilty conscience.

Much has been said here that labor and its leaders have been irresponsible, that labor and its leaders have caused violence and terror and bloodshed in the strike area. I came here to tell you today who is irresponsible. I came here today to tell you who is responsible for the violence and for the bloodshed, and for the premeditated murder and atrocity in the striking States. I came here to tell you who is responsible for it all. I came here to tell you who caused that violence—and I am going to tell you the leader of it all, the man in back of it all—none other than Tom Girdler.

Violence, my friends. Who has been shot in the back? Who has been clubbed to death? Who, my friends, has been seriously injured? None other than 13 strikers and sympathizers who were shot in the back, who were clubbed to death, none other than scores of strikers and sympathizers who have been seriously injured—yet not a single serious injury to the scabs, the police, the company gunmen, or their strikebreakers in the strike area. Who, pray, is responsible for this violence? No; not the unarmed strikers who are its victims but the highly armed hirelings and stool pigeons, the tools and scabs and company gunmen who do the shooting and clubbing in these strikes. Who leads them, my friends? None other than Tom Girdler. And who is this fellow Girdler? I would like to tell you where he came from and who he is and what his record is and why he is performing as he does today.

Who is this great symbol of Americanism which these Tories hold up today, this great symbol of what is right and just and great in American industry?

Who is this great hero of capitalism who already has managed to kill some 10 strikers and cripple hundreds more, this man who is now wading through rivers of blood in order to become another Carnegie, which is reputed to be his glorious goal? Why, he started out as a salesman of heating apparatus, if you please; then he became an assistant superintendent with the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co., one of the most bitter corporate foes of labor this country has ever seen, whose labor policy bore fruit in the historic Ludlow massacre in 1914.

Then "Bugle-Nosed" Tom went to Jones & Laughlin, which built Aliquippa, Pa., known as the most perfect company town in America. What was his job when an assistant in both of these companies? It was to drive men. He became notorious as a slave driver, because it was his only skill. He ran one of the tightest company hell towns on the continent. It was known as the Siberia of America.

Tom Girdler is a parasite, a parasite who would ruin all human industry. He is a gangster who would turn industry into a racket, but he is on his way out. He can no longer poison the very sources of our life. He is on his way despite all his bluster, despite all his sarcasm, despite all his irony, despite his plentiful murders and his protective barricade of scabs and strikebreakers and gunmen, because the world is turning against him. His system is cracking because before capital found it comparatively easy to climb on the broken bloody bodies of workers, but "Bugle-Nosed" Tom will find it a much more slippery, a much more dangerous road.

Tom Girdler is not content to fight the C. I. O. alone. Tom Girdler is not only fighting John L. Lewis, the labor leader. He leads his bloody gang against Myron C. Taylor, a business leader, and head of the United States Steel, who signed with the unions. When Tom Girdler insists on freedom from union conditions he strikes at every other company in the industry which have granted union conditions, because the C. I. O. has signed contracts with 250 corporations in the steel industry employing a total of 440,000 men, while the four independents which refuse to deal with the unions employ only 159,000 men. Tom Girdler is only an outlaw. Tom Girdler is a gangster in his own industry, when he represents only 26 percent of that industry and fights not only the workers therein but is trying and seeking a competitive advantage over the remaining 74 percent of the employers of steel who are trying to be decent.

Tom Girdler is the enemy of his own system. It is he who teaches employees and workers that employers and capital cannot be trusted. It is he who teaches workers that the profit system exists only for its owners, and that its owners set themselves above the law. It is Tom Girdler who educates labor to a belief in the hopelessness of cooperating with capital. It is Tom Girdler who breeds and who trains radicals, who makes Communists. It is Tom Girdler who draws the battle line between strikers and makes labor desperate and reckless, and creates civil war in these United States.

Yes, Mr. Speaker, Tom Girdler is on his way out. Tom Girdler may seemingly be riding to victory today, but he will receive the condemnation not only of the working people of this country but of his own class and all those capitalists in his own industry.

Labor will carry on. This strike will not be ended until labor is granted its conditions. This strike will not be ended until Tom Girdler bows and accepts the working conditions for American citizens and working conditions that American citizens ought to have in these United States.

American labor and the steel strikers have stood up magnificently before the onslaught of Tom Girdler's gunmen and the thugs of his company. They have fought brilliantly in these front-line trenches of American democracy and unionism; and, by the Eternal, they deserve to win and they shall win.

Then next, my friends, comes one of the greatest of all labor haters in this world. None other than our old friend Henry Ford. Henry day in and day out is mobilizing his army of gunmen, thugs, and strikebreakers; but Henry has found himself caught in the toils of the law, and 15 of his men look like they are going over the road for a nice term of about 5 years in the penitentiary and a $5,000 fine for the brutal attack made on those men who tried to pass out union literature in front of his plant. Oh, I read some place about how Henry Ford bats. I remember away back, a long time ago, when the American doughboys were leaving for France. When America had just entered the war, and when Henry Ford said, "We'll have the doughboys out of the trenches before Christmas", and then it was nearly, my friends, a Christmas 1 year following before the doughboys came out of those trenches, and Henry had nothing to do with it at all. And then the next thing we heard from Henry Ford was when he said if prohibition was repealed in the United States he would not manufacture another automobile—and prohibition is repealed, and poor old Henry goes right on manufacturing "Lizzies"—and then the last thing we heard from Henry was about last October, when Henry said that the election of Landon was assured; and so 27,000,000 people went to the polls and cast their votes for Roosevelt, and 46 States in the Union against 2 cast their votes against Landon and Henry Ford and all of that ilk.

And then, my friends, the other day, Henry made another one of his prophecies, and that was when he said he will not recognize the union—but in the prophecies that I have recalled to you Henry has missed three out of three, and I predict that Henry stands to lose four out of four—that Henry will recognize the union; that Henry will recognize the C. I. O. and the workers in his factory will receive the labor conditions to which they are entitled, and not those slave-driving conditions, not that speed-up work that Henry Ford has been trying to pass out in an endeavor to destroy union organization in the past few days. I know those union workers, those automobile workers, are not deceived by Henry's shotgun liberality in the last few weeks. They know that once Henry destroys their organization that they will get just what they always got from Henry—and poor old Henry is going to be fooled—poor old Henry is going to recognize the union—Henry is going to bat exactly four out of four.

I noticed the other day in the debate, which became rather warm here, that the gentleman from Michigan began to discuss the Chicago Memorial Day massacre, but I noticed he changed very quickly. I noticed his comments about it were not as severe as they were in other things and that he jumped from the subject rather quickly. I know that many of the Members of this House saw the Paramount film shown before the Senate Civil Liberties Committee just the other day. I do not have to tell them that that was the worst premeditated atrocity in all the world. I do not have to tell them that that was the most premeditated, most malicious, cold-blooded murder in all the world. I do not have to tell them how helpless men, women, and children were clubbed and beaten to death. I do not have to tell you how helpless strikers, retreating, were shot in the back. I do not have to tell you how helpless strikers and helpless women and children lying on the ground were beaten with the sticks and billies of these police thugs.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. O'CONNELL of Montana. Yes; I yield.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Was it any more bloody than that in June of 1922 when those 25 men, after surrendering and having no arms in their hands, were shot and hanged, and six of them dragged behind an automobile, immediately upon receipt of a telegram from Lewis?

Mr. O'CONNELL of Montana. I do not know what the gentleman is discussing. I was only 13 years old then, and in the eighth grade.

Mr. HOFFMAN. I am discussing the Herrin massacre.

Mr. O'CONNELL of Montana. I think the gentleman knows who is responsible for that. That was those men who owned those companies; those men who would not recognize labor; those men who had been unfair to labor; those men who would never do anything for labor; who have always fought them. They brought that upon themselves.

Mr. HOFFMAN. But the men who belonged to the steamshovel union were working these mines, and those are the men who were killed.

Mr. O'CONNELL of Montana. The gentleman talks about steamshovelers in that incident, but he will find out that they were probably members of a company union or a scab union that was fighting labor for the companies.

I saw some of them present at the showing of those films, and I could see by the way they sweat, I could see by the way they move about, I could see by the way they even trembled, that day in and day out, night after night, they cannot rest, they cannot be secure, because the blood of these 10 people is on their hands—the bloody murder of 10 men is continually preying on their minds and the Almighty God above is asking them how in the name of heaven will they ever pay for the dastardly crime that they have committed. I say that it is high time that the State of Illinois and the city of Chicago prosecuted these murderers; that they send them to the gallows and to the electric chair, or whatever their form of capital punishment may be, and see that these 10 workers' lives are paid for by seeing the extreme penalty being inflicted on these brutes.

These policemen are murderers. These policemen are guilty before God and before the law, and they ought to be prosecuted; they ought to be convicted and sent to their death, as they sent these helpless men, women, and children and injured hundreds more.

Oh, there has been much talk in here about the Chicago massacre and all; the Tories who rail in here, the reactionaries who howl, do not say much about it. They do not want to justify it all because they know they have been exposed in the films, they know they have been exposed by actual eyewitnesses, they know that the police are guilty, they know that the murder of 10 men lies on the hands of Tom Girdler and the Republic Steel Co., and by the eternal they should pay for it before God and before this country.

The other day in the debate much was said about the right of work that ought to be preserved; that these strikebreakers and those who wanted to return to work ought to be given the right to work; that it was their right, and the Government of the United States and the Governors of the various States ought to protect them in that right, and the distinguished gentleman from Michigan argued for it as he argues for all his capitalistic ideas. What Mr. HOFFMAN was talking about that day was not the right to work; rather, it was the right to scab.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Will the gentleman yield there for a moment?

Mr. O'CONNELL of Montana. Yes.

Mr. HOFFMAN. I did not argue for any such thing.

Mr. O'CONNELL of Montana. The gentleman did argue. You not only argued for it but you have introduced a resolution in this House asking for its enactment; asking for the very same thing.

Mr. HOFFMAN. The resolution speaks for itself, and the Members of the House can read as well as the gentleman.

Mr. O'CONNELL of Montana. Yes; and it says that the right to work ought to be preserved; but what the gentleman from Michigan was talking about, I think, was not the right to work, but rather it was the right to scab.

My friends, I wonder if you know what a scab is. I wonder if you know what he is in the labor movement. I wonder if you know who these men are who are so ready and willing to go back to work. I wonder if you know who's right to work the Graces and the Girdlers and all the other murderers in this country—labor murderers, and haters in this country—are asking to protect. I wonder if you really know what a scab is and how dastardly and how low and what a scum he is in the American system today. A scab, my friends, I learned at my mother's knee, a scab I learned from my striking father wounded by a scab's bullet and by company gunmen, was the lowest scum on the face of the earth—a scab is the Judas Iscariot of the labor movement—a scab is a Benedict Arnold of the working people of this country. A scab, my friends, is a traitor to his own fellow workers, a scab is a betrayer of those who trusted him, a scab is one who would steal the money and the jobs of the man who works side by side with him. A scab, my friends, is the most despicable person that ever lived on this earth. A scab, my friends, is not respected by labor. A scab, my friends is not respected either by capital; they know, and capital knows, and the industrial overlord knows that if their own workers cannot trust them they cannot trust them.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. O'CONNELL of Montana. I refuse to yield further.

I have seen those who have scabbed in the city of Butte, I have seen those who have scabbed for the Anaconda Copper Mining Co., eventually thrown out, eventually to become bums, hated and despised by everybody. Companies do not want them. They know how trustless they are. They know how soon they will double-cross them. They know how soon they will be a traitor to everything they want. If they can buy them at their price, somebody else can buy them at a better price. Oh, I say I would not want to be in the shoes of the distinguished gentleman from Michigan. I would not want to raise my voice in behalf of the scabs of this country—in behalf of the lowest scum in this world, but I will take the gentleman seriously. He has introduced a resolution, as I understand, in this body demanding that the right of a man to work shall be preserved. Imagine, my friends, when you listen to that resolution you would think that the right to work that he demands should be preserved already existed, when everybody knows the contrary is true; when everybody knows that more than 7,000,000 men are asking for the right to work today. Why, I look back to newspaper files of '29 and '30 and '31 and '32 and '33 and see how the Eugene Graces and the Tom Girdlers were crying against the very idea that men have the right to work, as I remember those men who talked about the right to work back in '29 and '30 and '31 were radicals and Communists and labor leaders and labor agitators. Now we have a new bunch here that are demanding the right to work. Oh, yes, in '29 and '30 and '31 they got support from the great engineer in the White House, too. Although Hoover may never have directly stated that the right to work did not exist under capitalism, he said in effect the same thing when he told the millions of unemployed clamoring for work and wages that they might as well, and they better, get along on a diet of rugged individualism. Where, oh, where, was Tom Girdler then? Girdler who on Monday says to the Federal Steel Mediation Board that the company stands on its rights to operate its plant to offer employment to thousands of willing workers who want to return to their jobs. Why did not Republic Steel stand on its right to operate from 1930 to 1933 and give employment then to thousands of willing workers whom Republic Steel kicked out the gate until business picked up and until there was a margin of profit in their production? Labor then was denied the right to work because there was no profit in operation.

Yes, my friends, it would be amusing to follow the gentleman from Michigan, were it not that people are starving to death. It would be amusing to see these reactionary Democrats and these Liberty League Republicans, who howl about the right to work, next day savagely attacking Roosevelt because he is taking away the right to work from 600,000 present W. P. A. workers, while they want the right to work to all unemployed.

If you are a scab, the right to work is sacred. If you are on W. P. A.—pardon the expression—to hell with you. Oh, yes; there are a lot of brave soldiers in here baring their bosoms and offering to bare their bosoms—their bosom, if you please—and I say that when democracy returns to this country; I say that when labor completes its march that it is marching on today; I say that some day, when democracy penetrates the Democratic South, when democracy penetrates industry, a lot of these bare-bosom champions of the scabs and the strikebreakers, the gunmen, the vigilantes, the scab herders, and slave drivers of this day will not be here in Congress any longer; their voices will not be reverberating against these four walls; they will be back with those Girdlers and Graces and all those despicable men who have betrayed them and will betray them, as they shall see.

The Tories and the reactionaries here have railed and howled against John L. Lewis and have attacked him on every possible pretense. Who is John L. Lewis, and who was he before all this agitation?

John L. Lewis was the president of the United Mine Workers of America, one of the most responsible labor organizations in the entire country; a labor organization respected all over the United States; a labor organization looked up to by industry and by labor in every community in this Nation. John L. Lewis is to the American labor movement what George Washington was to the American Revolution. John L. Lewis is to the American labor movement what Eugene Debs was; what Samuel Gompers was; what William Green used to be. John L. Lewis is the leader of the labor movement in this country; he saw thousands and thousands of steel workers, thousands and thousands of automobile workers, thousands and thousands of laborers all over the United States unorganized, their right of collective bargaining denied to them, intolerable conditions, sweatshops, occupational diseases, death, and terror, and many of them; and John L. Lewis determined that they should be organized, that their rights should be guaranteed to them, that they ought to be able to collectively bargain—not with company unions, not with company stool pigeons, but with representatives of their own choosing. John L. Lewis is leading the labor movement; John L. Lewis is on the march; John L. Lewis is going to bring the labor movement into its own—is going to give it a voice in the government of the United States and a voice in the government in every State and every city and every political subdivision in this Nation, as labor is entitled to because of its number, because of its power, because of its labor, because of everything that it has produced—the wealth of this country today.

Much has been said, my friends, about the huge contributions that John L. Lewis made to the campaign of President Roosevelt. To begin with, my friends, that contribution was not made by John L. Lewis in person. That contribution was made by the United Mine Workers of America. That contribution was made by the men who toiled by the sweat of their brow for him who had been their champion in the White House, for him who had been a true friend of labor. for him who had done something to guarantee them a minimum wage, who had done something to permit them to organize, who had done something to guarantee to them the right to collectively bargain with representatives of their own choosing, for him who had pledged himself that he would fight, that he had just begun to fight for all these privileges that he had begun to fight to discontinue child labor in sweatshops in this country, that he has just begun to fight to destroy unfavorable and unsavory labor conditions in the United States, for the greatest champion labor has ever had in the White House, the greatest friend that labor has ever had in the Presidential chair, the President of the United States, Franklin D. Roosevelt.

Why challenge that contribution when you come in here with dirty hands? Why challenge that contribution when you live in a glass house and should not throw stones?

Why should not labor contribute in order to elect those who will do something for labor, when the Fords, the Du Ponts, the Mellons, the Morgans, the Girders, the Graces, and all that ilk whom you serve here so well, and for whom you so eloquently plead, contribute hundreds of thousands of dollars more than the working people of this country contribute? Why should you come in and criticize the President of the United States or John L. Lewis? You ought to be ashamed of yourselves to come in here, and you Democrats on this side who join them ought to be more ashamed than they are.

They are only serving their masters; they are only being grateful for the money that entrenched wealth and organized greed gave to them. I would like to have you Democrats go back to the beginning.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNELL of Montana. I yield.

Mr. COX. Does the gentleman mean to say that a Democrat on this side of the House ought not to express his feeling of shame at the establishment of this illicit relationship between the Democratic Party and this group of lawless people?

Mr. O'CONNELL of Montana. I deny that this is an illicit relationship, and I deny that it is a lawless group of people; and I deny all the red statements the gentleman has been making, and resent the red herring of communism that he has been drawing across the trail.

Mr. COX. I would like to say to the gentleman——

Mr. O'CONNELL of Montana. I am not going to yield to the gentleman to make a speech at this time. I would like for you Democrats to go back to the history of the beginning of this Government of ours. You will find that it was the same old story and the selfsame issue. You will find on one side organized wealth and organized greed fighting the people of the United States, fighting the laboring men of the United States, fighting the farmers of the United States. More than 150 years ago democracy's own Thomas Jefferson reached up into the stars and caught the music of the new day and wrote into the Declaration of Independence the solemn principle that all men are created equal. But that Jeffersonian doctrine had a bitter struggle in the days of its infancy, because Alexander Hamilton, whom the Republican Party now follow, and several Tory Democrats follow, challenged the right of the plain people to have a government based upon the consent of the governed.

Men of wealth, men of power, men of financial influence basked in the Hamiltonian sunshine, and even Nicholas Biddle, the great Philadelphia banker, the J. Pierpont Morgan of that day, time and time again came down to the city of Washington only as a conquering hero comes, beckoned men to his room in the Mayflower Hotel, men who were supposed to be the representatives of the people of the United States. And that went on, my friends, until our own plain old Hickory Andrew Jackson both on the battlefield and in the White House made the vision of Thomas Jefferson a living reality; and, by the Eternal, he established a government of the common man and woman, a government dedicated to the plain people of the United States.

And then come down through the pages of history to 1932, when 14,000,000 unemployed men were walking the streets of the Nation, when bread lines and soup kitchens were dotting all of our great cities, when more than a million farmers had been driven from their paternal acres by economic necessity within a year. It was the same issue, just the same issue then: Entrenched wealth, organized greed on one side and the farmers and the laborers on the other side; but, thank God, Providence gave us then, not a Harding, not a Coolidge, not the last miserable failure who filled the Presidential chair, but a great Democrat, a true friend of labor, a real representative of the people, the ideal embodiment of democracy, the champion of the forgotten man—the President of the United States, Franklin D. Roosevelt. [Applause.]

And it is the selfsame issue now, the selfsame issue in these strikes; but I tell you that labor is on the march, that American democracy and American unionism are going to be preserved, are going to be fostered, and are going to continue. To fight for labor is not communistic, to fight for labor is not against the principles of American government; to fight on behalf of the steel strikers and men who are seeking to better their condition is not communistic, is not against the tenets of democracy, or anything else; but they are going on, my friends, and they are going to organize, they are going to march into the South and are going to organize labor all over this country and give it the dues to which it is undoubtedly entitled.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. HAINES). Under the previous order of the House the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DORSEY] is recognized for 15 minutes.

Mr. DORSEY. Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DITTER] for his courtesy and graciousness in allowing me the time which was previously allotted to him.

While Congress is struggling with problems of relief, unemployment, farm tenancy, and numerous other matters affecting the Nation, very little attention has been given to the question which has a far-reaching and vital effect upon every effort to adjust our economic structure. I refer to the power granted to Congress under the Constitution "to coin money and regulate the value thereof."

In the light of recent events, involving the increase of reserve requirements by the Federal Reserve Board and the sterilization policy of the Treasury Department, we can see how definitely the expressed power over money and credit has been taken out of the hands of Congress and delegated to the executive branch of the Government and to the privately owned Federal Reserve System. I would not take the time of the House to present to you one phase of this situation if I did not think it important enough to require your serious thought and consideration, because the power over money and credit is still a responsibility and duty placed upon Congress.

I refer particularly to the sterilization policy of the Treasury Department—a policy which slowly but surely is emasculating the American economy, a policy which is making Uncle Sam an economic eunuch exhibiting in his business and financial life all the feebleness and lack of virility which is found in a physical body so treated.

The lack of long-range vision so evident among the leaders who are shaping what they choose to call our "national economic policy", is undermining the stability of the Nation and pointing the way toward another era of disastrous national and world deflation.

Let me remind you that balancing the Nation is more important than balancing the Budget, but neither can be brought about through a definite deflationary policy. This country is not advanced far enough toward complete recovery to assume such an attitude in our economic and financial practices. Reduction and even elimination of Federal relief expenditures is a goal for which we all strive, but it cannot be reached at the expense of the unemployed by taking it out of the hides of those least able to bear it. These desirable ends cannot be reached through a deflationary complex, through buying gold and burying it in the hills of Kentucky, or through the issuance of bonds to buy more gold, increasing the burden on the taxpayer. Spending and a resultant expansion of the credit structure has pulled us out of the worst phase of the depression. With millions still unemployed, now is not the time to put the brakes on business under a fear complex of deflation.

Certainly the Budget can be balanced through a reactionary formula of (1) deflation, (2) reduction in relief expenditures, and (3) increased taxation, brought about by such policies as sterilization of gold and buying gold to be paid for with interest-bearing bonds. But such a policy eventually will result in a decreased consumption, less production, unemployment, starvation, and driving a dart into the heart of democracy.

Common sense alone calls for an immediate reversal of our stupid and ludicrous gold-purchase plan. We need no council of experts nor board of economists to demonstrate the futility and the dangers inherent in a plan which calls upon the United States Treasury to subsidize world production of gold and which buries this metal in the ground from which it has so recently been dug.

In all fairness to the men who have produced this fantastic result by purchasing gold, it must be stated that they did not plan it that way. It was not planned. It evolved out of emergency activities by the Government designed to relieve the terrific deflationary pressure upon our economy and to give to business, industry, and agriculture a breathing spell.

But the remedy, like so many drugs in the pharmacopoeia, threatens the very life of the patient and unless its administration is stopped immediately the ultimate condition of the Nation may be worse than it was 6 years ago.

To understand the silly plight in which the Treasury Department's program has placed us, it is necessary to review again the painful years which followed the collapse of the Hoover boom.

GOLD FETISH STRANGLED BUSINESS AND INDUSTRY UNDER HOOVER

As the economic shadows gathered about the Nation, as the earthquakes of increasing deflation shook our banking structure to its very foundations, our people began to hoard. Some stuffed their gold in safe-deposit boxes, others sent it abroad for safekeeping.

By the time President Roosevelt came into office it is estimated that between one and two billions of gold and gold notes had been taken out of circulation by those who feared national bankruptcy. During 1932 and the first 3 months of 1933 the loss of gold in international exchange amounted to nearly $305,000,000.

With our currency tied to gold, the effect was slow strangulation of business and industry. So strong was the worship of the gold standard, so unswerving was our adoration of this outworn fetish, that the distracted advisers of President Hoover shunned the one course that would have brought relief. They refused to take the Nation off gold and free our currency from its tightening tentacles.

PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT STOPS DEFLATIONARY SPIRAL THROUGH GOLD POLICY

Almost immediately after he came into office President Roosevelt moved to cut the cords which bound the Nation. In his proclamation of the banking holiday he forbade the exportation of gold and ordered all persons having gold to turn it in to the Treasury, an order sustained by Congress in the Emergency Banking Act of 1933. Shortly thereafter Congress, by joint resolution, abrogated the gold clause in all public and private obligations, thus restoring the proper relationship between creditor and debtor and eliminating the unearned increment which otherwise would have been collected by the lender at the expense of the borrower.

At this time the President looked to the London Conference to provide some method to check the downward spiral of world deflation, but when he became convinced that economic nationalism was too rampant to permit international cooperation he turned his attention to the domestic scene.

He hoped, through instructing the Treasury to buy gold at market prices, to raise the domestic price level, but when this hope was not realized it was decided that the solution lay in the devaluation of the dollar, which was apparently in accord with the thoughts of Prof. George Warren on this subject. The President informed the Nation that he was instituting a regular Government gold-purchasing program to enable the dollar to reach its proper level, and the purchasing program went into effect on October 24, 1933.

In response to his request Congress adopted the Gold Reserve Act of 1934, vesting title to all gold in the Federal Reserve System and permitting the President to devalue the dollar up to 60 percent.

Meanwhile the Treasury had been steadily boosting its price for gold, and, on January 31, 1934, the President devalued the dollar, establishing its new value at 59.04 cents and setting the price for gold at $35 an ounce.

Here, like the laws of the Medes and the Persians, it has stood since. Theoretically we are on the gold standard because the value of the dollar is expressed in terms of gold. But we are not on the gold standard as it was understood before the war because no person can obtain gold for his paper money.

The immediate effects of this monetary maneuvering were, in the main, beneficial. The outward flow of gold, which was draining our supply, was stopped and reversed. The devaluation of the dollar, which made it easier for our foreign customers to purchase exchange, stimulated our trade. Devaluation, coupled with Secretary Hull's trade agreement, did increase our sales abroad.

The $2,000,000,000 stabilization fund, created from the profits of devaluation, gave us a dominant position in international finance and paved the way for the tripartite agreement. Instead of standing helpless before the brilliant financial machinations of the British, the French, and the Dutch, we were able to reenter the international poker game with virtually unlimited chips.

ROOSEVELT MONETARY POLICIES EASE MONEY MARKET

At home the Roosevelt monetary policies eased the money markets and enabled both Government and private business to obtain access to the Nation's financial reserves at the lowest rates of interest in our country's history. Government was able to finance the enormous relief load, the agricultural rehabilitation program, the extensive schedule of public works, and all the other new and vital duties laid upon it in the depth of depression at a minimum cost to the taxpayers.

Private corporations were enabled to refund, at lower interest rates, $7,000,000,000 worth of obligations with resultant benefit to stockholders. New capital to build modern plants and replace obsolescent factories and machinery was obtained at bargain rates.

Business naturally was stimulated by this program of easy money. But, strangely enough, this very stimulation of business, which, in turn, gave the securities and commodity markets a fillip, frightened certain of the leaders of the administration who began calculating how to avoid "the coming boom" when the Nation was still far from achieving a balanced recovery.

This fear complex gripped them despite the fact that we were far from the ultimate goal, with nine millions still unemployed and relief burdens laying a heavy hand on the States and municipalities of the Nation. Its tentacles tightened them at a time when they should have realized, in the light of our experience, that the key to recovery and prosperity does not center in restricting production through deflation, but of increased consumption brought about by a better and wider distribution of the national income through an expansion of the circulating medium. I shall refer to these frightened ones and their activities shortly, for on their shoulders lies responsibility for continuing our foolish and ill-conceived monetary program today.

GOLD PROGRAM FAILS TO ACCOMPLISH PURPOSE

The gold program did not accomplish the main purpose for which it was adopted. It did not raise the domestic price level to that of 1926. Opponents of the Warren plan had pointed out that England's abandonment of gold and the subsequent devaluation of the pound sterling had not increased domestic prices. There was no reason to expect the United States to react differently. Nor did it do so.

Prices today are still hovering at 90 percent of the 1926 level despite 3 years of gold purchase and all other factors incident to the recovery that we have enjoyed.

Whatever weaknesses and faults may have been found with the Warren gold plan, whatever its ineffectiveness and futility in the long run, the fixing of a domestic gold price involved only a small fraction of the dangers in the attempt to fix a world gold price through the tripartite agreement and the plan to sterilize gold imports.

With American entry into the international gold picture, Uncle Sam soon found himself sinking in a quicksand of economic stupidity.

Gold flowed to our shores in ever-increasing streams, attracted not only by the relative security afforded by our democracy but also by the $35-an-ounce price we were advertising.

All over the world abandoned gold mines were reopened; prospectors again packed their kits and scurried to mountain and stream for the metal; operating mines doubled and tripled their output.

Stockholders in these speculative enterprises whooped with joy as their dividend checks poured in. Uncle Sam apparently had become Santa Claus to the entire world.

Reserves of idle money in the bank vaults of the Federal Reserve banks and other financial institutions of the country increased by leaps and bounds. As the gold for which we had no conceivable use poured in, it went into the Reserve System and formed the basis for future credit.

Some students of banking and finance warned that we were laying a powder keg which, if fired, would explode our recovery in another blast of inflation. The Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System became agitated. They issued statements. What to do? How can we check these mounting reserves?

Unfortunately, the thinking of many economists and financiers is so tortuous and involved that they automatically, it seems, reject the obvious. The average man confronted with the problem would have suggested a halt in the purchase of gold, or, if that seemed unwise, an outright reduction in the price paid or a tax or service charge, so as to make it no longer attractive for foreigners to mine, dehoard, and ship gold to us.

But it was not so clear to the geniuses that direct our financial policy. Instead of eliminating the cause they decided to mitigate the results. The Board of Governors raised the reserve requirements, and thus reduced the amount of idle funds from three to two billions.

CREDIT IMMOBILIZED DESPITE UNEMPLOYMENT, RELIEF, HOUSING PROBLEMS AND BUSINESS DEMANDS

This reduction, accomplished in August 1936, was, of course, ineffective. By the end of the year the mounting reserves were again giving the Reserve Board a bad case of the jitters. And over the protests of the hundreds of small banks which were harassed thereby, over the dictates of common sense, the Board again raised the reserve requirements and put one and a half billion dollars more in cold storage. With the previous increase, the total transferred from potentially active to inactive credit was two and a half billion. Thus was the financial blood-letting begun, with recovery only started and unemployment still a major problem.

What a ridiculous and yet what a tragic picture of inconsistency.

Here is the Nation struggling to emerge from its greatest depression, in needs of billions of new capital for new factories and new offices and new roads and bridges and apartments and hotels and, most important of all, new homes, with millions ill-fed, ill-housed, and ill-clad. And our financial leaders immobilize two and a half billion of potential credit. Not only that, but at the same time they shortened the long-prevailing ratio of cash to bank credit, slowing up the whole rate of future development.

The crowning folly was yet to come. Having failed to check the mounting tide of gold by seeking to lighten its pressure, the Treasury took over this phase of credit control from the Federal Reserve Board and embarked on its sterilization program. Sterile. The very word itself is abhorrent to those who believe in a dynamic society.

To prevent the gold coming into the country becoming part of our national credit base and again increasing excess reserves of banks, the Treasury decided to set it aside in a separate account. The Treasury had been issuing gold notes to the Federal Reserve System to pay for gold previously acquired, but under the new sterilization plan the Government used its tax revenues to pay for it.

What has been the result? The Treasury has been compelled to borrow five hundred millions to finance more gold purchases, paying, of course, interest on the money thus borrowed. And, incidentally, the rate of interest is at a new high as the result of the previous false steps of the money managers.

We have at last attained the ultimate in folly and the sublime in the ridiculous.

Here we are borrowing money to buy gold so that it will not become money and impoverishing our Government and hence the Nation to avoid obtaining wealth. We cannot adequately assist the unemployed, because we have to use all our spare money and borrow more money to buy gold which might become money if we did not borrow to buy it.

Sounds silly, does it not? But that is the sterilization plan reduced to simple terms.

Because we are buying more gold to prevent it becoming part of the national wealth, we are penalizing the Government and private business through compelling them to pay higher interest rates for the money they borrow.

By buying gold we have brought into our country between six and seven billion dollars of foreign money invested through our security markets. These investments, commonly called "hot money", may be withdrawn suddenly at any time with a possible crash in the value of the securities held by our own citizens.

We have increased our national debt to a new high and thrown our Budget into confusion. The deficit is greater than estimated. We are entering a period normally marked by a slump in business and yet the mad policy is still being pursued.

And, strange as it may seem, prices are still below the 1926 level. The unemployed millions still cry for jobs. Relief goes on. We have not achieved the end for which this policy was aimed nor does it seem that we shall ever attain it through this fallacious scheme.

Let me give you a few figures to buttress my position. Let me demonstrate to you how we have become the world's prize sucker and lending angel for gold producers everywhere.

UNCLE SAM WORLD'S SANTA CLAUS

World gold production, excluding that of Soviet Russia, which guards her secrets closely, has fluctuated as follows: The figures are in millions of dollars: 1933, 889; 1934, 958; 1935, 1,040; 1936, 1,165; 1937 (3 months), 273.

Now look at the net imports of gold into America since our gold-purchase plan went into effect. Although the entire world, including the United States, produced in 1934 only $958,000,000 the imports to our country totaled $1,132,000,000. The difference was due to dehoarding. In 1935 the disparity is even greater. The world produced $1,040,000,000; we took $1,759,000,000. In 1936 we took $1,117,000,000, while the world was producing $1,165,000,000. The increase in production is evidently due to our $35-an-ounce rate.

The device of sterilization went into effect late last December. But look at the gold-import figures for 1937. January, $121,000,000; February, $120,000,000; March, $154,000,000; April, $225,000,000; May, $190,000,000.

During the first 2 weeks of June $173,000,000 more came in and, as Secretary Morgenthau has admitted, no one knows when it will end.

On June 25 the stock of gold in the United States totaled $12,289,174,000, more than half of the world's visible supply of twenty-three billions. Out of this $12,000,000,000 pile of metal, now being carefully buried at Fort Knox, we have sterilized over one billion. It may only be a coincidence but the rate of business and industrial activity has slackened simultaneously as the latest reports will verify.

What this gold buying has done to interest rates is best shown by a comparison of Government fiscal operations within the last 6 months.

In December the Treasury sold long-term bonds at an all-time low rate of 2½ percent and 5-year Treasury notes at 1¼. The rate on the notes was one-fourth of 1 percent below the rate of a year before.

But when Mr. Morgenthau had to borrow 800 millions this month, most of which went to pay for gold, he had to offer 1¾ percent on 4¾-year notes. Although the maturity period was only 3 months less, the interest rate was one-half of 1 percent higher.

WHO IS BENEFITING FROM MONETARY MANEUVERS?—CONGRESS SHOULD KNOW FULL STORY

In answer to all this, the American public is entitled to know who is benefiting. Certainly it is not the common welfare. It is not to our benefit to have the national debt increased to bury a lot of gold underground. It is not to our benefit to have the Government pay increased rates to obtain money for useless purposes.

It does not in the long run aid world stability. It is not in the interests of any nation to have a speculative business created within its borders dependent upon the decisions of individuals in other nations. Nor is it helpful to world conditions to create a situation whereby one nation, Russia, the bitter foe of the economic system of the rest of the world, is in a position to smash international markets and disrupt world economy by dumping part or all of the immense supply of gold she is creditably believed to have.

No; we are benefiting no one except the officers, directors, and stockholders of the gold-producing corporations of the world.

The colonies and dominions of Great Britain produce more than half of the annual output, and no one in their right mind believes for a minute that Britain is concerned with the well-being of any nation but her own.

We are paying out our dollars to nations which owe us billions for the last war and which refuse, with the exception of Finland, to pay, and those dollars we are shipping abroad are being turned into guns and tanks and planes and gas for the next war.

And speaking of Finland, I hope you noted in the press that Finland was acute enough to take advantage of the recent slump in Government bonds to buy up sufficient to enable her to pay her installment on her debt at a discount. I do not criticize Finland. I offer this merely as an indication of the absurd financial situation our monetary policy has produced.

This crazy scheme must be liquidated immediately.

It was rumored that when the sterilized gold reached a billion dollars it would all stop. But it is now $1,078,350,779.79, as of June 28, 1937.

Maybe the figure to be reached before stopping is now set at a billion and a quarter dollars—maybe. Who knows?

The truth is the Treasury is like a flea on a griddle, hopping about desperately to evade the terrific fire built beneath it. Perhaps the hopping will lead to abandonment of the griddle eventually. If one and a quarter billions is now the mark set, it will not be long, at the present rate, before it is reached.

But, regardless of the amount, we simply cannot permit this situation to continue. We must exert our constitutional power to coin money and regulate the value thereof. We must take back in our hands this vital authority for the protection of our national economy and the future of the entire people.

Because economists have clothed monetary affairs in a veil of mystery and discuss money in abstruse terms, the man in the street has come to believe that it is of no concern to him.

Nothing could be more mistaken. Underneath the veil, hidden by the mumbo-jumbo, hocus-pocus, and abracadabra are matters of the gravest and most intimate concern to all of us.

The value of our money affects our purchasing power, it affects rents, and prices, and wages, and interest charges, and many other factors in our economic life. The founding fathers realized this and determined that Congress should fix the value of our money and Congress alone.

If we must continue to buy gold, let us levy upon all foreign vendors a tax so high that there will be no incentive to send gold to our shores. Let us levy upon domestic producers of gold another tax, not so high as upon foreign imports, but a substantial tax so that its production in this country will fall back to the normal needs of trade and commerce.

The effects will be immediate and tremendous. Gold will stop flowing to our shores and may start to flow out. Central banks of other nations will be relieved of the drain on their resources and we shall have a better distribution of gold among the nations of the world.

The whole nauseous mess must be thoroughly ventilated. We must let the daylight into the dark corners of the Treasury and show the man on the street just how his taxes are being wasted to carry on a discredited program.

If gold must be bought, if we must assume our responsibility in the family of nations, if we must assist in the stabilization of exchange, let us pursue an intelligent policy of using the gold for the benefit of the Nation and not bury it in the ground from whence it came. Let the Congress assume its responsibility and pass the Dies bill (H. R. 7670) providing for the issuance of gold certificates in the purchase of gold. Let the Committee on Banking hold hearings on this bill so that we can learn the full story of what has transpired since the gold purchase plan started.

Years ago the Great Commoner electrified the Nation with his protest against the crucifixion of the Nation upon the cross of gold.

Let us here now raise our voices in a mighty chorus against bleeding the Nation white to buy yellow metal, against throwing away money to buy other money, against borrowing to avoid wealth, against subsidizing the world speculation in gold.

Let us free the Nation from this new cross of gold to which it has been nailed. Let us stop the double cross to which it is being subjected.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. In accordance with an order heretofore entered, the gentleman from New York [Mr. REED] is recognized for 15 minutes.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Speaker, through the courtesy of the House, I was granted permission to address the House at this time for 15 minutes. I realize it is manifestly unfair at this late hour to hold the Members here, even though they have shown great courtesy in remaining. I will therefore waive my right to speak at this time, but may I ask whether there are any special orders for tomorrow?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. There are two special orders for tomorrow, totaling 1 hour.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 15 minutes tomorrow after the disposition of matters on the Speaker's table and other business in order for tomorrow, as well as the special orders heretofore made.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

J. E. SAMMONS

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1188) for the relief of J. E. Sammons, which was, on page 1, line 7, to strike out all after "States" down to and including "engineers", in lines 11 and 12, and insert "for the value of 35.99 acres of land in Putnam County, Ga., at $450 per acre, which he conveyed by deed to the Government, represented by the Resettlement Administration, and for which he was not paid because of an erroneous survey of the tract by the General Land Office in February 1935, describing it as 230.72 acres, whereas it in fact contained 266.72 acres by subsequent survey of June 14, 1935."

Mr. GEORGE. I move that the Senate concur in the House amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

GEORGE E. SHOCKLEY

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 171) for the relief of George E. Shockley, which were, on page 1, line 5, after "Shockley", to insert a comma and "of Rehoboth, Del."; on the same page, line 7, after "Government", to insert "for losses"; and on the same page, line 9, to strike out "Service" and insert "for repairs and additions to the lifeboat house and launchway at Lewes (Del.) Coast Guard Station."

Mr. TOWNSEND. I move that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

MEMORIALS

Mr. TYDINGS presented a memorial of sundry citizens of Hagerstown, Md., remonstrating against the enactment of the bill (S. 1270) to regulate barbers in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

He also presented a memorial of sundry citizens of Baltimore and vicinity, in the State of Maryland, remonstrating against the enactment of legislation to reorganize the judicial branch of the Government, especially the proposal to enlarge the membership of the Supreme Court, which was ordered to lie on the table.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. MINTON, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 1168) for the relief of Joseph W. Bollenbeck, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 886) thereon.

Mr. BARKLEY, from the Committee on the Library, to which was referred to the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 171) relating to the employment of personnel and expenditures made by the Charles Carroll of Carrollton Bicentenary Commission, reported it without amendment.

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF A COMMITTEE

As in executive session,

Mr. SHEPPARD, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported favorably several nominations of officers for appointment, by transfer, in the Regular Army, which were ordered to be placed on the Executive Calendar.

BILLS AND A JOINT RESOLUTION INTRODUCED

Bills and a joint resolution were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. BULOW:

A bill (S. 2763) for the relief of the Sioux Valley Hospital, Sioux Falls Clinic, and the McKennan Hospital, all of Sioux Falls, S. Dak.; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. TRUMAN:

A bill (S. 2764) granting a pension to Iva Humphrey; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. REYNOLDS:

A bill (S. 2765) to grant recognition to distinguished military service; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. SCHWELLENBACH:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 176) favoring employment by the Works Progress Administration of persons unable to find employment in private industry; to the Committee on Education and Labor.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED

The bill (H. R. 3408) to amend the Civil Service Act approved January 16, 1883 (22 Stat. 403), and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Civil Service.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA TAXES—AMENDMENT

Mr. TYDINGS submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 7472) to provide additional revenue for the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

REORGANIZATION OF FEDERAL JUDICIARY

The Senate resumed consideration of the bill (S. 1392) to reorganize the judicial branch of the Government.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY] to the amendment in the nature of a substitute.

Mr. WHEELER obtained the floor.

Mr. POPE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield in order that I may ask unanimous consent to make a very brief statement?

Mr. WHEELER. I made the statement yesterday that, in view of the ruling made by the Chair and the objection made by the Democratic leader, I should object to the transaction of any business so long as the rule is invoked on Members of the Senate.

Mr. MALONEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for an announcement?

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, I have just refused to yield to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. MALONEY. Very well.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, my attention has been called to a statement appearing in the Washington Herald of yesterday, issued by the distinguished Senator from Indiana [Mr. MINTON], and the headline states that it was dictated by Mr. Michelson, of the Democratic National Committee. In that statement issued by the Senator from Indiana, or probably I should say by the Democratic National Committee, it is said:

White House raps WHEELER on subterfuge.

That is the heading of the article.

Then it says, under the subhead "Caustic Comment":

The statement intimated that WHEELER was responsible for the account of what happened between him and the President getting in the newspapers. It said:

"Incidentally the circumstances of the quotation of the Senator's words at the White House intrigues me. I see by the same papers that published the quoted declaration of solicitude for the President's welfare that Senator WHEELER, Senator BONE, of Washington, and the President all refused to discuss their conversation. Only those three were present, so I wonder how the press obtained the words of the Senator from Montana."

Further on the article says:

Presumably the almost united Republican opposition to the bill is founded on the same friendly regard as actuates the Democratic Senator from Montana.

Mr. President, I am not surprised that the Democratic National Committee should give out a statement of that kind; I am surprised that my friend the Senator from Indiana should give out such a statement, first, because it implies that I gave out an interview which I had with the President as to what took place between us. There is not a newspaperman in the gallery and not a newspaperman in the city of Washington who will for one instant say that I, either directly or indirectly, ever gave out such a statement. The Senator from Indiana may feel that because he gave out a statement after he left the White House, which was later repudiated by the White House, that I might do the same thing.

Likewise that is in accord with the spirit in which the debate on the bill has been conducted. Never before in the history of the Senate of the United States, at least during the 14 or 15 years I have been a Member of it, have I seen such appeals to the prejudices of the people, to the uninformed, as have been made with reference to this proposed legislation. Never before have I seen on both sides such deep feeling aroused. The reason for it, of course, is that this is a fundamental issue which everyone realizes goes to the very foundation of our Government.

When the bill was first introduced the Attorney General of the United States in a radio speech used this language:

Ladies and gentlemen, only 9 short days have passed since the President sent to the Congress recommendations for the reorganization of the Federal judiciary. Yet in that brief time unfriendly voices have filled the air with lamentations and have vexed our ears with insensate clamor calculated to divert attention from the merits of his proposal.

Why was it that immediately there was aroused such feeling that protests came from the masses of the people of the country against the proposal? It was because they felt that the bill was an attempt on the part of the administration to do by indirection what it did not want to do by direction.

Again, Mr. President, after the appeal was made to the drought-stricken farmers in the Dust Bowl that we must immediately pack the Supreme Court in order to afford relief to those farmers, and after an appeal was made to the flood victims along the Ohio River in order to get them stirred up in favor of the proposal and to cause them to send protests to their Senators who were opposed to it, we found another kind of appeal being made. We found an appeal being made by the Postmaster General of the United States on the ground of party loyalty. He contended that every Democrat ought to support the bill because of party loyalty regardless of its effect upon the Constitution of the United States and regardless of its violation of the spirit of the Constitution.

We heard Mr. Farley saying, "It is in the bag." In another place and at another time he said, "We will let the Senate talk and then we will let the House talk. Then we will call the roll. We have the votes." The press of the country after the last election pronounced Mr. Farley one of the greatest prognosticators the country had ever seen. Think of it, Mr. President, here in the United States the Postmaster General has said, "We will let the Senate talk." Certainly, our constituents ought to feel very grateful to the Postmaster General for permitting the Members of the Senate of the United States, whom they have elected to office, to speak their minds in the Senate. The constituents of the Members of the House of Representatives ought to feel very grateful to the Postmaster General for condescending to let their Representatives speak with reference to the bill.

Then men were sent into nearly every State in the Union to arouse the labor leaders for the purpose of having them send protests and denunciations of Members of the Senate of the United States who were opposed to the bill. Men were sent into my State. One man was sent there who went to every labor organization in the State. I am told that he was on the Government pay roll. He was seeking to persuade the labor organizations to adopt resolutions not only in favor of the President's bill, but denouncing me. They went even further than that; one of the farm leaders told me that for the first time in his life he was invited to the White House, and it was suggested to him that he should go out and line up the farm organizations in the Northwest against every Member of the House and every Member of the Senate who dared to voice his opposition to the President's bill.

Something has been said about propaganda. We found the Secretary of Agriculture, by the medium of the radio trying to line up the farmers of the country. Why? Not because he knew anything about the Court proposal, not because he was particularly interested in this piece of proposed legislation, but because the Congress of the United States had appropriated money and placed it in his hands to take care of the drought-stricken farmers or those in need of relief; he alone could disburse this money to them, and the implication, of course, was that unless this bill should be passed then the farmers would not be able perhaps to get further appropriations from the Congress.

Then we find the Postmaster General lining up the postmasters throughout the country. We find Mr. Harry Hopkins, of the W. P. A., on the radio, talking about the Democratic Party and about the Court proposal. Why? Why should the head of Works Progress Administration of the United States be propagandizing and trying to influence the people on relief against Members of the Senate? Hopkins' great influence over relief clients comes from the fact that he disburses money to them. But who appropriated that money? Whose money was it? It was the money of the people of the United States, appropriated by the Congress and turned over to Mr. Hopkins, and yet he is stirring up W. P. A. workers and their dependents against Members of the Senate and Members of the House, and that is the only reason why Hopkins spoke.

That spirit of intolerance with reference to the pending bill has prevailed and pervaded the discussion right down to the present moment. Everyone who does not agree with the administration on this proposal or who disagrees with the Attorney General is denounced as an "economic royalist" and as one who has sold out to Wall Street.

Then we found the same spirit of intolerance prevailing in this Chamber yesterday, disclosed by the amazing situation which developed here. When the debate had been proceeding for only a couple of days and the opponents of the bill had not spoken at all, but had merely asked questions of the proponents of the bill who were talking, a practice which has been indulged in by the Senate from time immemorial, when no question of a filibuster was involved at all, but only bona-fide debate on the issues involved in the bill, we were confronted with a sudden appeal for strict application of the rules. Was it because the proponents of the bill are afraid of real debate?

Mr. Farley said, "We have the votes. It is in the bag." If it were "in the bag", why did the proponents desert it? It was deserted and the great prophet of the Democratic Party was wrong. They did not have the votes. They do not now have the votes. They do not want the original bill debated, because they know that upon legitimate debate they cannot sustain it. They know that while at the outset they undoubtedly had 60 votes in favor of the original bill, which would have added six new Justices to the Supreme Court, after the Members of the Senate heard or read the testimony of those appearing before the Judiciary Committee, and after they had studied the bill, one by one, and then two by two, and then by threes and fours, they deserted that bill, until on the day before yesterday the Democratic leader of the Senate announced that the reason why the proponents of the measure did not try to put forward the other bill was because they did not have the votes to pass it. They say they have enough votes at the present time to pass the compromise proposal, and then they appealed to party loyalty. They said to the new Senators who have just been elected, "You ought to vote for this bill because you rode in on the coattails of the President of the United States."

Thank God, I did not ride in on the coattails of the President of the United States! Thank God, I do not have to go to him and ask him whether or not I have to follow the Democratic leader in this new proposal! Those of you who rode in on the coattails of the President of the United States will ride out on the coattails of the President of the United States if that is the only reason you are here.

I did not ride in on the coattails of any President of the United States. I did not come here because I had promised to be 100 percent for the administration and to vote for everything the President wanted.

There are those who were elected to the United States Senate on a platform of "100 percent Roosevelt", but after assuming their seats in this body, when it was politically expedient, they unhesitatingly cast their votes against the administration. Now, however, some such Senators assert that they must vote for this bill because of their campaign promise of supporting the President 100 percent—that pledge is one that they keep or follow, utilize or discard as they deem it politically expedient.

No, Mr. President, I did not come to the Senate on the coattails of anyone; I came to the Senate on my own, and I am responsible for what I do in the Senate. I expect the people of my State to hold me responsible for my actions; and if I go out, I will go out riding on my own coattails and not upon the coattails of anyone else.

Finally, Mr. President, we were told, "If you do not vote for this bill, you will break the President's heart." Oh, dear! What a pity! "You are going to break the President's heart if you do not vote for him on this bill."

If Senators are going to break the President's heart because they do not vote for him on this bill, they ought to go back and vote for six new judges instead of voting for the substitute, because we are told that this is not the President's bill. Oh, no; this is not his bill. This is not what the President wanted. He wanted six new judges. And why did he want six new judges? Because some of the proponents of the original bill said, "We cannot trust less than four judges, and we ought to have six because some of the six might go back on us; but if we cannot get six, the least we will take is four." Finally, however, they have come down and have said, "We do not want six all at one time. That was wrong. That was packing the Court; so now, instead of packing it all at once, we will pack it by slow motion, and we will get the same result."

There is not the slightest difference in principle between this bill and the other bill so far as the objectives sought to be attained by the proponents of the bills are concerned. The only distinction between the original and this substitute Court bill is that the latter packs the Supreme Court by slow motion.

The distinguished Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. GUFFEY] rose in the Senate the other day and in a violent attack upon the Chief Justice of the United States said, "He is a terrible politician."

Where have I heard those words before? Not from the Senator from Pennsylvania—oh, no! I have heard them from some of the proponents of this bill who are not members of the Senate of the United States. The men who first proposed the bill were the first ones to use that term. But if Chief Justice Hughes is such a terrible politician, and we should bar politicians from the Supreme Court, why is it that all the Members of the Senate of the United States joined in recommending our distinguished leader in the Senate for the existing vacancy on the Supreme Court? And who voted for Mr. Hughes? We are all politicians. If we were not politicians, we would not be in the Senate of the United States. The only statesmen are dead. The only time politicians become statesmen is after they die.

I submit that this attack upon Chief Justice Hughes is ill-becoming a Member of the Senate. He has practically charged Chief Justice Hughes with being a cheap politician. I voted against the confirmation of Mr. Hughes; but let us see who were those who voted for him. Some Democrats who are in this body at the present time voted for him.

The Senator from Arizona, Mr. ASHURST, the original proponent of this bill, voted for the confirmation of Mr. Hughes.

The Senator from Kentucky, Mr. BARKLEY, voted for the confirmation of Mr. Hughes.

The Senator from Mississippi, Mr. HARRISON, voted for the confirmation of Mr. Hughes.

The present Secretary of the Navy, Secretary Swanson, then a Senator from Virginia, not only voted for the confirmation of Mr. Hughes but he worked incessantly in this body to secure his confirmation.

Who else voted for the confirmation of Mr. Hughes? The Senator from New York, Mr. Wagner, voted for his confirmation. The late Senator from Louisiana, Mr. Broussard, another Democrat, voted for his confirmation. The same thing is true of the Senator from New York, Mr. Copeland; the late Senator from Florida, Mr. Fletcher; the late Senator from Wyoming, Mr. Kendrick; the former Senator from Louisiana, Mr. Ransdell; the former Senator from Iowa, Mr. Steck; and the former Senator from Mississippi, Mr. Stephens. Then we find that the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. Robinson], the Democratic leader, who was then in London attending the Economic Conference by appointment of President Hoover, cabled to be paired in favor of the confirmation of Mr. Hughes; and he was paired with a Republican, the late Senator Howell, of Nebraska, in favor of the confirmation of the present Chief Justice.

So, if Mr. Hughes was such a terribly bad man then, if he was a known politician, and a cheap politician at that, why did these distinguished leaders of the Democratic Party vote for his confirmation and urge his confirmation upon the floor of the Senate of the United States? It should be remembered that Mr. Hughes was actively engaged in politics prior to the date of his confirmation. Mr. Hughes had "economic royalists" for clients whom he had actively served just before his nomination by President Hoover. And who "packed" Mr. Hughes upon the Supreme Court?

Let us take the case of Mr. Justice Roberts. I think every Democrat and every Liberal and every Progressive and every Republican voted for his confirmation. If Mr. Justice Roberts was "packed" on the Supreme Court, then the Senate of the United States was responsible, and violated its duty and its oath of office, when it voted to confirm his nomination and to put him upon the Supreme Court.

Who led the fight in this body for the confirmation of Mr. Justice Butler?

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. When was the vote on the confirmation of Mr. Chief Justice Hughes? Has the Senator the date there?

Mr. WHEELER. It was on February 14, 1930.

Mr. CONNALLY. How old was Mr. Chief Justice Hughes when he was confirmed by the Senate?

Mr. WHEELER. He must have been about 69 years of age. I am not sure of that, but I should judge he was about 69. He had run for President of the United States. The distinguished Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] had run for Vice President of the United States. Is it a crime for a man to be nominated for Vice President or President of the United States? Does that fact make of him a cheap politician? Oh, no! When a man is with you, he is all right.

Only a short time ago a great liberal newspaper in the United States pointed me out as one of the outstanding liberals of our day. A week or so later, when I had voiced my own convictions against this bill, I was a bad man. Talk about intolerance and bigotry! Because I disagreed with them once I was a Tory. Because I disagreed with them once I was an "economic royalist."

Intolerant and bigoted? Thank God, I come from the State of Montana, where there is no intolerance. Thank God, I come from a State where there is no economic bigotry. Thank God, I was reared in the State of Massachusetts and that I was not subjected to intolerant or bigoted influences. When a man is denied the right to his own opinion without enduring slanderous assaults, intolerance is in the saddle.

Who led the fight for Justice Butler upon this floor? It was not a Republican, not a reactionary, not a Tory, but one of the great liberals of his time, my late colleague, Thomas J. Walsh. He led the fight for Justice Butler. Was he seeking to pack the Court when he led that fight? No; and Senator Walsh undoubtedly felt that Mr. Butler would be fair, would be reasonable and liberal as a member of the Court.

Then there is Justice Sutherland. The Senate confirmed him. When, in the opinion of the Senator from Pennsylvania, did Mr. Hughes and every other Republican in this country become such bad men? Who are these bad men with whom I am lined up, that the Senator should feel so sorry for me and sympathize with me so greatly? Let me say to the Senator for his information that I do not need his sympathy. Sometime ago a Republican lawyer was speaking to a colored audience in my home town, and he said, "I am going to see to it that the colored people of this city get justice." An old colored lady sitting beside her husband nudged him and said, "I am not for that man." He said, "Why are you not for him? He said he was going to give us justice." She replied, "It is not justice us colored folks want; it is sympathy." [Laughter.]

I do not want sympathy. I have never had the sympathy of many people in this country and I do not want the sympathy of Senators now; they would only be wasting it upon me. I will take care of myself.

I say now that if a spirit of intolerance is to pervade the Senate, if there is to be an attempt to drive this bill through, if the proponents of the bill are going to put pressure on us, if they are going to try to get rough with us, we can get rough just as well as they.

The Senator from Kentucky said he had some old dead cats, or something, that he wanted to throw at someone, and intimated that I had said I had some dead cats. Oh, no; he is wrong about that. That is just in line with the intolerance exhibited and the construction other people would put upon my words. But if they have any dead cats they want to throw at me, let them do so. A good many dead cats have been thrown at me; not only dead cats but a lot of other things, some of which were far worse. [Laughter.]

I do not propose to be intimidated, and the rest of us do not propose to be intimidated, by name callers, or by anyone else, and our opponents might just as well make up their minds to that fact first as last. We are going to have a legitimate debate upon this question before the Senate, regardless of whether Mr. Farley wants us to or whether anybody else wants us to. The country is entitled to it.

Mr. President, threats have been made against Senators by Mr. Farley, who stated that the Senator from Wyoming and the Senator from Nevada probably would not get what they were seeking from the administration if they did not go along with the bill. These distasteful threats represent the ends to which some proponents will go to force the passage of this bill. They will not succeed. The Supreme Court will not be packed. The Senate will never permit it.

Speeches that were made over the radio have been censored, some of the radio stations cut off time after they had promised it to us. Thus far in the Senate debate on this bill the proponents have not argued the provisions or the effect of the bill. The proponents of this bill propose to amend the Constitution through processes of interpretation. Such is morally wrong, fundamentally unsound, and contrary to the principles of democratic government. The people of the United States have a right given them by their forefathers to vote directly their approval or disapproval of any amendment of the Constitution.

Oh, the Senator from Indiana said, "I want my President to look toward the shrine of George Washington at Mount Vernon." I want him to look there, and I want him to remember the words of George Washington, for this is what George Washington said:

> The basis of our political systems is the right of the people to make and to alter their constitutions of government.

We say that we want a constitutional amendment submitted. The Senator from Arkansas said, "You cannot deny the right of the Members of the Senate, the representatives of the people, to vote upon this pending bill." We are saying that the Constitution does not belong to the Congress of the United States, it does not belong to the President of the United States. The Constitution belongs to the people. We are asking that the people of the United States shall have an opportunity to voice their opinion and to say whether or not they want the Constitution amended. This Court bill seeks to amend the Constitution by interpretative processes.

Oh, but it is said that it will take 15 years to amend the Constitution. Nonsense! Ratification of the "lame duck" amendment came in 11 months. Ratification of the prohibition and the repealing amendment each came within 14 months. Someone told me that a Senator stated that for $50,000 they could stop a constitutional amendment in his State. If they can, his State is far more corrupt than any other State of the Union of which I know.

Take 15 years? We all know that under the Constitution of the United States a proposal to amend that instrument can be submitted, and I assure the Senate that Senators on this side who are opposed to the bill will vote to submit any reasonable constitutional amendment.

It can be provided in the proposed amendment that it must be voted on within 1 year or 2 years, and it can be provided that it must be submitted, not to the legislatures, but to conventions in the various States.

Now I shall read from a brief on this subject written by Mr. A. Mitchell Palmer, late Attorney General of the United States——

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Delaware?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. HUGHES. As I recall, the Senator appeared before the Committee on the Judiciary and testified.

Mr. WHEELER. Yes.

Mr. HUGHES. He made one statement which appears in the record of the hearings before the committee about which I have thought much since that time. At the time it struck me as either conveying a meaning which probably the Senator did not intend, or I did not understand it, and I desire to read the statement and ask whether it reflects the Senator's position now. On page 497 of the printed hearings it is reported that the Senator made this statement:

> When I was interrupted, I said that I had discussed this matter with practically all the Members of the Senate who are opposed to this proposal, and I think I speak for the vast majority of them when I say that if the administration will abandon this idea of packing the Court in order to have a constitutional amendment to meet the needs of the time as they see it, we will vote to submit any reasonable amendment which the administration may propose to meet these conditions.

Mr. WHEELER. I think that is correct.

Mr. HUGHES. Am I to understand, then, that the Senator meant at that time and means now that if those who favor this bill—that is, the President's bill, as the Senator calls it, and the substitute—will abandon the idea——

Mr. WHEELER. Of packing the Supreme Court.

Mr. HUGHES. Will abandon the idea and offer a constitutional amendment to meet the needs of the times as we see it, the Senator will vote to submit such an amendment?

Mr. WHEELER. Absolutely. That has been my contention at all times.

Mr. HUGHES. Then the objection of the Senator from Montana is not, as I understand, to the purpose of the bill but to the method by which it is sought to effectuate the purpose?

Mr. WHEELER. My contention is that the bill proposes to do something in an unconstitutional way. I want to see the people themselves vote upon the constitutional amendment or upon the proposed changes; and I say that the people of this country have a right to vote upon such a measure. No President, no Congress, has a right to change the Constitution. When I say that, I say it upon the best authority, because I repeat what Presidents of the United States have said, and what the present Attorney General of the United States has said in a speech before the American Bar Association, to which I shall call the Senate's attention.

Mr. HUGHES. Then, as I understand, the contention of the Senator from Montana is that changing the number of members of the Supreme Court by an act of Congress is changing the Constitution in an unconstitutional way?

Mr. WHEELER. No. Of course, the Congress of the United States has the power to increase the membership of the Supreme Court of the United States.

Mr. HUGHES. Or to decrease it.

Mr. WHEELER. Or to decrease the number of members of the Supreme Court. The Congress of the United States has the power to withhold appropriations for the salaries of the members of the Supreme Court of the United States.

Mr. TYDINGS. Or the salary of the President of the United States.

Mr. WHEELER. Or the salary of the President of the United States; but such action would be against the spirit of the Constitution. If Senators want to get rid of Mr. Justice Roberts, if Senators want to get rid of Mr. Justice Butler, why do they not do what they can do under the Constitution; that is, refuse to appropriate money to pay the salaries of those Justices? Why do they not do that? Because they know that the people of the United States would not stand for it, and that it would be against the spirit of the Constitution.

Mr. HUGHES. I think I can assure the Senator from Montana that, so far as I am concerned, I would not think of doing any such thing with respect to any Justice of the Supreme Court. I would not tear down any Federal institution by denying the necessary support for it. That is as far from my mind as anything possibly can be.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I do not desire the Senator from Montana to lose the floor.

Mr. HUGHES. I have no intention of doing anything to accomplish that.

Mr. BORAH. The Senator from Delaware is not in control of the intention. The Presiding Officer will determine the question.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, if a Senator interrupts me, I wish to know whether or not I am going to lose the floor, and whether the rule covering such a situation is going to be enforced?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair again states that the rule prescribes that a Senator may not speak more than twice on the same day on the same question.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, let me say this——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senator from Montana permit the Chair to finish?

Mr. WHEELER. I beg the Chair's pardon.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Of course, that involves the other question as to what constitutes a day; whether it is a legislative day or a calendar day. The question will naturally arise only when some Senator makes the point of order that the Senator speaking has already spoken twice and therefore cannot speak again. Undoubtedly, when such a point of order is made, it will be determined eventually by the Senate. The Senator takes all the responsibility for what happens when he yields.

Also, it will have to depend upon the judgment of the Senator having the floor, and who has the power to stop from speaking longer the Senator to whom he has yielded, whether that Senator is asking a question or is speaking.

Later on, on a point of order based on the ground that the Senator has spoken twice, the Senate will determine whether the Senator has twice before yielded the floor for a speech by another.

Mr. WHEELER. I assumed that the Senator from Delaware rose to ask me a question.

Mr. HUGHES. Absolutely.

Mr. WHEELER. And I assumed that the Senator was asking me a question.

Mr. HUGHES. Yes; absolutely.

Mr. WHEELER. That was what the Senator had in mind.

Mr. HUGHES. Yes.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield for a question; yes.

Mr. BURKE. Is not the Senator from Delaware [Mr. HUGHES] laboring under a delusion in referring to the testimony of the Senator from Montana before the Senate Judiciary Committee with reference to a constitutional amendment? Is he not apparently of the opinion that the constitutional amendment to which the Senator from Montana referred was one dealing with the number of members of the Court, whereas is it not true that the Senator from Montana was referring to a constitutional amendment increasing the power of Congress in various matters?

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, I think the Congress of the United States should take the position, and those who are opposed to the bill should take the position, that they are willing to submit to the people any reasonable consitutional amendment which the President of the United States may submit to the Congress. I refuse to take the position that I will not let the people vote on any constitutional amendment which they see fit to vote upon. I take the position that if the people of the United States want to destroy their Constitution they have the right to do so, but nobody else has that right. The people of the United States have the power and they have the right to destroy the Constitution if they want to do so. They can destroy the Constitution, they can destroy their form of government, if they want to do so. But I have no right, nor has any President of the United States the right, nor has any member of the Supreme Court the right to make such a change. None but the people of this country have that right.

Mr. President, I hope that makes my position clear.

Mr. HUGHES. It does not make it quite clear, if the Senator will pardon me.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator a question.

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. The Senator has stated that he would favor a constitutional amendment to accomplish the object of this bill. Would the Senator from Montana likewise favor this particular piece of pending legisiation, assuming that it was amended so as to exempt sitting members of the Supreme Court from its provisions?

Mr. WHEELER. I have already indicated my position. If it eliminated the present members of the Supreme Court, while I have not completely made up my judgment upon that subject, I feel that we should then have before us quite a different proposition from that presented by this bill, because the present members of the Supreme Court took their office with the implied understanding that they were going to hold it during good behavior for life. They can be impeached. If the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. GUFFEY] and others who have spoken against certain members of the Supreme Bench think they are so bad and so terrible and so wrong, why do they not move to impeach those members? They do not do so because they know they cannot sustain their charges.

I do not know that I have answered the Senator's question.

Mr. TYDINGS. Yes; I think the Senator has done so.

Mr. WHEELER. However, if a man is appointed to the Supreme Court bench, and when he is appointed he knows that if he does not get off the Supreme Court bench somebody is going to be appointed to help him, because it is the thought of the Congress that when he reaches 75 he is an imbecile and he ought to have help, that is quite a different proposition from now imposing our will upon the members of the Supreme Court.

So, Mr. President, when we are talking about the people, and about submitting the issue to the people, and objecting to the refusal to let the people vote, and not letting their representatives vote—when such questions are raised, I say that those who are opposed to the pending measure, and who are willing to submit a constitutional amendment to the people, are not only advocating the constitutional method of changing the Constitution, but are advocating the use of the democratic way. We are taking the democratic way of amending the Constitution because we say that the people should vote on the question. We not only say that, but we say that the legislatures do not need to vote on it; that the question may be presented to the people, and it may be determined, under the rule laid down by Mr. Justice Van Devanter, by conventions called to pass upon the matter, the delegates to such conventions to be elected, and the issue to be presented on the question of whether the delegates who are to be elected are for or against the proposed constitutional amendment.

No other issue would be involved. The people would vote directly upon that question.

Why is not that done? Why do not Senators propose such action? Because they do not dare to submit that question to the people of the country.

I wish now to quote from the brief of former Attorney General Palmer. Who was he, in addition to being Attorney General under Mr. Wilson? He was the man who in 1932 wrote the first draft of the Democratic platform. Is there anyone who questions that statement? I was a member of the resolutions committee of the Democratic Party in 1932, and Mr. Palmer drafted the Democratic platform of that year. He submitted it to the Democratic Members of Congress, the leaders here, before it was ever submitted to the convention, and it was adopted almost exactly as he wrote it. What does he say upon the subject? He quotes from Mr. Justice Van Devanter.

Mr. President, first I wish to quote from Mr. Justice Brandeis, as follows:

> The second contention is that, in the constitutions of several of the 36 States named in the proclamation of the Secretary of State, there are provisions which render inoperative the alleged ratifications by their legislatures. The argument is that, by reason of these specific provisions, the legislatures were without power to ratify. But the function of a State legislature in ratifying a proposed amendment to the Federal Constitution, like the function of Congress in proposing the amendment, is a Federal function derived from the Federal Constitution; and it transcends any limitations sought to be imposed by the people of a State.

Mr. Justice Van Devanter said what? Mr. Palmer quoted from Mr. Justice Van Devanter as follows:

> Of the power of Congress, keeping within reasonable limits, to fix a definite period for the ratification we entertain no doubt. As a rule the Constitution speaks in general terms, leaving Congress to deal with subsidiary matters of detail as the public interests and changing conditions may require; and article 5 is no exception to the rule. Whether a definite period for ratification shall be fixed, so that all may know what it is and speculation on what is a reasonable time may be avoided, is, in our opinion, a matter of detail which Congress may determine as an incident of its power to designate the mode of ratification.

Then the Attorney General said:

> The Constitution is not a compact between the States, but it was adopted by the people, and therefore does not require State action to amend.

So I say to Senators who maintain that a constitutional amendment could not be adopted; that it would take too long; that somebody could stop it with $50,000; that that just is not so, because the Supreme Court has already spoken upon that issue and the Constitution itself is very plain upon it.

I wish to call attention to what the present Attorney General said.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. COPELAND. Has the Senator given any thought to the possibility of the formulation of an amendment which would somewhat widen the powers of the Congress to deal with certain questions that are close to the hearts of many Members of the Congress and in that way obviate all discussion and the necessity of change in the Court, for, if the powers of the Congress were widened, of course, that would mean that no matter what group of Justices might sit on the Court, they would be governed by that particular feature of the Constitution. Has the Senator given any consideration to that question?

Mr. WHEELER. Yes; several of us have given consideration to that question, but we all know that an amendment cannot be adopted unless it is proposed and is to the liking of the administration.

The present Attorney General of the United States, speaking before the American Bar Assocation, said that the way to go about changes in the Constitution, if the courts decided wrongly, was to submit a constitutional amendment, and the fathers of this Government said so in the beginning.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question in order to clarify the matter?

Mr. WHEELER. Yes.

Mr. BARKLEY. Is it the Senator's contention that under the Constitution the pending bill is unconstitutional?

Mr. WHEELER. Of course, it is constitutional, just as it would be constitutional for the Congress to refuse to appropriate money to pay the salaries of Federal judges. That would be constitutional but it would be against the spirit of the Constitution.

Mr. BARKLEY. Whatever the reasoning and the comparison, the Senator admits that Congress can do this in the way proposed?

Mr. WHEELER. Congress, of course, can refuse to appropriate money for the President of the United States and make it impossible for him to act in the capacity of President. The Congress of the United States can refuse, I repeat, to appropriate the money for Justice Butler, for Justice McReynolds, or for any other Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States by saying that no part of the money appropriated shall be used to pay the salary of a particular Justice.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield there?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. BURKE. On the point raised by the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY], while it must be admitted that the Constitution leaves it to the Congress entirely to fix the number of the members of the Court, does that necessarily mean that Congress is vested with the authority to turn over to somebody else the right to determine whether the Supreme Court shall consist of 9, 10, 11, or some other number of Justices?

Mr. WHEELER. I wish to consider that point a little later on.

Mr. BURKE. Very well.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. In connection with the question of the Senator from Kentucky, let me ask the Senator from Montana a question. The Senator from Kentucky asked if Congress had not the constitutional power to increase the number of judges. Is it not true that Congress has the power to regulate the number of Justices on the Supreme Court for the purpose of making the Court of sufficient size to transact its business and efficiently to dispose of that business, but that Congress has no constitutional power to subtract from or to add to the Court for the purpose of destroying the Court?

Mr. WHEELER. Of course, such an act would be against the spirit of the Constitution. I am sorry the junior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. LOGAN] is not present, for he said yesterday that the spirit of the Constitution and the letter of the Constitution were the same thing. Let me quote what James Truslow Adams says about that. He says:

> To use the letter of the Constitution for a purpose not intended, and subversive to the whole constitutional structure, cannot be considered a constitutional act, although it may be a legal one.

Now, let us come to the question whether or not the pending proposal is within the spirit of the Constitution and whether or not there is any difference between the spirit and the letter of the Constitution.

The President of the United States a few weeks ago had something to say about those who obey the letter of the law while violating its spirit. I should like to read from the message the President sent to the Congress on June 1 of this year. I quote:

> Mr. Justice Holmes said, "Taxes are what we pay for civilized society." Too many individuals, however, want the civilization at a discount.
> Methods of escape or intended escape from tax liability are many. Some are instances of avoidance which appear to have the color of legality; others are on the border line of legality; others are plainly contrary even to the letter of the law.

So the President of the United States, in his tax-evasion message, plainly recognized the difference between the spirit of the law and the letter of the law.

In that message the President said further:

> All are alike in that they are definitely contrary to the spirit of the law. All are alike in that they represent a determined effort on the part of those who use them to dodge the payment of taxes which Congress based on ability to pay. All are alike in that failure to pay results in shifting the tax load to the shoulders of others less able to pay and in mulcting the Treasury of the Government's just due.
> Very definitely the issue immediately before us is the single one relating to the evasion or unethical avoidance of existing laws. That should be kept clearly in mind by the Congress and the public. Already efforts to befog this issue appear. Already certain newspaper publishers are seeking to make it appear—first, that if an individual can devise unanticipated methods to avoid taxes which the Congress intended him to pay, he is doing nothing unpatriotic or unethical; and, second, that because certain individuals do not approve of high income-tax brackets, or the undistributed earnings tax, or the capital gains tax, the first duty of the Congress should be the repeal or reduction of those taxes. In other words, not one but many red herrings are in preparation.

In his message the President said further:

> It is also a matter of deep regret to know that lawyers of high standing at the bar not only have advised and are advising their clients to utilize tax avoidance devices, but are actively using these devices in their own personal affairs. We hear too often from lawyers, as well as from their clients, the sentiment, "It is all right to do it if you can get away with it."

"It is all right to do it if you can get away with it"; but it is against the spirit of the law.

I am confident—

The President says—

> that the Congress will wish to enact legislation at this session specifically and exclusively aimed at making the present tax structure evasion-proof.
> * * * * * * *
> FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.
> THE WHITE HOUSE, June 1, 1937.

The Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON], the distinguished Democratic leader, commenting a few minutes later on the message, said—I quote from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of June 1:

> Only a few words will suffice for what I have to say at this time. The message of the President, based on information supplied by the Treasury Department, reveals a shocking condition pertaining to evasions—> of the spirit of our income-tax laws. No doubt, as is stated in the message, there are numerous other instances that have not as yet come to light of the law either being violated or its spirit being evaded.

Oh, yes, Mr. President, there is a difference between the spirit of the law and the letter of the law. At a hearing a short time ago before the Interstate Commerce Committee when some men came before that committee to testify I said as to certain members of the New York Stock Exchange who were allowing some people to obtain stocks at a price lower than was accorded to the general public that that was in the nature of a bribe. They came back saying that it was no violation of the law. I said, "No; it is no violation of the law, but it is morally wrong." So I say it is morally wrong to do by indirection what cannot be done by direction. It is morally wrong to change the Constitution by coercive interpretation. It is morally wrong to put men on the Supreme Court for the express purpose of getting decisions in accordance with the views of Congress or in accordance with the views of the executive department.

I submit that no Senator who really believes in the Constitution of the United States, who believes in a democratic form of government, who believes in and has confidence in the people, can go before his constituents and say, "I did not dare to submit a constitutional amendment to you because I was afraid to trust you. I was afraid you would be corrupted by the 'economic royalists' in Wall Street. I was afraid Mr. Mellon might corrupt the State of Pennsylvania. Therefore I did not care to submit a constitutional amendment to the workers and laborers of Pennsylvania.

Not only that, but if we provided a method of ratification by conventions, it might be that some spooks would show up. Who is seeing the bogey man now? Who is it that is seeing the man on the stair when no man is there? Who is it? It is the man over in Berlin, the Ambassador to Germany, who said somebody was going to raise a fund of $10,000,000, or $100,000,000, or $1,000,000,000 to set up a dictatorship in this country. A dictatorship cannot be set up in this country if we maintain the Constitution of the United States and keep the three departments of government independent of one another. A dictatorship cannot be set up in this country if we go before the people and submit this proposal to the people, and the reason why that is not done is because its proponents do not dare to do it.

Furthermore, with reference to these terrible judges, particularly the politician on the bench whom the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. GUFFEY] mentioned, no one dares to introduce a bill containing a provision that "no part of this appropriation shall be used to pay the salary of Chief Justice Hughes." The Senator from Pennsylvania does not dare to go before the people of his State and propose such a thing. He does not dare go before the people of Pennsylvania and say, "We want no part of this appropriation to be used for paying the salary of Justice Roberts." That would be constitutional, but who would for a second say it would be morally right? No; the people would not stand for it.

A suggestion was made that I ought to feel sorry for the company I am keeping. Who compose the company I am keeping? Let us call the roll. First is the senior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SHIPSTEAD], elected on the Farmer-Labor ticket. Who else is in my company? The junior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. NYE], who was elected by the farmers and laborers of his State, and the senior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. FRAZIER], elected by the Non-Partisan League of North Dakota.

I also find in my company the senior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY], one of the outstanding liberals who fought for the Democratic Party and made the State of Wyoming Democratic through his outstanding ability. Yet the statement has been made to me, "We made Senator O'MAHONEY." No; that is not so. That Senator was made a long time before some of the New Deal liberals were ever heard of.

Who else is in my company? Who are some of the others of this bad company I am keeping? The senior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] does not like the bill and does not think it provides the proper means of accomplishing the purpose.

We are told it is the same group, the same forces that fought the President in the last election. Is the senior Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] one of the elements that fought the President in the last election? Is the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY] one of them? Is one of them the Senator from Nevada [Mr. MCCARRAN], who is known on the floor of the Senate as the greatest champion of labor in this body? He is looked upon in his State as an ultra-liberal. Does he belong to the same element? Does the Senator from Iowa [Mr. GILLETTE] belong to the same element? Oh no! Does the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] belong to the same element? No, indeed! Does the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] belong to that element? Does the capable and well-known senior Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] belong to the same element?

Yes, I am in bad company indeed. I am with practically every liberal who has stood on the floor of the Senate and fought for the liberal cause long before Jim Farley was ever heard of. I stood side by side with the liberals of the country while other Members on this side of the Chamber were fighting for and as a part of the machine created during the Hoover administration.

What about the press of the country? What about the New York Times? The New York Times did not belong to the "economic royalists" when supporting Roosevelt in 1932. The New York Times was not an "economic royalist" when it supported Roosevelt in 1936. What about the Scripps-Howard newspapers, the most liberal newspapers in the country? They have supported Mr. Roosevelt's legislative program and have gone down the line for him, and yet they have refused to follow him on the bill now before us.

The minute a Senator is known to be opposed to the President's bill he is denounced as a "defeatist", an "economic royalist", who has sold out to Wall Street. What bigotry! Only those who vote for everything the President wants are liberals. Those whose consciences impel them to disagree even once immediately are "defeatist lawyers" or "economic royalists."

Mr. President, coming back to the Constitution, of course, it is within the letter of the Constitution to pass this bill to put another Justice on the Supreme Bench. Yes; it is within the letter of the Constitution to provide in the bill that if a member of the Supreme Court is opposed to the measure, then his salary shall not be paid; or another provision could be inserted that salaries of members of the Supreme Court shall be increased if they favor the bill; but either would be morally wrong. It would have been constitutional to have added a provision to the N. R. A. bill to increase their salaries, but it would have been morally wrong; it would have been against the spirit of the Constitution.

Mr. President, the President did not charge those whose names were mentioned before the Joint Committee on Tax Avoidance with a violation of the letter of the law. He charged them, and the Treasury Department charged them, with having violated the spirit of the law. They were held up and pilloried. I have not any objection to that, but they were pilloried not for breaking the law but for a violation of the spirit of the law—for doing an illegal act in a legal manner.

We are told that there is great opposition to 5-to-4 decisions. Let us examine that matter for a moment. There is no longer any need for the passage of this bill because of 5-to-4 decisions. There is a vacancy on the Supreme Court. Why has not that vacancy been filled? We all know the reason, and it is not necessary for me to state it at this time.

We do not need to fear 5-to-4 decisions, because we will no longer have them. If the judge to be appointed does not disappoint the proponents of the bill, they can have 6-to-3 decisions, or they can have at least 5-to-4 decisions. The administration can be sure of such decisions on any reasonable proposition. They can be sure of 5-to-4 decisions in their favor. There is no longer any "no man's land." There is no longer any "Mr. Justice Roberts' land." Think what happened when Mr. Justice Van Devanter resigned. Proponents of the bill have been wanting resignations, but when he resigned just think of the statement that was made! "One down and five to go" was the comment made by the Secretary to the President of the United States.

There is a word in use in New England with which many are familiar which describes the sort of discussion that has been taking place on the part of the proponents of the bill, a word that describes it better than any other expression I can think of. That is the word "cheap." It was cheap for the Secretary to the President of the United States to say "One down and five to go", "One down and four to go." It was cheap, Mr. President, for the Postmaster General to say, "We have it in the bag." It was cheap for him to say that he would let the Senate talk; he would let the Congress talk. It was cheap to make the arguments that have been made to intelligent men upon the floor of the Senate. It was cheap, I say, to appeal to Members here and say, "You rode in on the President's coattails, and now you owe it to him to vote as he wants you to vote." It was cheap to say, "You are going to break the President's heart unless you vote for this bill."

What have we come to in this body, when a great issue is before the Senate affecting the Constitution of the United States, affecting the fundamental principles upon which the Government is founded, and Senators are told, "You must vote for the bill because you rode in on the coattails of the President of the United States, and he wants it"? Is that what the people of Mississippi sent the Senator from Mississippi to the Senate for? Were Senators sent here to say "yes", or were they sent here to think?

Mr. President, with reference to 5-to-4 decisions, we are told that we shall have no more of them if this bill is passed. As a matter of fact, under the bill we may not only have 5-to-4 decisions, but we may have 6-to-7 decisions, 7-to-8 decisions, 5-to-5 decisions, or 7-to-7 decisions. What does that mean?

Let me ask my friends who are so bitter against 5-to-4 decisions to consider what may happen under this bill. A district judge out in Podunk declares an act of Congress unconstitutional. The case is appealed directly to the Supreme Court of the United States. The district judge in question, perchance, has been appointed not because of his ability, not because of his legal attainments, but because some Senator wanted him appointed, because he has been the Senator's partner or has been his political friend. He declares the act unconstitutional and the case goes to the Supreme Court. There are 10 members upon the Supreme Court, or 12 members upon the Supreme Court. They divide upon the issue 5 to 5 or 6 to 6. What happens? The decision of the lower court stands. That district judge in Podunk has knocked out the law and held it unconstitutional. There has been no 7-to-5 decision, no 6-to-5 decision; but the single judge out in Podunk, without any legal ability, appointed for purely political reasons, has declared the law unconstitutional and his decision stands. He is the man who ultimately is responsible for its being held unconstitutional—not Roberts, not Hughes, not Brandeis, not Cardozo, not the other Justices, but this judge in Podunk, this judge appointed at the behest of some crooked political boss, perhaps, in one of the great cities of this country that is reeking with political corruption and crookedness.

We are told that that is the constitutional way in which to have the validity of laws of Congress determined; that their constitutionality should be determined not by five men but by one man, and that one man may be a political boss from some corrupt city of the United States.

That is why I have said the substitute bill ought to go back to the committee and be studied. It would not speed up justice, as we were told. It would do nothing of the kind. It would not obviate 5-to-4 decisions. It would result in a condition a thousand times worse than that brought about by 5-to-4 decisions. It would make it possible for cases to be decided by a vote of 7 to 7. It would make it possible for one man, a lower court judge at that, to decide cases; and yet great statesmen want to see that kind of a law placed upon the statute books of the United States. They want to see that kind of a court empowered to pass upon the validity of acts of Congress. That is what they are trying to force down the throats of the people because they are afraid that if it were not done it might "break the President's heart"!

Incidentally, who was it that declared the second Frazier-Lemke Act unconstitutional? Whom do you suppose it was? Some judge appointed by this administration out in Illinois or Pennsylvania—appointed at the behest of the Senator from Pennsylvania or the Senator from Illinois, one or both of them—declared the law unconstitutional. The case went to the Supreme Court of the United States, and that Court declared the act constitutional.

After all, speaking of 5-to-4 decisions, do we want a Supreme Court that simply will agree entirely with our viewpoint? Is that what we want? Let me call attention to the fact that it is out of the clash of opinions that the truth comes. The worst thing that could happen to Congress, the worst thing that could happen to the country, would be to have but one strong political party. We get better legislation in this body because we have a clash of opinions as to proposed legislation. We get better bills out of committees when we have a clash of opinions. The American form of government depends upon the clash of opinions of its people, and not upon a subservient people who are voting as they are told to vote because they are getting hand-outs from the Treasury of the United States.

We are told that all the farmers of the country are for this measure. Let me say that I was out in Montana not long ago. Many farmers came to see me and said, "I am with the President. I do not know anything about this bill, but I am for it because I think the President wants it." Labor leaders came to me and said to me, "I am for the bill because I think the President wants it. I do not know anything about it." W. P. A. workers came to me and said, "I am on the public pay roll, and I want the bill because the President wants it. That is the reason." I say to the Members of the Senate, however, that practically every man with whom I have come in contact, from one end of the country to the other, who has given the question any serious thought or who knows anything about our problems or our Constitution is opposed to this measure.

If the contention of those who favor the bill is correct, why have a written Constitution at all? A great many persons in this country think there is not any need for a written Constitution; but why do we have one? We have one, my friends, because my forefathers, like the forefathers of most of the Senators, had left foreign shores, where they had seen the tyranny of one-man government in Europe. Some of them had been driven out of England by James I, who said to them, "Unless you conform, I will harass you out of the country"; and he did harass them until they left that country. He drove them to Holland, and then they came to America and settled upon the shores of this great country of ours. They fought the American Revolution; they spilled their blood and many of them died, all up and down the Atlantic seaboard, in order that you and I, their posterity, might have a democratic form of government assured by a written Constitution.

When the framers of the Constitution met in the assembly in Philadelphia they did not write the Constitution simply to protect themselves, but they remembered some of the things that had occurred before. They remembered the six men of Dorset and the six farm laborers who had assembled for the purpose of petitioning for higher wages, and were banished from England for so doing. So they wrote into the Constitution of the United States a provision that the right of free assemblage should be guaranteed in the United States of America.

They wrote it into the Constitution because those six men were banished from England and sent to Australia. They also wrote into the Constitution that no man should be banished from this country on account of crime. Remembering that Mary, Queen of Scots, before she was beheaded, asked and pleaded that she should be confronted with her accusers, they wrote into the Constitution of the United States that every accused person should be confronted by his accusers, that he should have the right of trial by jury, and that he should have the right to a writ of habeas corpus. They remembered that in European countries the army had been able to enter a man's home and take possession of it; so they wrote into the Constitution of the United States a provision to the effect that no general, no Army officer, no matter whom he might be, in peacetime should be permitted to quarter his troops in the home of a citizen; and if he tried to do so, the citizen could say to him, "Go on down the road."

I might go on and enumerate the other provisions of the Bill of Rights, and say that because of what had been done in Europe the forefathers not only wanted to lay down those principles but they wanted to make those rights inalienable to the people of this country for all time to come.

Oh, but it is said, "What has that to do with the Court-packing bill?" If four men can be put upon the Supreme Bench to override the Constitution of the United States in one particular, they can say as to every other provision of the Constitution of the United States that it shall be inoperative. They can say whatever they choose to say, and make the Bill of Rights become as nothing to the people of this country.

I am told that labor is for the bill and that the farmers are for it. A man was sent out to my State to line up the people. When I went out to Montana, who came out and followed me around to pretty nearly every meeting? The only labor leader who followed me around and made any speeches was the associate editor of the Daily Worker, Mr. Bill Dunn, a man whom I defended some years ago, without charge, when he was indicted for sedition.

He held a meeting and supported the President's proposal in the city of Butte, and in several other places throughout the State. Is he for it because he is for the President of the United States, or is he for it because he believes that it is the first step in tearing down constitutional government and bringing about a dictatorship?

Mr. President, I say that there is nothing liberal about the proposal before us; there is nothing progressive about it. It has been dressed up in gaudy clothes for the purpose of attracting the fancy of some of the younger generation, who have not given it any serious thought and do not know that the liberties which have become commonplace to us were earned only by the lifeblood of our forefathers. Our liberties are so commonplace that few people give any serious consideration to them.

Why should we be zealous about this cause? When we look at world affairs we realize that in Germany there is a dictator, under whose iron heel are 70,000,000 people. How did he come into power? On what plea did he come into office? He came in under the constitution of Germany. Every step that was taken by him at first was taken in a constitutional way. Mr. Hitler acted "to meet the needs of the times."

Mussolini came into office upon the plea that he would improve economic conditions and he assumed the power of a dictator and abolished the legislative body of Italy and set up his own court, in order that he might "meet the needs of the times" in that country. In every place where a dictatorship has been set up it has been done "in order to meet the needs of the times."

Let me quote Mr. Justice Brandeis. He said:

> Experience should teach us to be most on guard to protect our liberty when purposes of government are beneficent. Men born to freedom are naturally alert to repel invasion of their liberty by evil-minded persons. The greatest dangers to liberty lurk in insidious encroachment by men of zeal, well-meaning, but without understanding.

I quote also from Mr. James Bryce, formerly British Ambassador to the United States, who said:

> When all of the public lands have been taken up, homes for the people will be more difficult to obtain; that will continue to increase the evils of tenantry; then pauperism, now confined to some six or seven States, will become universal throughout America; labor will either fall, or lack employment, and cost of living will rise to a height unbearable. * * * Will the American voter patiently bear the stress of periods of hard times, or will they experiment with vain and foolish things; and then the evils will appear in this virgin soil that now plague the crowned heads of Europe.
> The beginning of this pressure will not be later than 30 years hence.
> For when this pressure is upon the country, and in their effort to try vain and foolish things, they will be prone to increase the number of Supreme judges, in order to overturn all the decisions of that Court; and thus at one stroke will the American Commonwealths be destroyed.

Probably, in the opinion of the distinguished Senator from Kentucky [Mr. LOGAN] Lord Bryce was seeing a man on the stair when there was no one there.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. CLARK. With due respect to the opinion of the Chair and the Senator from Arkansas, I will put my interruption in the form of a question.

Would the Senator be so presumptuous as to set up the opinion of such a man as Lord Bryce on constitutional government against the opinion of the distinguished Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. WHEELER. Oh, no; I would not; but others might. The Senator from Kentucky is now in the Chamber. I am sorry he was not here when I read what the President said about the difference between the spirit of the law and the letter of the law. When the bill came to Congress providing for six judges in the first instance, we were told that the Supreme Court was back in its work, and that that was the reason why it was necessary to have more members on the Court. Then we were told that the Court had improperly denied something like six or seven hundred petitions for writs of certiorari. Then we were told that the judges were old and that they were unable to do their work, and so they should be forced off the Court. These contentions were disproved. But still the distinguished Senator says there is no intention of forcing them off the Court. However, the Senator from Arkansas, in response to a question from me just the other day said there was not any doubt in his mind but that they probably would get off. In answer to a question from the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN] the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] stated:

> I should think that we might regard it as an expression of the public opinion of the Nation that one who has reached the age of 75 years had best avail himself of the privilege of retirement. But the Senator from Vermont, whose imagination is quite unbounded and whose genius for the conception of possibilities is greater than my own, is entirely able now, as he was before he asked the question, to form his own conclusion.

He said again:

> I should not regard it as a national calamity if any Justice availed himself of the privilege of retirement any more than I have regarded it as a calamity when other Justices have retired at the age of 70.

The Attorney General of the United States said if they do not like this law, let them get off. What is the object of passing the proposed legislation? There is just one reason behind it. Its proponents may camouflage it just as much as they desire, but the Attorney General said that they want a court to meet the needs of the times. What does that mean? What are the needs of the time? Who is to judge what are the needs of the time?

I think I stated before upon this floor that the needs of the times are like the shifting sands upon the beach. What may be the needs of the times today may not be the needs of the times tomorrow. If a President comes into office with a great majority behind him, is he going to say, "I have 11,000,000 majority, I have a Congress which is subservient to me, so I am going to increase the membership of the Court, because I want men there who are going to decide in accord with the needs of the times"?

There are courts in Germany, there are courts in Italy, there are courts in Russia, and men are placed on them to meet the needs of the times as the dictators see the needs, and those judges do what the dictators want them to do. Can the Democratic Party afford to be placed in the position of saying to the people of this country, "We are going to put men on the Supreme Bench to meet the needs of the times as we see them"?

A distinguished Member of this Chamber a few years ago thought the needs of the times were such that he would probably be elected President of the United States upon an issue which was inflaming the minds of the people of the country at that time. Had he then been elected President of the United States, what do Senators think he would have thought were the needs of the times at that time?

Oh, the needs of the times! The needs of the times. The people of the State of Oregon thought the needs of the times in the State of Oregon required that a law should be enacted providing that its citizens should have their children educated in no other place than in the public schools. That was done because of what they thought were the needs of the times. That was done because it was thought, it was in the minds of—not the legislature, not the Governor—but the people of the State of Oregon; and the Supreme Court of the United States of America declared that law unconstitutional.

We know that the idea of the needs of the times, and of having judges to meet the needs of the times, is not anything new. The great political organizations such as Tammany and such as may be in the State of Pennsylvania want judges upon the bench to meet the needs of the times as they see them.

Senators, I am in favor of correcting evils; and I stand before the Senate and before the people of the country and say that abuses practiced by the courts of the land should not continue. There has been racketeering on the part of some judges in the matter of the appointment of certain referees in bankruptcy; and such practices ought to be stopped. We ought to stop them. This bill, however, does not stop them in the slightest degree.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. McCARRAN. Does the Senator recall that a special committee, of which the able junior Senator from California [Mr. McADOO] was chairman was appointed by the United States Senate to investigate the very matter to which the Senator from Montana now refers—namely, corruption with reference to bankruptcy matters and fees allowed—and does the Senator further recall that the committee up to date has apparently done nothing to relieve that situation?

Mr. WHEELER. That is my understanding; and I understand that the Senator from Nevada has been vitally interested in the investigation.

Mr. President, not only do I take the position I have just described but I should be willing to go so far as to say that no Member of the Senate and no Member of the House should be permitted to appear before any Federal judge who was appointed to the bench while such Member of Congress was in the Congress; and I would even go further than that and say that no Member of Congress should practice in the Federal courts, if it is desired to go that far. However, that evil would not be corrected by this bill. The law's delays would not be overcome by increasing the number of members of the Supreme Court. On the contrary, let me quote the President of the United States himself on that subject.

While my clerk is looking for the particular memorandum in question, let me call the Senate's attention further to the subject of the particular needs of the time. The State of Nebraska passed a law to the effect that the German language should not be taught in the schools of Nebraska. The State of Nebraska thought that was in accordance with the needs of the time.

That occurred during the Great War hysteria, when people were seeing bogeymen, and when they wanted every man who had a German name to be sent to the penitentiary because of his name. But the Supreme Court of the United States, bad as its members may be, and having great politicians among its members, as some distinguished Senators have pointed them out to be, said that law was contrary to the Constitution of the United States.

Then a case arose concerning one Angelo Herndon down in Georgia who was a Communist, and was found with Communist literature in his pocket. He was arrested under an old statute in the State of Georgia duly enacted by the legislature of that State. The Georgia Supreme Court upheld his conviction, and sentence of 18 years' imprisonment for "having incited to insurrection." The Supreme Court of the United States, removed as it was from mob hysteria, freed him. Of course, the Court disagreed with his political philosophy, but notwithstanding that fact it turned him loose because it said his arrest, prosecution, and trial were contrary to the Constitution of the United States of America.

What were the needs of the times during the reconstruction era following the Civil War? Senators from the South will find that at some time a man will come here as President of the United States who will say to southern Senators and to their States that the needs of the times require action which is going seriously to affect the economic life of their States and their people. Make no mistake about it.

So, my friends, the needs of the times, I repeat, are like shifting sands upon the beach. The needs of the times are one thing today and something else tomorrow. When men are appointed upon the Supreme Court Bench to interpret the Constitution to meet the needs of the times, I say that a step is being taken which is reactionary. A step is being taken which, while it is within the letter of the Constitution, is against the spirit of the Constitution, and I defy anyone who knows the difference between the spirit of the law and the letter of the law to deny that statement.

I think I have once before quoted to this body a statement made by the President of the United States on the question of increasing the Supreme Court of the United States to meet the needs of the times. Why should I be accused of breaking the heart of the President, why should I be accused of being in bad company, when I agree now with the statement which the President of the United States made a few years ago? This is what he said in 1933:

> In the face of this congestion the remedy commonly proposed is to add new judges or new courts, but it will readily be seen that, if the problem is what I have stated it to be, such a so-called remedy merely aggravates the complaint. There are, of course, legitimate demands for additional judicial manpower in sections where the population has grown rapidly. But it is easy to see that to apply this remedy in all cases is to add to the ravages of the disease, to contribute to the confusion, and, what is profoundly important at this time, to burden still further an already seriously embarrassed taxpayer.

Senators were told that they rode in on the coattails of the President of the United States and that they ought to support him for that reason; that they ought to support the measure because of party loyalty; that they ought to support the bill because some economic royalist disagrees with the President; that they ought to support the measure because some newspaper or some Republican says it is wrong; that they ought to be intimidated and afraid to vote their own convictions. Yes; but who first said that which we who oppose the measure are now saying? The President of the United States, in 1933. When Senators vote against this bill to increase the Supreme Court to "meet the needs of the times", to make it subservient, they are only doing what the President of the United States in 1933 said was the right thing to do. He said it before the Republicans said it. He said it before any of the newspapers he is now criticizing said it. He said it before those now opposed to him in this matter said it. Am I attacking the President of the United States because I am agreeing with what he said in 1933?

Is every Democrat who is opposed to the pending measure trying to break up the Democratic Party because he agrees with what the President said in 1933?

Certainly I want to stand behind the President of the United States. I challenge any Member of the Senate to point to anyone who has stood by the President to a greater degree or tried more earnestly to help secure the enactment of legislation desired by him or supported him in connection with more legislative matters than I have.

It is distressing to have to stand up here and disagree with the President of the United States, with any President of the United States, upon a vital, fundamental issue before the country. Particularly is it distressing for a Senator of the United States to have to stand up and disagree with the President of the United States when he is of his own party. It is even more distressing to me to have to stand up here and disagree with the President of the United States when he has been a personal friend of mine over many years. There is no judgeship dangling before my face, though. [Laughter.] I am not seeking a place upon the circuit court of appeals or upon any other court. The President has been most generous in his treatment of me; he has probably been as friendly to me as he has to any other Member of this body; but there comes a time in the life of every man, whether he was elected on the coattails of the President or not, when his own conscience must tell him whether or not he is going blindly to support the President.

I was the first Member of the Senate to come out openly and espouse Mr. Roosevelt's cause. Where were some of my Democratic colleagues when I was out beating the brush over the country trying to line up delegates in the preconvention campaign? Where were they in Chicago? Where were they after the convention in Chicago? Some of them thought that the lightning was going to strike them in Chicago. [Laughter.]

Not only that, Mr. President, but when some man issues a statement prepared by the Democratic National Committee indicating that I am not a friend of the President of the United States, let me call attention to the fact that I went out to the Chicago convention and spent 10 days there, at my own expense, fighting for Mr. Roosevelt's nomination. I know what went on there; I know what went on on the inside; and I know where every man who is now a Member of the Senate stood in that convention and how he felt with reference to the nomination of Mr. Roosevelt. I know how many of the people who are now on the pay roll of the Government stood at that time, people who now call themselves great liberals. They are liberals only because they think it is popular to be liberal.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. And it pays.

Mr. WHEELER. And, as the Senator from Minnesota suggests, it pays to be liberal. One can afford to be liberal when he is on the public pay roll.

I know it is being whispered around that Senator WHEELER has changed his economic views; that he has gone back on the President; but I will be fighting the liberal cause when many of the so-called officeholding liberals who are now in Washington will have gone back to the caves of Wall Street to work for the economic royalists.

When does a man become an economic royalist? Does he become one when he fails to support an administration proposal here in Congress? I noticed in this morning's newspapers an item to the effect that the president of the great United States Steel Corporation might be appointed to some diplomatic post. A great liberal; a great progressive! When did he cease to be an economic royalist and become a great progressive liberal? Where were some of these men in 1924? They were supporting the man who they now denounce as the great chief of the Liberty League. Where were they? They were not found espousing the progressive cause at that time, and they will not be found espousing it when it ceases to pay and the patronage stops and the jobs stop and when they cannot get any more projects for their States. Their liberalism continues just so long as they get patronage, pap, and jobs.

Of course, Mr. President, there have been abuses in the Court. I have been one who has disagreed with them, and I expect to disagree with them again, but I am unwilling, on the basis of some specious argument or of some subterfuge that defies the spirit of the Constitution to participate in setting one of the most dangerous precedents that has ever been conceived by this Congress or any other. I am unwilling to go along with a proposal of this kind even if it may be said of me that I am associating with Republicans on the other side.

It is suggested by a Senator near me that half the present Cabinet are Republicans. The Secretary of the Interior went out and made a speech in Chicago in which he referred to "pseudo liberals" and said something about Democrats. I have always had a high regard for the Secretary of the Interior, but it ill behooves him to talk about Democrats and to say anything about somebody trying to break up the Democratic Party or to destroy the Democratic Party. I do not like to become personal in matters of this kind, but when men try to malign others because they disagree with them I say they have no business doing it; they have no business spending the money of the National Democratic Party or the Federal Government to malign Members of the Congress who do not happen to agree upon one issue with the President of the United States.

The bill now pending just does not provide properly for doing what the President wants to do. I give all due credit to the President of the United States for the great things he has accomplished and done since 1933.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me to make a suggestion merely for the purpose of information?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. DUFFY in the chair). Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield for a question.

Mr. LEWIS. So far as Secretary Ickes is concerned, while I was not his supporter, I think, in fairness, it should be said that I think the Senator from Montana misunderstood him.

Mr. WHEELER. I am sorry to say that, under the ruling, I cannot permit the Senator to make a statement. I should be glad to let the Senator say what he desires, but I am not permitted to do so under the rules invoked by our distinguished leader.

Mr. LEWIS. I am afraid the Secretary of the Interior has been misquoted, and I wanted to set the matter straight.

Mr. WHEELER. I am not responsible for the interruption.

Now, Mr. President, I wish to read a quotation from Woodrow Wilson because the distinguished Senator from Indiana [Mr. MINTON], in a burst of oratory last night, said he wanted to have his President look at the shrine of Woodrow Wilson. I also want him to do so. The Senator from Indiana said he wanted to think of the President as looking at the shrine of George Washington at Mount Vernon and at the shrine of Abraham Lincoln. It was a great burst of oratory. Woodrow Wilson said:

> The Constitution provides that all judges of the United States shall hold their office during good behavior, but Congress could readily overcome a hostile majority in any court or in any set of courts, even in the Supreme Court itself, by a sufficient increase in the number of judges and an adroit manipulation of jurisdiction, and could, with the assistance of the President, make them up to suit his own purposes.

Oh, yes, I want the President to consider that statement of Woodrow Wilson, and I want him to remember it. I also want him to remember what George Washington said:

> The basis of our political system is the right of the people to make and to alter their constitution of government. But the Constitution which at any time exists, until changed by an explicit and authentic act of the whole people, is sacredly obligatory on all. * * * Toward the preservation of your Government and the permanency of your present happy state it is requisite * * * that you resist with care the spirit of innovation upon its principles, however specious the pretext. One method of assault may be to effect, in the forms of the Constitution, alterations which will impair the energy of the system, and thus to undermine what cannot be directly overthrown.

Then I want him to remember what Mr. Justice Story said:

> The addition to our number has most sensibly affected our facility as well as the rapidity of doing business. * * * We found ourselves often involved in long and very tedious debates. I verily believe that if there were 12 judges we should do no business at all or at least very little.

Again, George Washington said:

> If, in the opinion of the people, the distribution or modification of the constitutional powers be in any particular wrong, let it be corrected by an amendment in the way which the Constitution designates. But let there be no change by usurpation—

Who used the word "usurpation"? George Washington used it. The Father of his Country said, "Let there be no change by usurpation", and continued:

> For though this in one instance may be the instrument of good, it is a customary weapon by which free governments are destroyed. The precedent must always greatly overbalance in permanent evil any partial or transient benefit which the use can at any time yield.

Oh, yes, George Washington was seeing the man on the stair when no one was there when he was talking about "usurpation." When he was talking about "usurpation" by increasing the Supreme Court he was all wrong! He was just setting up a bogey man when he said the Constitution of the Government could be destroyed upon usurping the powers of the Supreme Court.

Is it possible any Member of the Senate is so naive that he does not know that the purpose and the only purpose of the bill to increase the membership of the Supreme Court is to have an interpretation placed on the Constitution in accordance with the views of the majority of the Congress of the United States at the present time?

In a burst of oratory my friend the Senator from Indiana [Mr. MINTON] said, "I want him to look to the shrine of Thomas Jefferson." Let us see what Thomas Jefferson said. He said:

> The dignity and stability of government in all its branches, the morals of the people and every blessing of society depend so much upon an upright and skillful administration of justice that the judicial power ought to be distinct from both the legislative and executive, and independent of both, as both should be checks upon that.

I believe the Senator from Indiana also referred to Andrew Jackson. Let us see what Andrew Jackson said. He said:

> We should recollect that that instrument (the Constitution) provides within itself the mode of its amendment, and that there is, therefore, no excuse for the assumption of doubtful powers by the general Government.

He was a great old Tory, a great economic royalist. He sold out to Wall Street when he expressed those views.

He continued:

> If those which are clearly granted shall be found incompetent to the ends of its creation, it can at any time apply for their enlargement; and there is no probability that such an application, if founded on the public interest, will ever be refused.
> When an honest observance of constitutional compacts cannot be obtained from communities like ours, it need not be anticipated elsewhere, and the cause in which there has been so much martyrdom, and from which so much was expected by the friends of liberty, may be abandoned, and the degrading truth that man is unfit for self-government admitted. And this will be the case if expediency be made a rule of construction in interpreting the Constitution. Power in no government could desire a better shield for the insidious advances which it is ever ready to make upon the checks that are designed to restrain its action.
> The difficulty and supposed impracticability of obtaining an amendment of the Constitution in this respect is, I firmly believe, in a great degree unfounded.

Certainly, the great Andrew Jackson had been consulting and cavorting with Republicans. He was not just a true man of the people in expressing those views.

He continued:

> The time has never yet been when the patriotism and intelligence of the American people were not fully equal to the greatest exigency, and it never will when the subject calling forth their interposition is plainly presented to them.
> If experience points out the necessity for an enlargement of these powers, let us apply for it to those for whose benefit it is to be exercised, and not undermine the whole system by a resort to overstrained construction.

So, Mr. President, we find George Washington, Andrew Jackson, Abraham Lincoln, Thomas Jefferson, and all the other great leaders denouncing such a proposal, and we find George Washington using the word "usurpation." Yet it has been said that this bill proposes simply an "infusion" of new blood. I say it is not merely an infusion of new blood, but it is a transfusion of blood, and that transfusion of blood into the Court will only add confusion to the Nation and to our people. The proponents of the bill want a transfusion of blood, and they want that blood which is to be transfused to match their own blood. Could any other conclusion be reached upon the arguments made by the able Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. GUFFEY]?

No one in high authority has refuted the suggestion, no one has disputed the idea that what is wanted is a Court to "meet the needs of the times", better to interpret the Constitution as they wish.

The Senator from Kentucky [Mr. LOGAN] said the other day that what is wanted is not a Court which believes in the views of Thomas Jefferson, not a Court which believes in the principles of Andrew Jackson, but a Court which believes in the principles of Alexander Hamilton and John Marshall. I have not any objection. I heartily agree that whether we want it or not we are going to have a more centralized government in the city of Washington. We all dislike bureaucracy, and every administration goes out in the campaign and denounces bureaucracy, but each and every one adds to that bureaucracy. Why is that done? It is because of the concentration of wealth that is going on, and because the State legislatures cannot possibly regulate many of the great corporations; so it has to be done by the Federal Government here in Washington. I dislike it, and everybody else dislikes it; but it is not a question of what we like. It is a matter that is going to be forced on the people of the country by the economic conditions which have developed.

But when we want to amend the Constitution, let us not amend it by subterfuge. Let us do it in the way that every great President of the United States—including Washington, Jefferson, Jackson, and Wilson—has said it should be done. Let us do it under the Constitution. Let us have the amendment submitted to the people of the country. Let us have a vote upon it by the people. Let us not be afraid of it.

It was my recollection that the Attorney General of the United States, somewhere in one of his speeches, stated that the Supreme Court needed an infusion of new blood, or something to that effect, because of the age of the members of the Court, or that the courts of the country in general needed such an infusion. Nobody has stood upon the floor of the Senate, however, and said that any man upon the Supreme Bench is incompetent because of his age.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. McCARRAN. Does the Senator realize the difference between the terms "new blood" and "young blood", as used interchangeably by the President and by the Attorney General and others in discussing this subject? I should like very much to have the Senator express himself on that subject.

Mr. WHEELER. I thank the Senator. I assume that the Senator's interruption is in the nature of a question.

Mr. McCARRAN. I assumed that it was.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands that the Senator from Nevada asked a question.

Mr. WHEELER. In these technical days I desire to be careful that the interruptions are questions. The question was, as I understood the Senator from Nevada, whether a distinction had been made between "new blood" and "young blood."

First, I wish to continue and say that no one has said that any man upon the Supreme Bench is incompetent by reason of his age; that he is mentally incapacitated. I do not think any man, not even the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. GUFFEY], would charge that Chief Justice Hughes is mentally incompetent by reason of age. I do not think he would charge that Mr. Justice Butler, or Mr. Justice Sutherland, or Mr. Justice Brandeis—who is 80 years old—is mentally incompetent because of his age.

If none of them are mentally incompetent because they have reached a certain age, why say anything about age at the present time? Why try to put them off the Supreme Bench because they are 70 or more years of age, or to put somebody in their place to help them out because they have reached the age of 70 years? And then why change the age limit to 75 years?

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. McCARRAN. I rise to a point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state the point of order.

Mr. McCARRAN. The interpretation of the rules has been invoked in the Senate. May a Senator rise during the course of discussion by another Senator and ask a third Senator a question?

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President——

Mr. McCARRAN. I asked for a ruling by the Chair. I did not ask for a ruling by the leader.

Mr. WHEELER. Under the rule the Senator from Arkansas has invoked, I am afraid I should not be permitted to let him answer the question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Montana has the floor. Does he yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. WHEELER. I refuse to yield except for a question. That rule was expressly invoked by the Senator from Arkansas, and I invoke it upon the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. ROBINSON. That is so. [Laughter.]

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. DUFFY in the chair). The Chair thinks the point of order is in the nature of a parliamentary inquiry. In answer to the query of the Senator from Nevada, the present occupant of the Chair will say that a Senator having the floor may not yield for that purpose.

Mr. McCARRAN. In other words, am I to understand the Chair to rule that, though the Senator from Montana has asked the Senator from Pennsylvania a question which the Senator from Pennsylvania has refused to answer, another Senator may not ask the question through the Senator having the floor?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The present occupant of the Chair believes that the Senator having the floor may not yield for that purpose.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, I was saying that no Member of the Senate of the United States has stood up here in his place and contended for one moment that any member of the present Supreme Court is either unfit or unable to carry on the duties of his office. If it is desired to put men off the Court merely because they are aged, why not point out some man on the Supreme bench who is incapable of performing his duty? If there is no man on the Supreme Bench who is incapable of performing his duty by reason of age, no man there but who can carry on, no man there but who has ability and is able to carry on, why hold them up to scorn before the country? Why humiliate them? Why hold them up before the people of the United States and say, "We want to put another man on the Supreme Bench in Mr. Hughes' place because Mr. Hughes is an aged politician. He ran for President of the United States of America on the Republican ticket"?

What Democrat is there in this body who can go before his people and say, "I wanted to put somebody on the Supreme Bench alongside Mr. Hughes because Mr. Hughes is a politician, because he ran for the Presidency of the United States on the Republican ticket"? Stand up in your place and answer if there is one.

Mr. Justice Brandeis is the oldest man upon the Supreme Bench. He is 80 years of age. For weeks the confirmation of Mr. Justice Brandeis was opposed in this body because he was known as a liberal when he was appointed by President Wilson. A bitter fight was made against him because he was looked upon as a great fighter for the liberal cause, and a determined effort was made to prevent the confirmation of his nomination. He had been fighting for the liberal cause in Massachusetts and throughout the Nation, uncovering the corruption in the old Ballinger case in the Interior Department, fighting the United Shoe Machinery Co. monopoly in the State of Massachusetts, which affected every single little manufacturer in that State and in the other New England States, fighting on the side of the ordinary man, the poor man. He was known as the people's lawyer of the State of Massachusetts. He defended, without pay, men charged with crime. He took up, without compensation or thought of compensation, the defense of the under dog from one end of the country to the other. Since he has been a member of the Supreme Court of the United States he has written more dissenting liberal opinions in favor of the masses of the people than has any other Justice, and now the Democratic Party, because it has the power, wants to humiliate him.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. I desire to ask the Senator a hypothetical question. If the Senator from Montana wanted to remove from the Supreme Court Mr. Justice Butler, Mr. Justice McReynolds, and Mr. Justice Sutherland, but did not care anything about removing Mr. Justice Brandeis, how would he remove those three unless he also removed Mr. Justice Brandeis at the same time?

Mr. WHEELER. I am glad the Senator asked me that question. It is not desired to get Mr. Justice Brandeis off the Bench. The Democratic Party does not want to get him off the Bench. The President does not want to get him off the Bench. Of course, they do not want to humiliate him. The men they want to get off the Bench are Justices Butler, McReynolds, Sutherland, and Hughes. The way the proponents of the bill could do it, if they dared to do it, would be to say, "No part of the appropriation contained in the appropriation bill shall be used to pay the salaries of these men", and just refuse to appropriate money for them, but they do not dare do that. They cannot reduce their salaries, but Congress has the power to refuse to appropriate money for the salary of the President of the United States, for the executive branch, and for the judicial branch. That would be within the Constitution; it would be constitutional, but it would be against the spirit of the Constitution, and it would be immoral to attempt to do it. In trying to get Chief Justice Hughes and other Justices off the Bench, in trying to humiliate them, those behind the pending bill are willing to humiliate a great liberal, and to do it in the name of liberalism in the United States, to do it in the name of progressivism, to do it under the guise of an attempt to do something for the people of the United States.

I am not surprised that someone should say, "A plague on both your houses." Shakespeare used that phrase in Romeo and Juliet. He did not apply it to a labor organization, however, or to a steel trust.

Mr. President, this proposal is not urged on account of the age of the Justices; it is not urged because they are not up with their work. The Solicitor General says they are up with their work, and Chief Justice Hughes in his letter to me pointed out beyond contradiction that the Supreme Court was current with its work, and that the Court never adjourned until every case that was ready for trial had been argued. So that is not the reason. The bill is not urged because the Judges refuse to hear six or seven hundred petitions for writs of certiorari. It is not urged because they denied petitions for certiorari filed by poor people, for, as I pointed out once before, it is not the poor people who apply to the Supreme Court for such writs. It is not the poor man, it is not the farmer whose cattle are killed by the North Western trains, or the Southern trains, or the Seaboard Air Line trains. He goes into the Federal district court and sues the railroad company and obtains a judgment against it for the loss of his stock, or damage to his stock. The railroad employee working upon the road sues for damages in the Federal court, or some man sues because he is run over by a train at a grade crossing. He goes into the Federal court and obtains a judgment in that court.

Who appeals? It is the railroad companies which appeal. They are the ones who want delay; they are the ones who have the long purse. They lose in the district court, and in the circuit court of appeals the judgment is affirmed. When it is affirmed, the railroad company files a petition for a writ of certiorari, and the Supreme Court denies the petition. It says, "You have had your day in court in the district court, and you have had your day in court in the circuit court of appeals." So it is not the poor individual, ninety-nine times out of a hundred, who goes to the Supreme Court with a petition for writ of certiorari. Any trial lawyer who has had any experience knows that what I state is accurate.

Now, let us take the other side. A stockman or a farmer loses his case before a jury. Nine times out of 10 he does not appeal the case to the circuit court of appeals because he has not the money, and his lawyer cannot afford to take the appeal. Assume he does finally raise sufficient money to appeal to the circuit court of appeals, and he loses there. Does he file a petition for a writ of certiorari with the Supreme Court? I challenge anyone to look at the records of the Supreme Court and find where a workingman, or a farmer, or a widow, or an orphan has petitioned the Supreme Court for a writ of certiorari to bring up a case decided against him in the circuit court of appeals. Such cases will not be found, because they are not there.

So when there is an appeal to the prejudices of the American public, when there is an effort to make them think their representatives here are pleading in the interest of the poor and downtrodden widow, when there is talk about delay, it will be found that the denial of such petitions by the Supreme Court has meant speeding up the litigation in this country rather than delaying it. Whoever advised the President on this subject did not know very much about the practice of law in the Federal courts or he never would have written such a letter. I am not condemning the President. I say that he has been misinformed and misadvised with reference to this whole subject. In the very nature of things he has to depend upon advisers, and he has gotten some very poor advice in this matter. Someone lost some cases and was disappointed. Is the Congress of the United States to wreak its vengeance upon individual members of the Supreme Court of the United States because laws have not been construed as we should like to have them construed? Others may take such a course, but I shall not be a party to it.

Mr. President, there is nothing to the argument about the law's delay, so far as the Supreme Court of the United States is concerned; nothing to the charge that the Court is back in its work; nothing to the contentions about age and liberalism, because some of the most liberal men upon the Supreme Court are the oldest, and some of the most liberal men in this body have been the oldest Members of the Senate. I recall that the senior Senator La Follette once said to me that he was more progressive and more liberal in the latter days of his life than he was in the earlier days. Who are looked upon as about the most liberal men in this body? There is the senior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS], one of the oldest men in the body; there is the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON]; there is the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] all looked upon as great liberals and great progressives. The idea of saying that because one is old he shall be proscribed!

Mr. President, in this country no party can survive if it is based upon political bigotry, and no party should survive that bases its existence upon an effort to proscribe men because of their age. No true liberal proscribes a man on account of his race, his color, his creed, or his age; and that is what is being sought by the pending bill.

I have not always agreed with Chief Justice Hughes. I voted against the confirmation of his nomination, as did a great many others. I made a mistake in so voting. I think Mr. Hughes will go down in history as a great Chief Justice. My distinguished colleague the senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] voted for his confirmation, and he was right and I was wrong. The Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] sent his pair from London for his confirmation, and he was right and I was wrong. Mr. Hughes has made a great Chief Justice, although I have not always agreed with his decisions. I have not always agreed with the decisions of many of the other Justices of the Supreme Court; but dare we, because we do not agree with their decisions, seek to punish them when they reach the age of 70 or the age of 75?

I think it has been generally recognized that my late colleague, Senator Walsh, was one of the ablest men who ever sat in this body, a great constitutional lawyer, a man who was opposed to the measure to regulate interstate commerce in bituminous coal, the same measure known during this session as the Guffey bill, because he thought it was unconstitutional. If anyone doubts my statement about that, let him ask Mr. William Murray about it, because he came to me and pleaded with me to urge Senator Walsh to vote for it, but Senator Walsh refused, because, in his judgment, it was unconstitutional.

Mr. President, when he was requested to accept the appointment to be Attorney General of the United States he was 74 years of age. That appointment was offered to him by the present President of the United States of America.

If you are going to proscribe a man from being on the Supreme Court because he is old, why should you beseech a man when he is 74 years of age to accept the position of Attorney General of the United States, to accept one of the most difficult places in the Government to fill, a place in the President's Cabinet?

I wish to say to the Senate that, in my humble opinion, had the late Senator Walsh been Attorney General of the United States, the history of the United States and the history of some of the cases which went before the Supreme Court would have been quite different than they have been in the past few years.

The late Senator Walsh was a great progressive and a great liberal and a great lawyer; but never would you have heard from him an utterance proscribing a man because of his opinions, thought, or religion. He was beloved in my State by all.

Never would he have been heard to proscribe a man on account of his religion; never would he have proscribed a man on account of his race; never would he have proscribed a man on account of his age. He never would have proscribed a man on account of his opinion. He respected those who disagreed with him. He was not intolerant politically, or economically, and he was not intolerant of other people's opinions.

Then we have the Secretary of the Navy. Why not proscribe him because he is old? He is over 70 years of age.

Why not proscribe Members of the Senate because of their age, if most men are incompetent when they are over 70?

But, Mr. President, I say that that is not the reason for urging the passage of this measure. No Senator, I repeat, has dared to stand upon the floor of the Senate and say that a single member of the Supreme Court cannot do his work because of his age.

So what is the reason for the proposed action? Stripped of all its subterfuge, stripped of all its camouflage, stripped naked and held up to public gaze, there is just one reason for it: "We want a Court which will be subservient to us. We want to usurp the powers of the Supreme Court. We want to usurp the functions of an independent branch of the Government."

If the advocates of the bill are fighting for principles, and want an infusion of new blood, that is quite different; but if they are fighting for principles they will say that the present members of the Supreme Court should be exempted from the operation of the bill.

But that is not the reason for the proposed action. Its advocates want it because they do not like some of the opinions that have been rendered.

Mr. President, I saw a Republican landslide in 1920. I saw another Republican landslide in 1924. I saw another Republican landslide in 1928. I saw an overwhelming majority of Republicans in both branches of the Congress of the United States. I saw Mr. Harding come in as President when he thought he had a mandate from the people of the country, and when he had the support of both branches of the Congress. Such a thing may happen again, and it may happen that some of the Members of the Senate who have been appealed to because they came in on the coattails of a Democratic President will go out on the coattails of a Democratic President.

Mr. President, Mr. Harding put Mr. Daugherty in as Attorney General of the United States. Suppose we now set a precedent and say, "Because we have the power, we are going to pack the Supreme Court to get the decisions we want." What would an incoming Republican administration be justified in doing? They would be justified in saying, "You fellows put judges on the bench to make the Court subservient to you, in order to get favorable decisions, and we will do the same thing. We will add to the membership of the Court in order that we may have favorable decisions. Instead of making the membership of the Court 15, we will make it 20. We will reduce the age from 75 to 70 or 65, in order to get rid of the men you have placed on the bench."

What would every progressive, what would every liberal in this body do? They would be standing on their feet denouncing a Harding or a Hoover or anybody else who would propose such a thing. They would say, "You are destroying the Constitution. You are setting up dictatorial powers." They would make the strongest possible argument against such action, and in what they would say they would be truthful and honest.

Senators are told to stand by the measure because of party loyalty. They are asked to favor it because a crisis exists. What crisis? We have not heard much about it lately.

No, Mr. President, this bill cannot be justified in any sense of the word. If the Constitution did not provide the means for a change, if there were no way by which the Constitution could be amended, if there were no way by which the people of the country could pass upon the question, if it could not be submitted to the people of the country so they could vote upon it, there might be some excuse for the proposed action.

Mr. President, the framers of the Constitution realized that this country might change, that it might need constitutional amendments to meet changed economic conditions, and they provided the way. They said it could be done, and that we could do it now, and it has been held that we could specify the time and the manner in which constitutional amendments might be adopted.

It is urged that the proposed action will expedite the business of the Court. The President of the United States, in the message I read to the Senate a few moments ago, said it would only lead to confusion. Mr. Justice Story said that if there were 12 members upon the bench, he feared the Court would never get any work done. Professor Frankfurter, of Harvard University, and Mr. Landis, head of the Securities and Exchange Commission, wrote a book in which they stated that adding to the membership of the Court would impair its efficiency.

Chief Justice Hughes, in his letter, said that if the membership of the Court were increased there would be more Justices to hear the cases, more Justices to argue questions, more Justices to convince, and that the addition of new members to the Supreme Court would only impair its efficiency.

So there is not a single, solitary argument in favor of this bill excepting one based upon the necessity to change the decisions of the Supreme Court, thus to change the Constitution by interpretation.

I say to you, Mr. President, while, strictly speaking, the pending proposal is within the letter of the law, it is against the spirit of the Constitution, and I have such eminent authority for that statement as the President of the United States when he speaks of the violations of the spirit of the income-tax law.

I could go on, Mr. President, but I do not wish to take up the time of the Senate any longer, except to say that I resent certain statements which have been made, not so far as I am concerned, because whatever is said about me makes little difference. I have had so many things said about me so many times that accusations, whatever they may be, roll off me very easily. But I do resent that some of my colleagues in the Senate of the United States who have supported the President loyally, who have campaigned for him, who have fought for him, should be denounced as desiring to destroy the President of the United States by some paid public officials who never have had to go out and fight a battle before the people of the country themselves, who could not be elected dog catcher in their own community if they had to run for such an office. Yet they set themselves up and denounce Members of the Senate and Members of the other House and break into the public press or go out and make speeches before our constituents against us because we have the temerity to vote our own honest convictions upon public questions confronting the American people.

We want to break up the Democratic Party. Somebody is going to raise $10,000,000 to finance a new party; somebody is going to raise a hundred million dollars or even more in this country to bring about such a dictatorship as was talked about by our Ambassador or professor in Berlin recently. Of course, that is all nonsense. That is just seeking to draw a red herring across the trail.

Mr. President, in closing I say that we cannot afford to set such a precedent as the enactment of the pending measure would set. We cannot afford to denounce the members of the Supreme Court and hold them up to ridicule when they are carrying on and voting their honest convictions, whether we agree with them or whether we do not.

The distinguished Senator from Indiana said the members of the Supreme Court are themselves packing the Supreme Court. Well, they were appointed for life. Can the Senator look into their innermost souls and say they are only staying on the Supreme Court in order to pack it? Can the Senator look into the soul and read the mind of Justice Brandeis and say he is staying on the Court because he wants to pack it in favor of the President, and that Justice Hughes wants to stay on the Court in order to pack it in favor of or against the President? I should like to have the Senator tell me how he knows that Justice Sutherland is staying on the Court just to vote against the President. I should like to have him tell me how he knows any one of the present Justices are remaining on the Court in order to pack the Court against the President of the United States. Let the Senator write that down in his notebook and tell me how he knows it when his time comes.

Mr. President, one by one the arguments with reference to the six-man bill were demolished until there was an overwhelming majority in the Senate against that bill, and nobody at heart was for it. Everyone knows that what I am saying is true. So, no one at heart is for the pending bill, because, as everyone knows, it merely provides a slow packing process. As a matter of fact, if I had to choose between packing the Court with six Justices and the method proposed by this bill, I would prefer to pack it with the six at once rather than to pack it in the way which is now proposed. To pack the Court is the reason for the pending bill; and, if we are going to do it, let us put on the six men at once.

We were told there would be no compromise; that we would have to vote it up or vote it down; that no compromise suggestion would be listened to, and that it was "in the bag."

We are now told that the proponents of the measure have got the votes and they are going to try to jam it through. They are going to shut off debate. They have invoked an old rule that I have never before seen invoked in this body during the first 2 or 3 days of debate on a measure, a rule that is violated all the time by every Member of the Senate with impunity. Yet we are told that the proponents of the measure are going to try to force us, pound us, knock the bill down our throat, if you please, in order to put it through. Well, those who are opposed to it will not be the losers if the supporters of the bill should succeed in passing it. The only man who can lose in a fight of that kind is the President of the United States himself.

As I have previously said, I give the President all credit for the great things he has accomplished during the last 4 years for the people of this Nation. We have given him more power than any President of the United States has ever had in peacetime or in war. He has powers that no other President ever had. We delegated to him the power to issue currency and to fix and regulate the value thereof.

He can raise or lower the gold content of the dollar. He can issue $3,000,000,000 of currency. He can remonetize silver up to 16 to 1. He has $2,000,000,000 with which he can buy German marks, British bonds, French francs, or Japanese yen, or take any other course he may desire for the purpose of stabilizing our currency. He can raise or lower the tariff on practically everything that is produced in the United States. He can close the stock markets for a period of 30 days. We have just given him $1,500,000,000 for relief purposes, and he has wide discretionary power in its distribution. We have given him the power to say to the farmers of the country, "We will give you money for not producing crops", and $500,000,000 has been provided for that purpose. He can say to them, "Let this piece of land lie fallow and we will pay you for not planting it." We have given him the power over the economic life and destiny of the American people. He has a substantially subservient Congress. No man in the history of the United States, not even the Father of his Country, ever had reposed in him such vast and extraordinary power. We have given him the power to declare war. We have given him a power over treaties never given to any other President of the United States. He can say to one community, Denver for instance, "I will give you money for a project in your city", or he can say, "I will deny a project to your city." He has the power to say, "I will build a project in Houston, Tex., but I will deny a project to some other place in Texas."

He has a right to say to the people of the State of Illinois or the people of the city of Chicago, "I will build that parkway in your State or that subway in the city of Chicago at the behest of the political bosses of your city, or I will deny it at their behest." He has the right to say the same thing to the city of New York. I am not complaining. Conditions in the country were such that we had to give him that power and I am not complaining about the way he has used it.

But with a subservient Congress, with such tremendous power in the Executive, has not the time come in this Nation when we should say there is a line beyond which no man should pass? Has not the time come when we should say, "No matter how beloved you may be, no matter how profound and wonderful you may be, no matter how much your sympathies are with the masses of the people of the United States, no matter what you want to do, the time has come when we should say there is a line beyond which, under this American Government of ours and under our Constitution, no man shall pass."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is——

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Indiana is recognized.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. CLARK. There is pending before the Senate now the committee bill; also an amendment, in the nature of a substitute, offered by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON]; also an amendment to that substitute offered by the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY]. My parliamentary inquiry is, Which is now the pending question, the committee amendment to the original bill or the amendment of the Senator from Wyoming to the substitute proposed by the Senator from Arkansas?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY] has offered an amendment to the substitute.

Mr. CLARK. That is undoubtedly true, but there is also pending an amendment to the original bill. My parliamentary inquiry is, What is now before the Senate? The Chair just started to state the question and was interrupted by the Senator from Indiana taking the floor. What would have been the question stated by the Chair if no Senator had addressed himself to the Chair and taken the floor? Is the question on the committee amendment to the original bill, or is the question on the amendment of the Senator from Wyoming to the substitute of the Senator from Arkansas?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will rule that the committee amendment is before the Senate.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, I have been sitting here 3 hours listening to the brilliant address by the brilliant Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER]. I did not interrupt him in the course of his great speech. I do not want to be discourteous to anyone this afternoon, and I do not want to be partial in yielding or not yielding for questions. As I expect to speak only briefly, I shall not yield even for a question until I shall have concluded.

Mr. President, the distinguished Senator from Montana in opening his remarks did me the very great honor to refer to me—for, after all, it is an honor and a distinction even to be noticed by the great Senator from Montana. He referred in caustic vein to something I was quoted in the press as having said after his visit to the White House. We have an old saying in the hills of southern Indiana that "it is the galled jade that winces"; that is to say, if the old horse has a sore spot under the harness he winces when the harness touches the sore spot. [Laughter.]

The Senator from Montana for the most part, I think my colleagues will agree, gave us an exhibition of sweet-tempered speech, showing no rancor, no animosity, no ill-feeling toward anybody. He did speak with earnestness and sincerity, as is his customary manner, but surely no one would suspect that he was sore at anybody.

It was a great recitation he gave. For the larger part of 3 hours he occupied the floor reciting to the Senate the record he has made as a great liberal in the country. I am glad to subscribe to everything he said about himself. I entertain for him the same high opinion that he has of himself. [Laughter.] Back in the hills of southern Indiana a few years ago, obscure and far removed, I worshiped my hero, the liberal Senator from Montana. I worshiped him as he went forth on his gallant mission time after time, and charged against the bulwarks of intrenched wealth and greed and selfishness. I welcomed him home many nights when the shadows of evening were lengthening and he came in with a broken lance. But I never thought I would live to see the day when my hero, the liberal Senator from Montana, would be found on the floor of the United States Senate leading a solid phalanx of reactionary Republicans against the bulwark manned by the loyal sons of Democracy and captained by the greatest captain of Democracy this Nation has produced in 100 years.

I love the great Senator from Montana because he has been my ideal for so many years, and now I find myself unhappy to see him over there on the other side of the little green aisle fraternizing with the remnants of the Republican Party. [Laughter.] How much I wish he would come back home that we might kill the fatted calf for the prodigal son upon his return! I should be the first to welcome him back because I have stood, lo, these many years, worshiping at his shrine.

With that preliminary, I wish to address myself for a few minutes to some of the things my friend from Montana has had to say. He began by asking why the protests came from the masses about this bill when the President submitted it to the Congress of the United States. I do not know the masses from whom the Senator from Montana heard, but I can speak for the masses who wrote to me, sending their propaganda mail into my office when this bill was first proposed. My office received a lot of mail about the bill, mail supposed to come from the masses, in the early days of this controversy. I did not know them. They were not people with whom I was acquainted or that I knew in politics, so I sent the names back to my political friends in the counties of the States from which the petitions and letters came and asked that they be checked up. I found that 99.9 percent of them came from rock-ribbed, hard-working Republicans in those communities.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. MINTON. I decline to yield.

Those were the masses bombarding my office about this proposed legislation. They started to turn the fire of the big guns upon the administration about the bill and Hoover made one speech and quit. Mr. Landon went to New York primed and cocked to make a speech about it, but closed his mouth because they accepted the astute leadership of the great Republican leader on the other side of the aisle. They kept still and let the Democrats lead their own assault upon themselves.

I know whence came the great protests to my office. It was whipped-up propaganda. The Senator from Montana said there is a spirit of intolerance pervading the country, forsooth, because Farley goes out and speaks for the measure, because the Attorney General speaks for it, and because Harry Hopkins goes on the air and speaks for it. To the Senator from Montana that is intolerance in all its horrible aspects; but it is all right for the Liberty League and the American Bar Association and Mr. Gannett to go out working on the other side. Mr. Gannett came back from his villa at Palm Beach, Fla., to battle with the forces of the Lord. Think of it. Yet the Senator from Montana talks about the forces of intolerance in the country, when lined up on the side of the opposition to this proposal as originally made, as now made, or as it ever may be made, stand the American Liberty League, the American Bar Association, Gannett, and all the economic royalists of the country.

But the Senator from Montana, in response to a question from the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] made the most astounding admission that could possibly have been made by anybody opposing the proposition. What was that statement? It will be remembered that the Senator from Maryland said to the Senator from Montana:

Is it not a fact that if this bill did not apply to the present Supreme Court, you would be for it?

Now, think about that for a minute. The Senator from Montana said:

Yes; that is right.

What is there that is sacred about the venerable gentlemen across the way who now occupy the Supreme Bench?

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President——

Mr. MINTON. I decline to yield.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator declines to yield.

Mr. MINTON. I respect them, I revere them in their honorable positions, as any man does; but why limit any law so that it shall not apply to the present occupants of the Supreme Bench?

So the Senator from Montana says he is not against the principle of the bill, but he just does not want it to apply to the present Court. In other words, he is not against packing; he is just against unpacking.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MINTON. I decline to yield.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator declines to yield.

Mr. MINTON. Then, again, the Senator from Montana said in the course of his remarks, "Why not impeach Mr. Hughes if he is doing these frightful things?" Of course, the Senator answered his own question, because Mr. Hughes could not be impeached for his political views, even though he wrote them into an opinion of the Supreme Court of the United States. Nobody knows that better than does the distinguished Senator from Montana, who is a brilliant and able lawyer. Of course, Mr. Hughes could not be impeached for that; but the political opinions of the Chief Justice of the United States and the political machinations of the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court are of vital interest to the people of this country.

The Senator from Montana charged toward this side of the Chamber, and would have us impute to the Chief Justice of the United States that he was a cheap politician. Oh, no; he is not a cheap politician. He is a high-grade one, a high-paid one, and a very good one; and I propose to demonstrate, by reference to the about-face of the Supreme Court within the past few months, that there could not have been anything but politics in it.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Megill, one of its clerks, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7493) making appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1938, for civil functions administered by the War Department, and for other purposes; that the House had receded from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate nos. 1, 7, and 12 to the bill, and concurred therein, severally with an amendment, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate, and that the House insisted upon its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate no. 15 to the bill.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED

The message also announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the following enrolled bills, and they were signed by the President pro tempore:

S. 171. An act for the relief of George E. Shockley;
S. 885. An act for the relief of H. G. Harmon;
S. 1188. An act for the relief of J. E. Sammons;
S. 1257. An act for the relief of James H. Smith; and
S. 2266. An act for the relief of John A. Ensor.

APPROPRIATIONS FOR CIVIL FUNCTIONS OF WAR DEPARTMENT—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, will the Senator from Indiana yield for a privileged motion relating to the conference report?

Mr. MINTON. Yes; I will do that if I may do so without violating the rules.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. What is the request of the Senator?

Mr. COPELAND. I submit the conference report on the civil-affairs portion of the military bill, and move that it be adopted.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, my understanding is that it has been agreed that no business shall be transacted other than the consideration of the Court bill.

Mr. COPELAND. I think a conference report is a privileged matter.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will rule that this matter is privileged, and does not come within the rule laid down.

Mr. McCARRAN. Perhaps I am in error.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Rule VII, paragraph 7, permits action at this time, and the Chair will so hold.

Mr. COPELAND. I will say to my colleague that this is a privileged motion. It may be made at any time. It has to do wholly with a conference report. If it were a matter of ordinary business, of course it could not be received under the arrangement under which we are working.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The report will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the report, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7493) making appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1938, for civil functions administered by the War Department, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 6, 8, and 11.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 3, 13, 14, 16, and 17, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 2: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 2, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$148,200"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 5: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 5, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$9,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 10: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 10, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: Omit the matter stricken out by said amendment and on page 9 of the bill, in line 10, after the word "States" omit the comma and insert the word "and"; and the Senate agree to the same.

The committee of conference report in disagreement amendments numbered 1, 7, 12, and 15.

ROYAL S. COPELAND,
ELMER THOMAS,
JOHN H. OVERTON,
W. G. MCADOO,
MORRIS SHEPPARD,
WARREN R. AUSTIN,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

J. BUELL SNYDER,
D. D. TERRY,
JOE STARNES,
ROSS A. COLLINS,
CLARENCE CANNON,
D. LANE POWERS,
ALBERT J. ENGEL,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. COPELAND. I move the adoption of the report.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, I must object to the consideration of this matter by unanimous consent. If the Senator from New York desires to put it to a vote, that is a different question; but I shall object to a unanimous-consent agreement regarding it.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, it is a matter of utter indifference to me whether the report is adopted now or at some other time.

Mr. McCARRAN. I supposed it would be.

Mr. COPELAND. Of course, even under our rules—and we seem to be acting strictly according to rule now——

Mr. McCARRAN. I should like to have the Senator from New York specify what particular rule permits this report to come up at this time, except by unanimous consent.

Mr. COPELAND. All right; I am glad to do that. I refer to page 33 of the rules. I know we must be very technical now, Mr. President. Rule No. XXVII relates to reports of conference committees.

Mr. McCARRAN. Will the Senator kindly read the rule?

Mr. COPELAND (reading):

The presentation of reports of committees of conference——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator from New York suspend for a moment? Is the Chair to understand from the Senator from Nevada that he is making a point of order or objecting?

Mr. McCARRAN. I am making a point of order and objecting at the same time. I understood that the Senator from New York moved the adoption of the conference report. Of course, that motion is subject to debate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will rule that the Senator is out of order under rule XXVII, paragraph 1.

Mr. McCARRAN. My understanding is that I may debate the conference report, and I propose to debate it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair thinks the Senator is correct in that. It may be debated.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. I do not yield for any purpose except a privilege that the Senator from New York had a right to claim. I decline to yield to the Senator from Nevada.

Mr. COPELAND. The Senator from Indiana yielded to me to present a conference report. I have done so. Now I assume that the report is debatable.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, what is before the Senate?

Mr. MINTON. I decline to yield for that purpose.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. A motion may be made by the Senator from New York to take up the report. It is privileged.

Mr. COPELAND. That is the motion I have made.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That motion is not debatable.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, a point of order and a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. BLACK. The Senator from Indiana had the floor. As I understood, he yielded only in case this matter brought about no discussion, and I understand that he now says he does not yield the floor for this purpose.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator yielded for the purpose of taking up the report.

Mr. McCARRAN. I did not understand the Senator from Indiana to make that statement. The Senator from Alabama may thus construe the remarks of the Senator.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, a point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Washington will state it.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I raise the point of order that the Senator from Nevada is out of order because he is occupying the floor in the time of the Senator from Indiana.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now before the Senate is as to taking up the conference report. That question is not debatable. The Chair will now put the question.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I call for the regular order.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President——

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I rise to a point of order. The Senator from Indiana had the floor and was addressing the Senate. He could not be taken from the floor without his consent. He consented to the presentation of this report with the distinct understanding that he should not yield the floor. Now a motion is made which unquestionably would have the effect of taking him off the floor. I think the Senator from Indiana, to protect his right to continue and to conclude his remarks, must decline to yield. The Senator from Indiana cannot be required to yield for any purpose.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nevada will state the parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. McCARRAN. Has not the Senator from Indiana already yielded?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator yielded for the purpose of taking up the report. A motion was made which is a privileged motion and not subject to debate.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, may I ask another question as a parliamentary inquiry? Did the Senator state that he yielded with the understanding that the report should not be a matter for discussion? The question of adopting a conference report is always open to debate.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I wish to submit a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. McCARRAN. May I have my inquiry replied to first, before the leader takes it up? I know the leader always leads, but on this occasion I should like first to have a reply to my inquiry.

Mr. ROBINSON. Very well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state that he understood the Senator from Indiana to yield merely for the purpose of taking up the conference report, and with the idea that he would not lose the floor. Of course, if there is to be debate on the conference report, the Chair presumes the Senator did not yield.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President——

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, I decline to yield to the Senator from Nevada for any purpose at this time.

Mr. McCARRAN. I did not ask the Senator to yield, and I do not now ask him to yield; but I question the right of this body to take up a matter while the Senator from Indiana has the floor and while we are under the rule that is applied.

Mr. MINTON. I ask for the ruling of the Chair, and I do not yield to the Senator from Nevada.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Regular order!

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, it is clearly the rule of the Senate—and, of course, we are observing the rule—that the presentation of reports of committees of conference shall always be in order. I have presented the report, and moved its adoption.

Mr. McCARRAN. I object——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Rule XXVII provides:

The presentation of reports of committees of conference shall always be in order, except when the Journal is being read or a question of order or a motion to adjourn is pending, or while the Senate is dividing.

The Senator from Indiana, the Chair assumes, has the right to refuse to yield further if he so desires.

Mr. MINTON. I certainly want to exercise that right, because I had no intention of yielding if my yielding would take me off the floor. I thought I might yield to accommodate the Senator from New York to present a privileged motion, and that then I might proceed; but if yielding for that purpose was to take me off the floor, I had no intention of doing it, and if the ruling of the Chair is that it does, I stand upon my protective assertion.

Mr. McCARRAN. Regardless of——

Mr. MINTON. I do not yield to the Senator from Nevada for the purpose for which he now rises.

Mr. McCARRAN. A parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. MINTON. I do not yield for the purpose of a parliamentary inquiry. [Laughter.]

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator may state his parliamentary inquiry, whether there is a yielding or not.

Mr. McCARRAN. What is before the Senate of the United States at this time? Will the Chair kindly state what is before the Senate at this time?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair may state that the Senator from Indiana yielded, and he has now withdrawn his determination to yield. The Senator from Indiana now has the floor and may proceed with his speech.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I demand the regular order.

Mr. GEORGE. A point of order.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President——

Mr. GEORGE. A point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. MINTON. I do not yield.

Mr. GEORGE. I make a point of order in my own right.

Mr. MINTON. I want to get a ruling upon whether the Senator has a right to make it.

Mr. GEORGE. I make it now.

Mr. MINTON. Without the consent of the Senator who has the floor.

Mr. GEORGE. I rise to a point of order.

Mr. MINTON. Because the Chair ruled yesterday that that could not be done.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The present occupant of the chair holds that a Senator may rise to propound a parliamentary inquiry without obtaining the consent of the Senator who has the floor. The Senator from Georgia will state the point of order.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, if a Senator having the floor yields to permit the calling up of a conference report, the inquiry is whether that is not yielding for that purpose, and with whatever consequences may flow from it, irrespective of the Senator's purpose or his intent. The matter of intent or purpose is, of course, to be respected by the Senate, and the assumption is that when the Senate has disposed of the conference report it will receive respectful consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under ordinary circumstances the Chair would hold that the point of order of the Senator from Georgia was well taken; but the Senator from Indiana did say, in yielding, that he did so on the assumption that there would not be any debate which would take him off the floor. With that statement, the Chair thinks the Senator is entitled to hold the floor.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, a point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. CLARK. If the rules are to be strictly construed and enforced, in order for a Senator to be able to yield the floor without losing it, is it not necessary for him to ask unanimous consent that he be permitted to do so for a purpose indicated?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair thinks that ordinarily that would be the correct procedure.

Mr. CLARK. Therefore the Senator from Indiana yielded the floor, in actuality, without taking the trouble of asking leave of the Senate, including the Senator from Arkansas, in accordance with the rules. He yielded the floor without asking unanimous consent of the Senate for that purpose.

Mr. ROBINSON. I call for the regular order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Indiana is recognized.

Mr. CLARK. I have just propounded a parliamentary inquiry, and I should like to have an answer to it. The Senator from Arkansas calls for the regular order. I should be glad to know what the regular order is.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The present occupant of the chair stated previously that he is not so inclined to strict interpretation as are perhaps some others who preside at times. The Chair believes that in all good faith the Senator from Indiana should be protected. He yielded under conditions perhaps not stated correctly. So far as the present occupant of the chair is concerned, the Senator from Indiana is recognized; but the Chair would be glad to have an appeal from the decision.

Mr. McCARRAN. A parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. McCARRAN. I have just tried to listen to the Presiding Officer. He says that perchance the Senator from Indiana did not state the condition. May the record be read so that we may be advised?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will rule that that is not a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. McCARRAN. Did the Senator from Indiana protect himself to that extent?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair has ruled that he did. The Senator from Indiana is recognized.

Mr. COPELAND. A parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. CLARK. I make the point of order that the Senator from Indiana has spoken twice upon the same subject in the same legislative day.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair holds that he was in his second speech on the same legislative day and has not lost the floor.

Mr. COPELAND. A parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York will state it.

Mr. COPELAND. It is my duty, I assume, as chairman of the subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations, to try to have the measure having to do with flood control enacted into legislation. When and how may I do that? If I am not permitted under the rules to do it now, when may I do it?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will recognize the Senator from New York immediately upon the conclusion of the speech of the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. COPELAND. Very well. I am very much obliged to the Senator from Indiana for yielding to me.

Mr. CLARK. I understand the Chair to rule that a Senator does not lose the floor—and this may be very important during the progress of the debate—by yielding for the purpose of having a conference report considered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair would take it that he would unless he asked for unanimous consent, and the Chair takes it that that was what the Senator from Indiana meant.

Mr. CLARK. Did the Senator from Indiana ask for unanimous consent?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. He said he would yield with this understanding.

Mr. CLARK. Was such an agreement made?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There was no objection to it, the Chair will hold.

Mr. CLARK. Was any such agreement made? I make the point of order—and I should like to have the Chair rule on it, because it may be very important during the progress of the debate—that the Senator from Indiana lost the floor by yielding for the consideration of another matter.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair has ruled that the Senator from Indiana did not lose the floor under the circumstances.

Mr. CLARK. I hope that decision will be followed by the permanent Presiding Officer of the Senate.

Mr. MINTON. Now, Mr. President——

(At this point the President pro tempore took the chair.)

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri.

Mr. CLARK. I make the point of order that the Senator from Indiana, having spoken twice in one legislative day, and having voluntarily yielded the floor for other business, has lost the floor.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The President pro tempore was temporarily absent, and therefore will the Senator state the facts upon which he bases his point of order?

Mr. CLARK. I think there is no dispute that the Senator from Indiana is now occupying the floor for the second time during this legislative day on the same question. I may say in passing that I think the decision announced by the Chair yesterday as to the question of whether the rule applies to the same legislative day or the same calendar day is entirely erroneous; but that is a matter to be considered when the question is raised. Following the rule laid down by the Chair yesterday, the President pro tempore of the Senate then being in the chair, that he would hold that the rule applied on the same legislative day, I make the point of order that, having occupied the floor twice, and having voluntarily yielded the floor for the purpose of having a conference report brought up and other intervening business transacted, the Senator from Indiana has lost the floor.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator is correct——

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I make the point of order——

Mr. McCARRAN. May we have a ruling on the point of order?

Mr. ROBINSON. The previous occupant of the chair has already ruled on the point of order, and held that in all fairness the Senator from Indiana did not surrender the floor.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, I submit——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair would be under obligation to Senators if they would allow the Chair to complete his ruling.

The Senator from Missouri makes the point of order that the Senator from Indiana, having spoken once today and having taken the floor again later and commenced another speech, and having, as he states, yielded for the consideration of a conference report, is now engaged on his third speech. If that constitutes a third speech, the point of order is well taken.

Mr. CONNALLY. A parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair trusts he will be allowed to go on with the ruling.

Mr. CONNALLY. I beg pardon of the Chair. I thought the Chair had said enough. [Laughter]

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator is always in error. [Laughter.]

The last section of rule VII provides as follows:

> The Presiding Officer may at any time lay, and it shall be in order at any time for a Senator to move to lay, before the Senate any bill or other matter sent to the Senate by the President or the House of Representatives, and any question pending at that time shall be suspended for this purpose. Any motion so made shall be determined without debate.

Such a motion is a privileged motion which any Senator may make when he can obtain the floor. The motion and action thereon does not set aside the pending business as other motions do; it merely suspends such business under this section of the rule and all proceedings thereon, and therefore does not take a Senator off the floor but merely suspends his speech and allows him to remain in control of the floor during the temporary suspension and to continue such speech when such suspension ends. He may, of course, refuse to yield for such motion.

Yesterday the present occupant of the chair, in reply to a question from the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER], stated that the exceptions to business which might be transacted without taking off the floor a Senator who was speaking were the three particular matters which are exceptions to the general rule. So the point of order is overruled.

Mr. CONNALLY. A parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. ROBINSON. I call for the regular order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Texas will state his inquiry.

Mr. CONNALLY. Is what has just transpired in the Senate a precedent for the doctrine that when a Presiding Officer does not rule to suit us we get a new one?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair has reinforced the former ruling.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I make the point of order that that is not a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair has no opportunity to answer a question of that kind. That is all left to the courtesy of the Senate. The Senator from Indiana has the floor.

REORGANIZATION OF FEDERAL JUDICIARY

The Senate resumed consideration of the bill (S. 1392) to reorganize the judicial branch of the Government.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, I hope I have the assurance of the Chair that I have the floor. It has been a little bit tottery around here for a few minutes, but before I yielded so easily I was discussing the observations of the Senator from Montana concerning the political activities of the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court. I said that I proposed to show by the conduct of the Supreme Court in the last few months, in the rendition of its decisions, that it had made a complete about face, and that there is no other explanation for this about face except politics. Five-to-four decisions, made possible by the vote of Mr. Justice Roberts, declared certain kinds of legislation unconstitutional; but by a simple change of the mind of Mr. Justice Roberts that kind of legislation was made constitutional by a vote of 5 to 4. No one amended the Constitution. No one pretended that the Constitution had been amended. Only a Judge had changed his mind. I wish now to direct my remarks for a few minutes to the record, to see whether or not the inference I draw that politics prompted a change of Mr. Justice Roberts' mind is substantiated by the record.

On June 1, 1936, I believe, the Supreme Court handed down the opinion in Tipaldo against Morehead, in which it held that minimum-wage legislation could not constitutionally be enacted by the State of New York. Senators will recall that along in 1923, in the case of Adkins against the Children's Hospital, the Supreme Court had decided that even in the District of Columbia, where the Federal Government has jurisdiction, the Federal Government could not constitutionally enact minimum-wage legislation. So that created the well-known "no man's land" that was referred to in the campaign of 1936, wherein neither the States nor the Federal Government could enter, because of the position of the Supreme Court of the United States.

So a great party, the Republican Party, at last accepted the amendment proposed by its candidate, Mr. Landon, in a telegram to the Republican national convention, and said that it would be for an amendment to the Constitution of the United States which would enable States to enact minimum-wage legislation. Shortly after the campaign was over, the Supreme Court of the United States had under consideration the case of Parrish against West Coast Hotel Co., from the State of Washington, and they reversed the case of Adkins against Children's Hospital, and in effect reversed the case of Tipaldo against Morehead, and held that we could have minimum-wage legislation in this country both in the States and in the Federal jurisdiction.

The Constitution had not been amended, and Mr. Landon's proposed amendment was not needed. The only thing that had happened was that a Judge had changed his mind. When he changed his mind he was going contrary to the opinion that he had concurred in 10 months before when the decision in the case of Tipaldo against Morehead was handed down, because then he was with the majority of the Court that voted 5 to 4 against minimum-wage legislation. When he voted in April of 1937 he was on the majority side of the Court that voted 5 to 4 in holding that State minimum-wage legislation was constitutional. Why did he change his mind? He never wrote it into an opinion. Senators may look in the books until they are blind and they will not find a word from Mr. Justice Roberts as to why we could not have minimum-wage legislation in 1936, but 10 months later he could have it. Why did he change? He was listening to the political voice of the Chief Justice of the United States.

Then we come down to the next line of decisions by the Supreme Court of the United States upholding the validity of the Wagner Labor Relations Act. I remind Senators that only a few months before, in the case of Carter against Carter Coal Co., Mr. Justice Roberts was then with the majority, with the five members of the Court in a 5-to-4 decision, which held the Guffey Coal Act unconstitutional, because it held that coal mining was not interstate commerce and that the matters set up in that case did not affect interstate commerce.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President——

Mr. MINTON. And in the dissenting opinion handed down by the Court in upholding the Wagner Labor Relations Act——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. MINTON. No; I do not yield.

So in the decision which was handed down upholding the validity of the Wagner Labor Relations Act, the minority of the Supreme Court, in dissenting in that case, pointed out that Mr. Justice Roberts, when he went over to the other side of the Supreme Court in this decision, was reversing the decision in Carter against Carter Coal Co.

But that is not all, Mr. President. He not only reversed the opinion that he believed in 10 or 11 months before, which held an act of Congress unconstitutional but he reversed three other opinions of the Supreme Court when he joined the majority of the Court in upholding the Wagner Labor Relations Act.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. MINTON. I do not.

Adair against United States was a case involving a Federal statute which made it an offense for anyone engaged in interstate commerce to discharge an employee of the company so engaged in interstate commerce because he belonged to a labor union. That law was declared unconstitutional by the Supreme Court of the United States. But Adair against United States was overruled by Mr. Justice Roberts when he switched his opinion, because he upheld the Wagner Labor Relations Act, in which it is specifically provided that it is an unfair labor practice to proscribe a man because he belongs to a labor union.

More than that, Mr. Justice Roberts, in the same switch of his opinion, overruled the case of Hitchman Coal Co. against Mitchell, I believe, because in that case the Supreme Court had held that collective bargaining was illegal, and that a union did not have any right to organize coal miners for the purpose of bargaining collectively. Yet Mr. Justice Roberts, when he concurred in the opinion upholding the Labor Relations Act, upheld the provision in that act which said that collective bargaining and organizing for collective bargaining were legal.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. MINTON. No.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Indiana declines to yield.

Mr. MINTON. The Wagner Labor Relations Act also provided that it was an unfair labor practice to use the "yellow dog" contract.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, I decline to yield, and the Senator from Nevada knows I decline to yield.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Indiana declines to yield.

Mr. McCARRAN. Even for a question?

Mr. MINTON. I will yield when I get through, and then the Senator can ask me all the questions he desires.

The Wagner Labor Relations Act outlawed and made it an unfair labor practice to use the "yellow dog" contract. But in Coppage against Kansas the Supreme Court of the United States had upheld the "yellow dog" contract and had overruled a law of the State of Kansas that would have outlawed the "yellow dog" contract.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President——

Mr. MINTON. And yet when Mr. Justice Roberts changed his opinion and went over to the side of the majority in the Wagner Labor Relations Act decision he reversed that case.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. McCARRAN. I appeal to the Senator from Indiana to yield for just a little bit of a question.

Mr. MINTON. I will yield to the Senator in just a "leetle bit" of a while. [Laughter in the galleries.]

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, a point of order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state the point of order.

Mr. BLACK. When a Senator takes the floor to speak, and announces in advance to all the Senate that he will not yield for a question, I desire to know if it is in order to continue to interrupt his speech from time to time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Whenever a Senator rises and addresses the Chair——

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, that matter is——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senator please let the Chair rule? Whenever a Senator rises to address the Chair, it is the duty of the Chair to recognize the Senator; and when the Senator asks a question of the Chair, it is the duty of the Chair to answer the question, or to rule.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. BLACK. Is it true, then, that if it is desired to do so by Senators on the floor, and they wish to continue to interrupt a Senator's speech, knowing that he will not consent to such interruption, they may continue to do so in order to obtain the effect of interrupting the speech?

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, may I address myself to the Chair on that subject, or may I not?

Mr. MINTON. I decline to yield for that purpose.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Indiana has declined to yield. A parliamentary question was asked by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BLACK]; and the Chair, in reply, says that a Senator may not continue to interrupt another Senator for the purpose indicated. The Senator from Indiana has the floor.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, when Mr. Justice Roberts switched his position in the Wagner Labor Relations case, and joined the majority in upholding that act, by which he reversed himself in Carter against Carter Coal Co. and reversed the position of the Supreme Court in Adair against United States, Coppage against Kansas, and in the Hitchman Coal Co. case, why did he change his opinion, and why did he join in the opinion and reverse three other opinions of the Supreme Court? Search the record, and it will be searched in vain for a word from Mr. Justice Roberts as to why he did it. My opinion as to why he did it is that he was listening to the siren voice of the political Chief Justice of the Supreme Court.

I come down finally to the last cases, involving social security. There, again, we find that Mr. Justice Roberts has gone over to the side of the majority, which held, 5 to 4, that social-security legislation in this country was constitutional. When he did that he joined in the statement of the great liberal on the Court who wrote the opinion, Mr. Justice Cardozo, when in one crisp sentence he said what all the liberals in the Congress agree with:

The Congress of the United States has the power to tax and spend for the general welfare.

Mr. Justice Roberts joined in that opinion, and when he did so he overruled himself in the A. A. A. case, in which he wrote the opinion.

He held that the welfare clause was the chief question in the case; he embraced the Hamiltonian theory as to the general welfare; he then refused to decide the case on that basis and held that the Government could not tax and spend for the general welfare. So he overruled himself in that case by joining in the opinion upholding the Wagner Act.

He wrote the opinion in the case of Railroad Retirement Board against Alton Railroad, which held that the pension law for railroad employees was unconstitutional, and he not only held that that particular law was bad but, as Chief Justice Hughes pointed out in his dissenting opinion, he went further than the facts required and held that the Congress of the United States had no power to pass pension laws of that kind even though applied to employees engaged alone in interstate commerce. Yet, Mr. Justice Roberts joined with the majority—with Mr. Justice Cardozo and the other liberals on the Supreme Court Bench—in upholding the social-security legislation; and he reversed the Triple A decision and his holding in the railroad-retirement decision. Why did he do it? You will search the reports in vain; you will find not a word from Mr. Justice Roberts as to why he did it. Why did he do it? I think he was just listening to the wee small voice of the Chief Justice that was talking politics to him. There is no other explanation for such an unprecedented, unknown about face on the part of a Justice of the Supreme Court.

So I draw the conclusion—and it is the only conclusion that can be drawn—because when a man reverses himself three times and in addition to that reverses three other opinions of the Supreme Court and never has the hardihood to say why, what other inference is there to be drawn from it? There can be no other, in my mind, because the Justice did not see fit to make any explanation.

I was talking to one of the great Senators on the other side of the aisle. I will not mention his name, but he is a brilliant man and has a keen sense of humor. He said to me, "Senator, what is this bill of the President? How many judges is it that he wants the right to appoint?" I said, "Six." "Well", he said, "after reading these recent opinions of the Supreme Court, I think he ought to have nine." [Laughter.]

Mr. President, I am unwilling to have the balance of power reside thus in the hands of Mr. Justice Roberts, because, if I am right in my deduction that he changed his opinion in these three cases, and swept aside his opinions in three other cases in which the Supreme Court had rendered opinions, he did it for political reasons. I think when he has accomplished his political purpose he will turn back. I am afraid, Mr. President, he will backslide. In southern Indiana, where I come from, we used to have camp meetings every year. People would go down to the mourner's bench, which is sometimes called "hitting the sawdust trail", and they would get religion. There was one old fellow who just as certain as we had a camp meeting would be there and he would lead the procession on the first night down the sawdust trail, but just as soon as the camp meeting was over he would backslide and be down at the saloon wtih the boys. On the first day of the camp meeting, however, he would always be there, and it got to be a ritual for Uncle Billy to walk down the aisle and break his bottle at the foot of the pulpit, until finally they would not open the camp meeting unless they had a dustpan and a broom to sweep up his bottle. [Laughter.] So I am afraid that Justice Roberts may backslide and will not stay with the liberal opinions in which he has been joining.

Mr. President, the Senator from Montana challenged me as only he can challenge. He walked right over, almost smacked his fist in my face, and challenged me about the statement I had made that Judges of the Supreme Court were packing the Court. He asked me to look into the hearts and minds of the Justices and state by what alchemy or clairvoyancy I could tell why they did thus and so. Oh, no; I did not look into their minds to determine whether or not they were sitting there to pack the Court, and if the Senator from Montana had done me the honor to hear me yesterday he would have found the reason why I thought they were sitting there to pack the Court. I did not look into their minds; oh, no; I have not that occult power; I did not see into their hearts and minds; I just looked into the lawbooks; and when I looked into the lawbooks what did I discover? I discovered that in the last 3 years Mr. Justice Van Devanter has averaged a little over two opinions a year, and I drew the conclusion that he was not working. Well, what was he doing on the Supreme Court? He was packing the Supreme Court so that Roosevelt could not appoint his successor. There was not any other conclusion. Do you think, Mr. President, that if Mr. Landon had been elected in 1936 Justice Van Devanter would not have resigned?

I look again into the lawbooks and count the opinions that Mr. Justice McReynolds has been rendering during the last 3 years, and I find he has handed down a little over five opinions a year. What has he been doing on the bench? He has not been working. He has been packing the Court. As the Merry-Go-Round quoted him—and I have not seen him deny it—he would stay on there and would not resign so long as this man was in the White House.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield there?

Mr. MINTON. Not at this point.

Mr. BURKE. I desire to ask a question with reference to the Merry-Go-Round.

Mr. MINTON. Let the Senator ask me later. I was asked to say whether I looked into the mind of Mr. Justice Sutherland. Not at all; but I looked into the lawbooks and found that he has not been hurting himself with work; and everyone knows that that great Justice, because of reasons sufficient unto himself that have been reported to us in the press, concerning the condition of his health, wanted to retire from the bench. Do you suppose, Mr. President, he would not have retired if Hoover had been elected in 1932 or if Landon had been elected in 1936? So I do not look into the hearts or minds of these gentlemen. I simply look into the lawbooks.

The Senator from Montana says—and in this he joins up with the "historic report" to which I referred yesterday—that the pending measure, if passed, would apply force to the Court; that it would force somebody to retire; that it would force Justice Brandeis, that grand old liberal, from the bench. Not at all. It would spare him. If he wanted to remain on the bench, he would be welcome to stay, and under this bill there is not anything that would force him off. He would be perfectly welcome to stay under the bill as it is now drawn. What is the force that this bill applies? Let us see what force it authorizes and the manner in which it would operate. If it went into effect, we could go to one of these Justices who is 75 years old and say, "Pardon me, Mr. Justice, you have served your country well and are 75 years of age; you can retire at $20,000 a year; although all other Government officers and employees do not get full pay on retirement, you may retire, if you like, at full pay." Or if he should not elect to retire from the bench, we could say, "Well, pardon us, Mr. Justice, if you do not care to retire, we hope you will not consider us rude if we ask you to move over." [Laughter.]

Mr. President, that is the force of this bill, and that is all the force there is in it. It is an offer to distinguished Justices that they may retire at full pay or if they do not want to retire——

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, does the Senator speak for himself?

Mr. MINTON. I do not yield.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Indiana declines to yield.

Mr. MINTON. If they do not want to retire, the worst that could happen would be that another distinguished lawyer would sit down on the bench beside them. The historic reports characterize that as punishing the judges. O tempora; O mores! Oh, horror on horror's head! Oh, visions of the thumbscrew, the rack, and the torture chamber! Think of the punishment that a judge may have to endure who retires on full salary, or, if he does not elect to retire, to have another eminent lawyer sit down beside him. That is what signers of the report call "punishing the Court."

Mr. President, I have detained the Senate longer than I intended to. I thank the Senate for this opportunity to speak a word on this very interesting subject. I yield now for any questions Senators may care to ask me.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. MINTON. I yield.

Mr. BONE. Since the people of the Senator's State received such a thorough and artistic trimming in the McArdle case, I wonder if the Senator would care to comment on it?

Mr. MINTON. That is one of the sad stories of Indiana. I would not want to take the time of the Senate now to discuss that matter, though I may do so at a later time. I have introduced a bill which I hope will bring relief to the condition which has been inflicted upon Indiana and the rest of the country by the McArdle case, in which the opinion was handed down by Mr. Justice Butler.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MINTON. I yield.

Mr. BURKE. As I understand the Senator's position, he favors the bill to add to the members of the Supreme Court in order that men may be put on the Court whose opinions and thinking will be known in advance and who under no circumstances would ever change their views. Is that correct?

Mr. MINTON. No, sir.

Mr. BURKE. Would the Senator have been happier and easier in his mind if Mr. Justice Roberts and the other members of the Court to whom he has referred had never changed their minds at all?

Mr. MINTON. No, sir.

Mr. BURKE. Does the Senator have any serious objection to a judge who reaches a conclusion at a certain time, and later on, in the light of other evidence, further thinking, and more able argument, possibly, reaches a different conclusion, from frankly so stating and voting on the basis of that different conclusion?

Mr. MINTON. He did not frankly state it. He only cast a vote, and I can only imagine what would have happened in this country if this bill had passed and the Supreme Court, after it had been reorganized, had then handed down the line of decisions it has handed down in the last few months. A cry would have gone up from the Liberty League and the American Bar Association and the economic royalists that would have taken a wailing wall as long as the wall in China to accommodate them, because they were condemning a court that had been set up to change the opinion of the Supreme Court and amend the Constitution.

I cannot understand why Senators are satisfied with a Court that can change its mind under circumstances of that kind, and then would not let the President of the United States add men to the Court who did not need their minds changed.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. MINTON. I yield.

Mr. BURKE. In his very able speech the Senator quoted from the Washington Merry-Go-Round. I should like to know if the Senator by any chance has also read that great volume entitled "The Nine Old Men" and possibly drew some inspiration from that book?

Mr. MINTON. I read it a long time ago. I cannot at the moment feel the inspiration. I did get a little inspiration from the book the Senator from Nebraska and somebody else helped Mr. Pusey write. [Laughter.]

Mr. BURKE. That book would do the Senator good, I know.

The Senator referred early in his remarks to the great number of letters and telegrams he had received from constituents in his home State of Indiana objecting to the bill and informed us that he had had a check made and found that all of them or most of them were regularly enrolled Republicans. My question is, Did the Senator happen at that time to learn the political affiliation of Gen. Arthur St. Clair? [Laughter.]

Mr. MINTON. No. He had been dead 118 years, I understood.

Mr. BURKE. When the Senator wrote to him?

Mr. MINTON. Yes. I would expect that to come from the Senator from Nebraska. He is always generous and considerate of his colleagues. He had better be looking up some of his dead constituents before the next election. [Laughter.]

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. MINTON. I yield.

Mr. McCARRAN. I should like to ask the Senator from Indiana if he would support a measure which would remove Mr. Justice Brandeis, but would retain Mr. Justice Roberts?

Mr. MINTON. No; I would not; and I do not believe Congress has the power to do it. I am sure they would not be—what shall I say?—unwise enough to do that sort of thing.

Mr. McCARRAN. Would the Senator support a bill that would veto—that is, would place a coadjutor as against Mr. Justice Brandeis, but none as against Mr. Justice Roberts?

Mr. MINTON. No; but I would hope that the coadjutor would neutralize Mr. Roberts and go along with Mr. Brandeis.

Mr. McCARRAN. I understand the Senator from Indiana is now ready to yield the floor. Am I correct?

Mr. MINTON. That is correct. I yield the floor.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nevada is recognized.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, does the Senator desire to proceed this afternoon?

Mr. McCARRAN. I do not; but I desire to have it understood that I shall have the floor when the Senate convenes tomorrow.

Mr. ROBINSON. Very well.

Mr. McCARRAN. I thank the Senator from Arkansas.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

The PRESIDENT pro tempore, as in executive session, laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States submitting sundry nominations, which were referred to the appropriate committees.

(For nominations this day received, see the end of Senate proceedings.)

RECESS

Mr. ROBINSON. I move that the Senate take a recess until 12 o'clock noon tomorrow.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

FRIDAY, JULY 9, 1937

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Lord God of hosts, may we feel Thy presence with the joy of elevated thoughts. Grant unto us a sense of dependence upon Thee, a desire to know Thy laws, and the spirit to obey them. We pray for a guiding faith that works by love. To those who are bearing heavy burdens, to those who are under sharp cares, minister unto them that faith by which they shall receive help and good cheer. Almighty God, in the presence of our country's need, by the splendor of the teaching of the Master, may quiet prevail, problems be solved, and contentment spread throughout our land. We pray Thee to touch men's better natures; stir the pools of their hearts that we may be as one household. O Spirit of God, burn in our national consciousness peace among men and mutual aid, which are our throbbing hopes. Heavenly Father, an associate, a dear friend, and a godly man has left us. He loved and followed the good, the pure, and the true. We pray for the richest blessings of Thy presence upon his devoted loved ones. In our Savior's name. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

PATRICK J. HALTIGAN

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to make a brief statement before we take up any business.

I am assuming the liberty of announcing to the House of Representatives the death of Patrick J. Haltigan, late a reading clerk in the House of Representatives. I feel that it would be an evidence of gross indifference to the long, faithful, and efficient services of a devoted public servant were no notice taken of the departure of Patrick Haltigan. For 26 years he stood at his post here on the Speaker's rostrum and in most capable and satisfactory fashion performed the delicate and yet most responsible duties of one of our official reading clerks. During that period of more than a quarter of a century every man and woman who has served in this House was familiar with the sturdy figure, the noble voice, and the circumspect actions of this man. In response to his voice during that period at least one-half of every piece of legislation in our congressional annals has been recorded. Always at his post, always vigilant in the discharge of his duties, always personally interested in preserving the high and noble traditions of this body, he performed a public function of great and far-reaching importance in legislative affairs of our Republic.

In all of my acquaintance with men I think that I may say with absolute propriety that I have never known any man who possessed to a higher degree the innate instincts of a gentleman. He was a man of very deep and consecrated religious convictions, and I feel confident that the priest of his church, who ministered to him the last sacrament, was not called upon, as far as Pat Haltigan was concerned, to pray for the remission of many sins. It is a genuine grief upon the part of all of us, I am sure, and especially those who have been associated with Mr. Haltigan for so many years, to learn of his passing away. It may be said with absolute verity that in all things he kept the faith.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 3 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, there is nothing I can add to what has been so profoundly, sincerely, and eloquently stated by our distinguished Speaker.

Pat Haltigan was of invaluable assistance to all Members of the House, particularly to the new Members; always, in that perfectly gentlemanly manner so aptly referred to, and properly so, by the Speaker, encouraging and assisting the new Members of the House in every way that he could. There is one lesson, to which the Speaker has so powerfully mentioned, that I think we all learn from the life of our late beloved friend, and that is the spiritual example he set to each and every person with whom he came in contact.

When I speak of spiritual example, I refer to no particular religion but to all religions. To one who has no religion, who is either an agnostic or an atheist, I refer to the higher things of life, to ethical influences; but, speaking to those who are possessed of a religious mind, I refer to the spiritual example set by Pat Haltigan in his daily life, in his efforts to obtain that place in the hereafter to which all persons who have a religious conviction believe and are endeavoring, each in his own way, to obtain.

Life, purely from a material angle, results in selfishness and callousness. I have a profound feeling of sympathy for one who is purely a materialist. Spiritual influences are necessary, in my opinion, for an individual to lead as successful and as happy a life as can be humanly approximated. Spiritual influences are also necessary in the life of a nation in order for a nation to prosper and progress.

In these days of apparent materialism the example of Pat Haltigan is one we will all remember. His life, and in particular without regard to one's religious beliefs, the spiritual lesson that we learn therefrom is one that we should endeavor to follow. If we do that, we need not feel concerned about the strictly worldly aspects of life. His life is also an example to nations. A nation which forgets or which has no spiritual life is a nation that is on the downward road, a nation that is in the process of decadence and disintegration.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Frazier, its legislative clerk, announced that the Senate agrees to the amendments of the House to bills of the Senate of the following titles:

S. 171. An act for the relief of George E. Shockley;

S. 885. An act for the relief of H. G. Harmon;

S. 1188. An act for the relief of J. E. Sammons;

S. 1257. An act for the relief of James H. Smith; and

S. 2266. An act for the relief of John A. Ensor.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein certain extracts from statutes and other public documents.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Colorado?

There was no objection.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks by inserting in the RECORD a statement made by me before the Committee on Banking and Currency of the House on yesterday. I am informed by the Public Printer this will require four pages and that the additional two pages will cost $100.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maryland?

There was no objection.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, on yesterday I was unavoidably absent from the House. If I had been present, I would have voted against the marriage-clause repeal bill, and I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on that subject.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Colorado?

There was no objection.

Mr. O'BRIEN of Michigan and Mr. MAVERICK asked and were given permission to revise and extend their own remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a resolution, not a memorial, adopted by the Michigan Legislature on June 15, 1937, with respect to civil service in the District of Columbia.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. CUMMINGS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing a letter I had placed on the desk of every Member of this body on yesterday.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Colorado?

There was no objection.

CONSTRUCTION OF AUXILIARY VESSELS FOR THE NAVY

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Mr. Speaker, I call up House Resolution 257.

House Resolution 257

Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of S. 2193, a bill to authorize the construction of certain auxiliary vessels for the Navy. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and shall continue not to exceed 1 hour, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Naval Affairs, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the reading of the bill for amendment, the Committee shall rise and report the same to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit, with or without instructions.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Mr. Speaker, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MAPES].

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Mr. Speaker, this rule provides for the consideration of Senate bill 2193, authorizing the construction of auxiliary ships for the Navy. I understand the Committee on Naval Affairs was unanimous in its report and that there is substantially no opposition to the measure.

If time permits, it is intended to call up another rule today for the consideration of a bill (H. R. 6547) providing for the construction of a new naval hospital in the District of Columbia, a matter which probably has come to the attention of every Member, and there is little doubt but that there is need for this new hospital.

However, in considering these rules I would like to call to the attention of the House a matter which has been uppermost in my mind for some time. This is the 9th day of July, with no adjournment of Congress in prospect. The first bill we shall consider is a Senate bill. This bill will probably become a law.

The second bill is a House bill, and I hazard the guess that no House bill, unless of the most extraordinary importance, will ever be considered in another body. I also am willing to make a guess that another body will practically conclude its business when it disposes of the matter now pending before it.

Mr. Speaker, I was one of those Members who opposed the "lame duck" amendment to the Constitution changing the date of the convening of Congress and the inauguration of the President. I have no regret over that action. I thought the proposal was the infinitesimal magnified out of all proportion. The argument was that by merely changing the meeting of Congress all the problems of this Nation and even the entire world were going to be solved. How well the results have justified that prediction, I will leave to the judgment of the Members. As to the date of inauguration, I cannot recall it without sneezing and feeling the chills of pneumonia creeping through me.

Incidentally, I read in the press this morning that that distinguished senior Senator from Nebraska, the author of the "lame duck" amendment, has been advised to go home for the balance of the year, so he will not be subjected to the intolerable, torrid heat of the great Capital City. Why it was ever located here some of us still doubt. The influenza of the winter is only surpassed by the heat prostration of its summer. At least 100 miles from any ocean breeze, it is at least distinctive as compared with most of our other cities. Built on filled-in land, below the sea level, it would have been an ideal place to raise ducks.

In the debate on the "lame duck" amendment, the distinguished Speaker from Ohio, the beloved Mr. Longworth, fought for at least one short session in each Congress.

Mr. STEFAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. I gladly yield.

Mr. STEFAN. I would like to correct the impression that may be created by the remarks just made. The senior Senator from Nebraska had an attack of indigestion, I may tell my distinguished colleague, and was in the hospital and, perhaps, for that reason his physician advised him to leave the Capital. It was not because of any activity going on in the other side of the Capitol.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Of course, my only information about the distinguished Senator is obtained from the press. I am not vouching for the truth of the information.

Mr. STEFAN. Mr. Speaker, I merely want to tell the gentleman that the senior Senator from Nebraska is absent because of illness.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. There is a great amount of illness among our Members. On the roll call yesterday in this House there were 100 Members absent. One week ago there were only 90. That is an increase of 10 a week, which is 40 a month. If that proportion continues, it will not be long before we shall lack a quorum.

The late distinguished Speaker Longworth fought for at least one short session in each Congress. I voted with him. His amendment was that at least one session should end definitely on the 1st of May, because it was then freely predicted and not even disputed that once you put the "lame duck" amendment into effect, the sessions of this Congress would go on throughout the year, because there would be no impetus to adjourn. Of course, before this "lame duck" amendment we had a long session and a short session. The long session started on the first Monday in December and usually wound up in June. The short session started on the first Monday in December and ended on Inauguration Day, on March 4, by constitutional limitation.

What has happened in this session—and I say this in connection with the consideration of these rules today? Early in this session everyone took it for granted that we were going to be here ad infinitum, through the summer, through the fall, and the committees also took that for granted, and they are now coming to the Rules Committee asking for rules on House bills, with many more in prospect; and thus, after 6 or 7 months, when possibly some of the committees could have earlier completed consideration of these bills and arrived at a determination in much less time.

With that thought of an indefinitely prolonged session that was engendered early in this session, the thought that nobody could tell when we were going to conclude this session, there is still going to be, as I said, a succession of House bills considered here which are never going to be considered in another body.

Permit me to throw out for your consideration the suggestion of some fixed date of adjournment in the future. If some date were fixed—and I do not care what date is determined upon when we shall adjourn—it would add impetus to the transactions of the business of this House and the other body. I feel quite sure of that.

In addition to the 100 Members who have already bid us their adieu, there are other Members leaving here today and tomorrow. They just cannot tolerate the subterranean atmosphere of Washington any more. The House physician could tell you of the jeopardy of many of our Members. Of course, it is very lovely here in this Chamber with its air conditioning—too cold often—and they tell me that some of our Capital residents come here with their lunch baskets and stay here all day, because it is one of the most comfortable spots in town. But our offices are not yet air-conditioned. If you want to experience the nearest thing to inferno that I hope any of you will ever be compelled to inhabit, come up in this Capitol Building on the third floor to the Rules Committee, and its beautiful office, with crystal chandeliers, purloined from the White House and the old Supreme Court room. Try to look through its 2-by-4 windows, with no exposure except through porticos built in 1859 out of English material. The coolest thing there is the English tile on the floor—if one could walk barefoot as in youth.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Yes.

Mr. SABATH. Is it not unfortunately true that the delay in reporting these bills is mostly due to some of the committees that deliberately delayed consideration in reporting the bills?

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Oh, I would not say that.

Mr. SABATH. And that many of them would have been reported out earlier than now?

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. That may be, but I think the reason is that they all took it for granted that we were going to be here way into the fall. There is no reason for us doing that at all.

Of course, Mr. Speaker, some of us may have lost sight of the fact that we ourselves here have something to say as to how long we shall remain in session. I am greatly concerned about the health of our Members, our colleagues. Why, it is universally agreed that the intolerable weather conditions in this city are worse than in any other place in the world—even the Equator.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Yes.

Mr. MAY. Having reference to the question of my distinguished colleague from Illinois [Mr. SABATH] and the fact that some bills might have been reported, I ask the gentleman if it might not be a fortunate thing that several bills pending in committees might never be reported?

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Of course, experience in legislative bodies proves that what they do not do is their greatest contribution to the country's welfare.

Mr. BEAM. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Yes.

Mr. BEAM. I am very much interested in what the distinguished gentleman of the Rules Committee says, particularly in reference to the thought that we Members of the House have something definitely to say as to the date of adjournment. I ask the gentleman if it would be possible for him or anyone else here to bring in a resolution and submit it to the House as to a plausible date of adjournment?

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. As I said, I am just throwing out—spreading, as it were—the suggestion that at least some date ought to be determined upon, and that would help to accelerate the end. I do not care if you fix the date in September or October, so long as you erect the rainbow; but this holding on, trying to fill in time is intolerable. Within a few hours back we devoted a whole day trying to transform a gnat into an elephant.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Yes.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Mr. Speaker, assuming it to be true that there is no chance of getting bills through the other body, how about an arrangement to take recesses for 3 days at a time and notifying the other body that we are going to do that, and not transact any further business except what is absolutely necessary?

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Of course that is a rather unsatisfactory way to do it, unless it is understood that no business of any importance will be taken up for an extended time; say, 2 weeks or more. The lure of the mountains, the beaches, the sparkling trout streams, and those cozy nooks under the boughs, so teasingly described in Omar Khayyam, cannot be enjoyed in less than weeks. Members desire to disperse to diverse places to get some sort of a respite. I do not know how many summers have gone by with practically no opportunity for the Members of this House to have a vacation.

Mr. FULLER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. I yield.

Mr. FULLER. Am I correct in my understanding that the gentleman believes the sentiment of this House is overwhelming that we ought to adjourn soon so that business may have a rest and the country become settled and know what is going to happen in the country?

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Oh, I do not subscribe to that argument at all—not one whit.

Mr. FULLER. The gentleman is just talking about the health of the Members, is he?

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Not entirely. I have heard that argument for many years, that business wants us to adjourn—"close up Congress, and give business and the country a breathing spell." Bosh! Why, I remember in 1933, 1934, and 1935, when business was knocking at all these doors for us to stay here and take care of them and pull them out of the hole they dug for themselves. [Applause.] What is said in editorials about adjourning Congress and giving the country a rest just works in the reverse with me.

Mr. FULLER. The gentleman thinks it is a good idea to stay here, as far as business is concerned, and legislate all the time?

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Oh, no; I do not.

Mr. FULLER. Does not the gentleman know that we could never find an opportunity to adjourn if that were the case?

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Since the passage of the "lame duck" amendment you never can adjourn unless you return to a modification of that "lame duck" amendment. You will be confronted every year with this indefinite session of Congress.

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. I yield.

Mr. HOUSTON. Is it not a fact that after the adoption of the "lame duck" amendment the newly elected Members were compelled to come back here and go into session immediately after a strenuous campaign, without sufficient time to recuperate and rest, and they were not in the physical condition they should be when they came here?

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Oh, that may be. I am not complaining about pushing forward the meeting day of Congress. I am complaining about never having any end in sight.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. I yield.

Mr. SNELL. I am in entire accord with the statement the gentleman has made about the "lame duck" amendment. I was one of the principal opponents of that amendment. While I do not know that I should admit it, it was held in Rules Committee for a long time, as the gentleman from New York knows [laughter]; but the results of the passage of that amendment have been exactly as we said they would be at the time it was before Congress. As you all know, there is never any end. As far as the distinguished gentleman who was the author of that amendment is concerned, who has been referred to this morning, a gentleman was in my office just this morning and said that that gentleman said it was a crime to have Congress in session suffering through the torrid heat of Washington at the present time. I do not say who it was, but I said the author of the resolution. Now, as far as the adjournment of Congress is concerned, of course, you can find all sorts of reasons, but I really believe the best thing that could happen at the present time would be for us to wind up the important business of the House and make some arrangement to take a recess subject to the call of the Speaker. I appreciate the fact that if the other body is going to be in session all summer we could not definitely adjourn, but if we could arrange for some kind of an agreement whereby we could do that, I think it would be the best possible thing to do and it would meet with the approval of the country. It has been done on former occasions.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. I hope the House will pardon me for inflicting my personal views upon them, but with a 93-plus temperature in our beautiful Capital, those are my views, and I have to stick to them at least for the moment. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. FULLER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a statement?

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Yes; I yield.

Mr. FULLER. The gentleman wants us to adjourn for our health. If we are not able to come here and take the gaff, we ought not ask to come back here at the next election. The Members of this House are able to stay here and stand it if there is real legislation that demands that we should stay here, but that is not the real purpose of it. We are not here for that purpose now. We have been here as long as we have now because needed legislation which we are now considering was not given to us until so late that we could not take care of it until the summer heat arrived. If we had had it earlier, we could have disposed of it. But it is a frivolous excuse to say to the country that we want to adjourn simply because the physique of the membership of this House is not able to stand it. That is not the real purpose why we want to adjourn.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. May I suggest that the gentleman is a little bit confused as to the reasons I advance for adjournment within some reasonable time.

Mr. FULLER. No; I am not confused at all.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Knowing the gentleman's early physical training, I have never entertained any qualms about his health, and I think he entertains the same idea about the robust chairman of the Rules Committee. Nature, however, has not endowed all statesmen with the iron-hard biceps and the sturdy physique of the dean of the Arkansas delegation. But sunstroke respects neither the strong nor the weak. Old Sol penetrates through the hardiest tissue of head or body. I was talking about some other Members, not us young fellows.

Mr. Speaker, when we have completed our business—and for all substantial purposes I think we have done that when we shall have passed our appropriation bills—then is the time to adjourn. There is only one general appropriation bill remaining undisposed of—the Interior Department bill. That will be concluded next week. There is nothing remaining that can prevent us adjourning for at least a few weeks. I respectfully submit it all for your consideration, believing it is really worth while. [Applause.]

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, there are no requests for time on this side on the rule.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolves itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (S. 2193) to authorize the construction of certain auxiliary vessels for the Navy.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (S. 2193) to authorize the construction of certain auxiliary vessels for the Navy, with Mr. LAMNECK in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

By unanimous consent, the first reading of the bill was dispensed with.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 10 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, I shall endeavor briefly to explain the object and purpose of this bill so that each Member can thoroughly understand what it is about. At the outset permit me to say that this is a Senate bill with two House amendments. The House amendments are in sections 2 and 3. It is also an administration measure. It is in accordance with the financial program of the Executive.

Mr. Chairman, the bill provides for the construction of six auxiliary ships. The maximum cost estimated is not to exceed $50,000,000. It is estimated that it will require approximately 3½ or 4 years to build these auxiliary ships. One-half of the number of the these ships are to be constructed in the navy yards and one-half, if the bids are in accordance with what they should be, in the industrial yards. The contractor in the industrial yard is not permitted to make over a certain fixed percentage of profit, which is the same as was set out in the law in reference to the treaty navy. These two amendments are in accordance with existing law with reference to the construction of ships.

The policy of the Navy is to build one-half of the ships in the navy yards and one-half in industrial yards, provided the industrial yards submit bids in line with what they should be. I may say in this connection that recently a contract was called for to build a battleship. It was found, however, that the bid was not in accordance with the estimates made by the Navy Department. The Executive, therefore, in accordance with the act which I have just referred to, awarded both ships to navy yards—one to the Philadelphia Navy Yard and one to the Washington Navy Yard. In this connection I desire to set forth in the RECORD some valuable information showing a comparison between the estimated costs of navy yards and bids submitted by industrial yards. I am not one of those who believe that all of the Government work should be done in Government navy yards, but I do think that if the Government cannot obtain a fair and satisfactory bid from an industrial yard, then it should be, as it is in this case, authorized to have the vessels constructed in navy yards.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I yield.

Mr. REED of New York. I would be much pleased if there could be put in the RECORD the experience of the Navy in building ships in navy yards and in private yards. Is it a fact that oftentimes when the industry fails to make a low bid and the work is turned over to a Government navy yard that the navy yard comes back to us for more money?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. That is true in certain cases. It has oftentimes happened that the actual cost of construction in navy yards has exceeded the cost of construction in industrial yards. On the other hand, however, it has likewise happened that it has cost more to construct ships in industrial yards than it has in navy yards. So we cannot have a fixed rule and say that it costs more to construct ships in either navy yards or industrial yards, for it all depends upon the particular conditions surrounding the individual ship.

It is only fair to say that the social-security bill, the Walsh-Healey bill, and other labor bills that we have passed have naturally made the cost go up in industrial yards. We have, however, given latitude to the Chief Executive not to award contracts in the event that private bids are way out of line but to construct the ships in navy yards; in fact, the appropriation bill makes this mandatory.

Mr. REED of New York. The point I wanted to make was that it is manifestly unfair to the industries of the country if they cannot bid low enough to get the contracts that then the Government comes in, turns the work over to a navy yard, and then the navy yard finds that it cannot construct the ship within its own estimate but must have more money.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Let me give the gentleman this information along that line in reference to the two battleships which were authorized at the last session of Congress: The Bethlehem Co. on the hull and machinery bid $49,870,000 under certain conditions. The New York Shipbuilding Co. bid $47,829,994. The Newport News Co. bid $46,212,500. Those were the bids that must be complied with under the specifications of the contract. The estimates made by the Navy Department were for the New York yard, $37,265,843, and another yard was $36,560,300.

Bear in mind, however, that there is nothing that would prohibit the navy yard coming back to the Appropriations Committee and saying that they could not construct the ships within their estimate. The Appropriations Committee thereupon would be compelled to make additional appropriations to carry on this work.

Mr. REED of New York. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. So we have absolutely no assurance that these ships are going to be built for any less than the bids of the industrial yards.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I yield.

Mr. BOILEAU. The gentleman from New York referred to private shipbuilders. Is it not a fact that if the Government did not have its own navy yards capable of constructing these ships, in a way in competition with private shipbuilders, we would have to pay a very great deal more for battleships built at private yards?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. We must not desert the private yards, because they constitute a very important part of our national defense.

You have only three Government yards large enough to construct this particular type of ship. If we drove out and refused to do business with the private yards or private industries, then we would jeopardize our national defense in a time of emergency.

Mr. BOILEAU. But the gentleman admits there was a saving of a lot of money by having the Government yards?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Of course, we are in accord on that.

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. SNELL. In connection with the estimates made by the Government yard, it does not put in an estimate for what we call overhead charges, which amount to a great deal in the case of a private corporation?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. That is correct. There is no question of taxes involved. There is no question of overhead involved. There is no social security. There are a great many other items. There is no question of profit. The industrial yards must be operated for profit. That is what the stockholders put their money in them for. In every contract you have to necessarily figure a certain profit, and that is all included in the estimate of the private yard.

Mr. SNELL. So that is an important matter to be taken into consideration?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Yes.

Mr. SNELL. Is this a new program or is it simply the continuation of some general program that has been adopted by a previous Congress.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. This bill covers auxiliary ships. These are not fighting ships. While they may be a defensive weapon, they are not, strictly speaking, warships. They correspond in the Navy to the supply ships and as the Quartermaster's Department corresponds to the Army. Every one of these ships is a replacement ship, with one exception. There is one ship provided for which is in addition to the auxiliary fleet. The balance of them are replacements of old obsolete ships that go out of the picture.

Mr. TOBEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I yield to the gentleman from New Hampshire.

Mr. TOBEY. I did not have the privilege of hearing the gentleman's original talk, but may I ask him if this bill is in addition to the Vinson naval bill passed 3 years ago?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. No; not at all. This bill is merely supplemental to that bill, because this covers the auxiliary fleet, which is absolutely essential in support of the destroyers, the seaplanes, and the submarines.

Mr. TOBEY. The gentleman also has in mind the present statute limiting profits?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Yes.

Mr. TOBEY. Is that covered herein?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Yes. Section 2 was put in by the Naval Affairs Committee. We have followed the law in accordance with the amendment offered by the distinguished gentleman from New Hampshire.

Mr. TOBEY. In the gentleman's judgment, has that worked out to the advantage of the Government?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I am not in a position to say, but it probably has been a step in the right direction. We cannot always get economy on certain things. It might be wise to limit the profit, and in certain cases it might cost more, but we are not going to try to repeal it.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 5 additional minutes.

Mr. BLAND. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I yield to the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. BLAND. In answer to a question asked by the gentleman from Wisconsin, I understood the gentleman from Georgia to say that construction in the navy yards had saved considerable money for the Government.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I said in certain cases it has, and in other cases it has not. The record is full of argument on both sides of the question. If you will examine the hearings you will find some reports of the Bureau of Construction which show that repairs to a long line of ships were probably more economical in the navy yard; but, on the other hand, in a great many instances it would have been far cheaper to have built the ships in an industrial yard. So, as I say, you cannot make a definite statement to cover it entirely.

Mr. BLAND. I concede that work in both yards is of general benefit to the country.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Of course it is.

Mr. BLAND. Because it gives the navy yard the benefit of the technical experts of the industrial yards?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Yes.

Mr. BLAND. At the same time, if there was not construction in the navy yards, the right to examine the figures and to ascertain the cost would give the yardstick to which the gentleman refers, even if construction was in an industrial yard.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. At the same time, let me impress the Committee with this one further thought: While we want to construct our ships as cheaply as possible, it is absolutely essential that we have these private industries. They are the "goose that lays the golden egg." They are the taxpayers of this country, and when you take business away from them you lessen the opportunity of your Government to collect taxes, and we have to have taxes to support the Government in order to operate navy yards. We should give equal opportunity to the industrial yards as well as to the navy yards and try to get the best ship at the cheapest price.

Mr. GREEVER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I yield to the gentleman from Wyoming.

Mr. GREEVER. Does this authorize a new appropriation?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. This will authorize an appropriation of approximately $50,000,000 within the next 3 years or probably over a longer period of time.

Mr. GREEVER. This has not been previously authorized?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. This has not been previously authorized, and I may say that this bill is in accordance with the program of the President of the United States. It is a bill that the administration is insisting upon having enacted at this session of the Congress.

Mr. TABER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. TABER. Are there any other ships of this type authorized at the present time that are not under construction?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I may say that contracts for probably some of the combatant ships authorized in the last appropriation have not yet been awarded. This is just the beginning of a program to lay down gradually over a period of years auxiliary ships to support the fighting ships.

Mr. TABER. Within what time is it proposed, if the gentleman knows, to submit Budget estimates to the Congress for the commencement of these ships?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I may say at the next session of Congress. At that time this Budget authorization will come in.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Yes.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Not only will it build up the national defense of our country, but it will put many men to work, not only in the yards but in the factories where the yards get their supplies.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Yes; that is true. At the same time, I may say to the gentleman from New York, we are not justified in building ships just to give employment to people. We are justified in building ships only when the national defense of the country requires it. However, there is a dual purpose involved.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. That is what I have stated. I agree with the gentleman on that.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Yes.

Mr. Chairman, as I stated a moment ago, this bill merely provides for one additional ship for the auxiliary fleet. The auxiliary fleet is composed of approximately 94 noncombatant ships. This will add one additional ship, a seaplane tender. A seaplane tender is a ship that must travel along with the fleet to afford housing, repair, accommodations, and gas and oil for the large bombers that accompany the fleet. For instance, one of these large bombers, in making an effort to locate the Pacific flyers within the last few days, was out 24 hours and covered 2,700 miles. It is this type of plane the seaplane tender takes care of.

The destroyer tender takes care of the destroyers. A destroyer is a very small ship which has accommodation only for its officers and personnel on account of its enormous machinery. A submarine has accommodations for none except its crew, and the submarine tender takes care of the submarine.

Mr. Chairman, as you will observe, this is a Senate bill with two House amendments. The bill passed the Senate unanimously. It is a departmental measure and authorizes the construction of six auxiliary vessels at a cost not to exceed $50,000,000. It is in accord with the financial program of the President.

In order that the Members of the House may have a clear understanding of this measure, I shall endeavor to explain the use of the vessels provided for in this bill and give the reasons why they are needed in the Navy. These vessels provided for in the bill are for the support and proper maintenance of the combatant vessels of the fleet when such vessels are operating away from regular established shore bases. Auxiliary vessels which serve the fleet for its maintenance in operating away from shore bases consist of repair ships, tenders, store ships, munition ships, hospital ships, tugs, and so forth.

There are in commission some 94 such vessels and out of commission 48, making the auxiliary strength of the Navy 142 ships. However, the auxiliary ships have largely been provided by the conversion of vessels not originally built for the purpose and are inadequate, particularly in speed, to enable them to accompany the fleet even in peacetime cruising. The auxiliary vessels of the fleet go to make up what is known as the train. The train for the Navy is analagous to the service of supply in the Army. We know that the Army in the field to be able to operate must have its service of supply. Likewise, it is far more necessary for the Navy to have its train when operating at sea or from distant ports thousands of miles from its shore bases.

SEAPLANE TENDERS

The first item in the bill authorizes the construction of one seaplane tender. This is the only vessel provided for in this bill that is an addition to the Navy. All the other vessels set forth in the bill are replacement ships.

The large seaplane tender authorized for in this bill is designed to serve as a floating base for two squadrons, 24 large patrol seaplanes, sometimes called flying boats or bombers. Seaplane tenders permit the flying boats, patrol planes, or bombers to accompany the fleet wherever it may go. The tender does not carry the planes. They fly from one position to the other. They are amphibians and light on water. The tender is so constructed that they can hoist the planes on its deck for repairs and can pick up damaged planes. It provides barracks for the crews of the planes and provides the facilities for the personnel that any large ship has. It also carries gasoline, bombs, stores, spare parts for the planes and can make all necessary repairs short of a complete rebuilding.

There are now in the Navy in commission two large seaplane tenders, the Wright and Langley. The Langley was launched in 1912 and was designed as a collier and converted in 1922. The Wright was a merchant vessel and converted in 1920. In addition to these two, there are nine small seaplane tenders, all of which are converted ships.

The number of flying boats—patrol planes or bombers—commensurate with a treaty navy is 330, of which 264 are operating planes and 66 are spares. It is estimated that the Langley, Wright, and the seaplane tender authorized in this bill will accommodate 72 flying boats, or 24 per seaplane tender; that the 9 small seaplane tenders will accommodate 108; that 84 seaplanes will be based on shore and 66 will be spares. The design of the vessel calls for a speed of 18 knots per hour and a rough estimate of the cost is $12,260,000. The complement will be 24 officers and 467 men.

DESTROYER TENDERS

Destroyers are comparatively small vessels with a large amount of their interior space devoted to boilers and engines. They carry armor of guns and torpedoes which require a comparatively large crew, consequently there is not much room on such small vessels for all the facilities they must have to maintain them for long periods of time. The storerooms are limited. They have no facilities for making extensive repairs and lack many necessary facilities for the personnel. The destroyer tender supplies these shortcomings for the destroyers she serves. The destroyer tender accompanies the fleet to serve the destroyers attached to it. Tenders at one time were called mother ships. It was an appropriate name for them. In the Navy today there are eight destroyer tenders; six are in commission and two out of commission. The tonnage in the destroyer category in our combatant ships is now 190,000 tons. This allows for about 124 under-age destroyers. It is considered that the proper ratio of the new modern destroyer to a destroyer tender is 18 destroyers to 1 tender. In other words, 18 destroyers will be based on the mother ship, the destroyer tender. A rough estimate as to the cost is approximately $11,513,220 and the complement is 31 officers and 573 men.

MINE SWEEPERS

Mine sweepers, as the name implies, are used to sweep areas and channels, through which the fleet must pass. They should be as small as possible in order to be handy; should have light draft to lessen the chances of their hulls striking a mine. The Navy has 28 mine sweepers; 21 in commission and 7 out of commission. The mine sweeper proposed in this bill is a replacement.

In peacetime a mine sweeper is engaged in training personnel in the technique of mining and mine sweeping. A rough estimate of the cost is $1,500,000. It will have a speed of 18 knots and a complement of 4 officers and 57 men.

SUBMARINE TENDERS

Submarine tenders are mother ships to submarines based on them. Submarines are even more dependent on tenders than destroyers because a submarine designed to operate both on the surface and beneath the surface has the interior so cramped with machinery that space is not available for the accommodation of personnel or spare parts, provisions, ammunition, and similar essential items. Submarines are dependent on the tender for the general overhaul of machinery, torpedoes, construction work, and for assistance in upkeep. All the shortcomings of the submarine must be provided for in the tender. The tender carries the physician, the supply officer, and other personnel for whom there is no room on the submarine. The tonnage in the submarine category is now 68,298 tons. This allows for 47 under-age submarines. The correct ratio of submarines to tenders is 12 to 1. It is estimated that the cost of the submarine tender will be in the neighborhood of $12,600,000. It will have a complement of 31 officers and 624 men.

FLEET TUGS

Fleet tugs are used to tow targets for target practice and to assist the fleet in berthing vessels and to assist the large vessels to maneuver in restricted places.

In time of war they would be used to tow damaged vessels and to assist in salvage work. In times of peace they are used for every kind of tow service in the naval districts and outlying naval stations, as well as with the fleet. The Navy has at present 28 vessels classed as ocean-going tugs; 20 are in commission and 8 out of commission, the latter being in poor condition. A rough estimate of the cost is $1,760,000. It will have a complement of 4 officers and 47 men.

OILERS

The primary service of oilers is to transport oil and fuel for the fleet. A Navy oiler carries not only fuel oil for the boilers but also Diesel oil for submarines, lubricating oil for machinery, and gasoline for airplanes. A Navy oiler must be fitted with the necessary gear for refueling vessels at sea. A merchant oiler does not have such gear for refueling at sea, and as a rule do not have pumps of the required capacity. There are at present 17 oilers on the Navy list. Seven are in commission; 10 are out of commission. The rough estimate of the cost for the oiler is $8,496,800. It will carry a complement of 13 officers and 178 men.

Let me repeat that every vessel provided for in this bill, except the seaplane tender, is a replacement vessel. It is estimated that it will require about 3½ years to finish this program, and when the submarine tender, seaplane tender, the oiler, the tug, and the mine sweeper have been built they will take the place of some old and obsolete auxiliary vessel of that type.

The following is a statement in connection with estimates and bids on battleships nos. 55 and 56:

Bids were received from three private shipyards and estimates from two navy yards. The private yards were required to submit bids on a fixed-price basis and also on an adjusted-price basis. The navy yards were required to submit estimates of the estimated amount of expenditure from the appropriation "Replacement of naval vessels", and, in addition, to estimate the additional expenditures known in the navy yards as "statistical overhead" that would be occasioned by the construction of the vessels. The private shipyards, as well as the navy yards, were required to submit details of their bids and estimates on a standard form that had been prepared by the Navy Department, which was designed to admit of ready comparison of bid and estimate. The navy yard estimates were based on present-day conditions as regards both labor and material. No allowance was made in the navy yard estimates for any possible future increases in either labor or material. Presumably this was the case also in connection with the private shipyard bids, as the adjusted-price feature was intended to protect the private builder from labor and material increases during the life of the contract. A comparison of the adjusted-price bid and the navy yard estimate of total navy yard cost is shown in the following table:

	Hull	Machinery	Total
Bethlehem	$34,550,000	$15,320,000	$49,870,000
New York Ship	32,939,163	14,890,831	47,829,994
Newport News	31,829,950	14,382,550	46,212,500
New York Yard	23,893,298	13,372,545	37,265,843
Philadelphia	23,514,600	13,045,700	36,560,300

The bid of the Newport News Shipbuilding & Dry Dock Co. was low, but was irregular and was therefore thrown out by the Navy Department.

The difference between the lowest navy yard estimate—that from Philadelphia, and the lowest private shipyard bid—that from New York Shipbuilding Corporation, is $11,269,694. Part of the difference between the bid and estimate is due to the inclusion in the bid of $4,348,181 for margin and profit. There was no corresponding figure in the navy yard estimate. A further, and by no means small, part of the difference between the private shipyard bids and the navy-yard estimates was due to the lower operating overhead as estimated by the navy yards in comparison with similar operating overhead from the private shipbuilding yards; for example, the percentage of operating overhead to direct labor is as follows:

Newport News Shipbuilding & Dry Dock Co	94.5
New York Shipbuilding Corporation	72.2
Bethlehem Shipbuilding Corporation	[1] 38.2
New York Navy Yard	52.4
Philadelphia Navy Yard	52.7

[1] There is evidently something wrong as regards the percentage of operating overhead by the Bethlehem Shipbuilding Corporation, as, roughly speaking, their operating overhead should be approximately the same as for the other private shipyards.

In connection with this question of operating overhead, the Navy boards on changes have been allowing 80 percent as the overhead percentage in connection with changes of cost adjudications at Newport News. Just why this company should use 94.5 for operating overhead is not clear. The operating overhead for the navy yards includes not only the overhead directly chargeable to the building appropriation "Replacement of navy vessels" but also the "Statistical overhead" referred to above. Depreciation has not been included in any of the above percentages.

The difference between private shipyard bids and navy yard estimates is, in general, due to the following:

(a) The necessary inclusion in the private shipyard bid of allowances for taxes, insurance, and other similar items which are not incurred in navy yards and were not allowed for in the navy yard estimates.

(b) The inclusion of amounts in the private shipyard bids for margin and profit. Such allowances were not made in the navy-yard estimates.

(c) Higher operating overhead in the case of the private shipyard bid than for the navy-yard estimates.

6. In addition to the above known reasons, it is the belief of the Navy Department that the private shipbuilders were much concerned over the amount of money involved in the construction of a battleship and the length of time that the contract would run, and being uncertain as to what would happen in the industrial world in the next 4 years or so, and being unwilling to rely entirely upon the adjusted-price features of the proposed contract, made much more liberal estimates for labor and material than was the case in the navy-yard estimates. As pointed out above, the difference between the New York Shipbuilding Co.'s bid and the lowest navy-yard estimate was $11,300,000 in round numbers. Of this sum, $2,038,291 is due to (a) above; $4,348,181 is due to (b) above; $2,758,504 is due to (c) above; and $2,155,024 probably due to industrial uncertainty.

Mr. MILLARD. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 6 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, this bill comes here with the unanimous report of the members of the committee on both the majority and the minority sides. I am the ranking minority member of the committee. I was very much interested in listening to the lame-duck discussion. I was also vitally interested in regard to the time of adjournment, as we all are.

Mr. Chairman, the object and purpose of the bill now before the House is the authorization to proceed with the construction of six auxiliary vessels for the Navy.

In 1934 the Congress enacted the Vinson-Trammell Act, which authorized the construction of the combatant categories of vessels that were limited by the treaties signed at Washington on February 6, 1922, and at London, April 22, 1930. As authorized by this act of 1934, modern fighting ships, to the limits set by these treaties, are being constructed so that within a few years the Navy will have a fleet composed of the last word in combatant types. However, in order that this fleet of magnificent ships of war may be effective, they must be adequately serviced by a fleet of auxiliary vessels.

The auxiliary vessels which serve the fleet include such as repair ships, stores ships, munition ships, hospital ships, oilers, tenders, tugs, and mine sweepers. Many of the vessels of these types have been improvised by the conversion of vessels not originally designed for the purpose for which now used. They are inadequate in numbers and in characteristics, being too slow and with insufficient radius of action to enable them to accompany the fleet even in its peacetime cruising. In the event of actual hostilities these less spectacular but equally essential craft will have to be augmented by the conversion of merchant-marine vessels. However, the nucleus of these types of vessels should be composed of modern auxiliary vessels not only capable of operating with the fleet but also trained through daily service with it. To be effective in war the fighting fleet must be mobile and so self-supporting that it can operate and maintain itself wherever necessary, even at a long distance from our coasts. The mission of auxiliary vessels is, therefore, to make effective, through the function of service and supply, the fighting vessels of the fleet.

The numbers of auxiliary vessels that would be needed in time of war would be far in excess of what is needed in time of peace. However, it is the policy to operate in time of peace only the minimum number of auxiliary vessels sufficient to fulfill the peacetime requirements of maintaining and operating the fleet kept in condition in time of peace.

It is of the greatest importance that these auxiliaries, which must be of special design and of high mobility, be provided in advance of their need in war in order that the fleet may operate at the high efficiency for which designed and without which it may fall short of its vital purpose. The bill now before you provides for some of the modern auxiliaries needed for this proper maintenance and service to the combatant fleet. It will be necessary to come before you from year to year to get authorizations for the additional modern auxiliary vessels required for peacetime service to the fleet. All but one of the vessels—the airplane tender—called for in this bill are replacements for vessels of similar types.

In conclusion, I wish to stress that nearly all of the present auxiliary vessels of the Navy are old, are lacking in speed, and are nearing the end of their useful life. The Navy now has only seven such vessels that may be considered as modern fleet auxiliaries, and the newest of these seven—a submarine tender—was added to the Navy in 1926, 11 years ago. Many of these auxiliary vessels in service are converted vessels, not originally designed for the purpose for which they are now used. Some of those in commission; that is, in active service, date back to 1898, 1907, and all the small auxiliary vessels, tugs, and mine sweepers, were built before or during the World War. All these converted vessels and old vessels are defective in speed and radius of action to accompany the fleet in cruising and in fleet operations. If the auxiliary ships that accompany the fleet are slow, all the combatant ships of the fleet have to accommodate their speed to that of the slow auxiliaries and by so doing would, in time of war, expose themselves to submarine attack. The experience of the World War demonstrated that the higher the speed of a ship, the less her chances of being torpedoed by a submarine. If the speed of a ship is not more than 10 knots, which is the top speed of many of the old auxiliaries, such a ship is an easy prey to submarines.

The passage of this bill is necessary, in my opinion, in the interest of adequate national defense, and I, therefore, urge your support of it. [Applause.]

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I have no more requests on this side for time.

Mr. MILLARD. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. WOLVERTON] such time as he may desire.

Mr. WOLVERTON. Mr. Chairman, the bill now before the House is necessary from two standpoints, namely, to provide adequate facilities to maintain the full usefulness of the fleet, and (2) to provide work for our shipbuilding industry.

As to the first of these two reasons for the passage of this bill, it is unnecessary to make any extended argument. The fact is well established that the proper operation of our naval forces requires the type of auxiliary craft provided for in the bill. Without them the efficiency of the fleet is handicapped and its effectiveness greatly curtailed. Each one has a distinct and important service to fulfill.

The seaplane tender serves as a base for seaplanes of the bomber and scouting type. As an auxiliary it permits them to operate far removed from a shore base or air station. It provides all the facilities that are necessary for such types of seaplanes. It carries gasoline, oil, bombs, stores, spare parts for the planes, and is also equipped to make necessary repairs to keep the planes in operating condition.

The destroyer tender has been rightly termed a "mother ship" to destroyers, to which it acts as an auxiliary. Destroyers are of small tonnage; most of their available space is taken up with boilers and engines. Carrying as they do a large armament of guns and torpedoes they require a large crew to man and operate them. It can be readily seen that because of this condition it is impossible for them to have within them the facilities that are necessary to make repairs or storage room for any considerable amount of supplies.

The mine sweeper, as its name indicates, is utilized to clear channels or harbors of mines, preceding the entrance of the fleet.

The submarine tender is an absolute necessity for the efficient operation of submarines. The same reasons that exist for destroyer tenders apply with increased force to submarine tenders. The space within a submarine is even more greatly restricted than in the destroyer. Practically no space is available for any other than the immediate essentials. The interior is so filled with operating machinery that their usefulness for any considerable time, away from a base, would be an impossibility. Consequently the tender makes up for all that is lacking in the submarine itself by providing necessary storage and repair facilities that are precluded in submarine construction.

The oiler is nothing more or less than a supply ship that carries every type of oil used in operation of the fleet. It makes possible refueling of the ships at distant points.

The fleet tug is a utility vessel designed to help the larger vessels of the fleet in docking or making other maneuvers in harbors or other restricted areas where they are unable to be readily manipulated owing to their great size.

Thus it will be seen that each of the auxiliary craft provided for in this bill has a distinct and important service to render if the highest degree of usefulness for the fleet is to be attained.

Now, as to the second reason for the passage of this bill—namely, work for our shipbuilding industry.

No one who is familiar with the construction of a ship will fail to see the importance of maintaining our shipyards in time of peace as well as in time of war. Shipbuilding requires experienced craftsmen. There is no industry that requires so many and diversified skilled trades as the shipbuilding industry. These craftsmen cannot be made overnight when an emergency is upon us. Their training extends over a period of years. If the requisite personnel is not in existence when the need arises, it is too late, and we suffer the consequences. Our experience during the World War has taught us the necessity of having at all times a trained shipbuilding force in our Nation prepared at a moment's notice to respond. I cannot emphasize too strongly the disastrous results that will follow if we do not always have ready these trained shipbuilders.

I am seeking to impress the importance of this matter upon the membership of the House for the reason that we are in danger at this very time of losing this important arm of our national defense. We are in danger of losing it because of lack of work to keep our shipyards busy. During the years of the depression there has been very little ship construction work. At the present time it has reached the lowest ebb of any time during the entire depression.

I live in what was once the greatest shipbuilding area in the entire country. But, I regret to say, that it has dwindled and dwindled away until it is now but a mere memory of the past. One of our great shipbuilding companies that had existed for over 100 years closed up entirely a few years ago, and the New York Shipbuilding Co., located at Camden, N. J., that was once a beehive of activity is approaching perilously near the point where there will be no work to keep its gates open. It is indeed a tragic sight to see this once great shipbuilding plant with ship ways and facilities to construct 22 ships at one time with no work in sight when the ship now under construction is completed. And this, in a general way, is a picture of the shipbuilding industry throughout the Nation. It is gasping for life at this very time.

What happens when a shipyard closes its gates for lack of work? Distress is immediately experienced by the workers through loss of employment. And their distress is immediately felt by the businessmen of the community and by the municipalities in which they live because of their inability to pay taxes. Distress is experienced all along the line in every avenue of activity. But, furthermore, it is serious from the standpoint of the Nation, because when work ceases in their chosen trade the workers soon begin to drift elsewhere seeking other employment, and the fine personnel that has been built up over a period of years is destroyed and lost to the shipbuilding industry, never to be recovered except at a frightful cost and many years of effort.

No one who thinks in terms of national welfare in time of war emergency can fail to recognize the folly of permitting this highly trained force of men to be dispersed and lost as an arm of defense.

Certainly the men who have given themselves in the service of a great industry are entitled to help from their Government by providing the necessary work to tide them over until more prosperous days.

And the individuals who have made the necessary capital outlay to construct the plant that provides work for thousands of workers in an industry so vital to our national welfare and security are entitled to some consideration and assistance in times such as these. They do not ask Government grants or financial aid, but merely work—necessary work—to keep their plants in operation.

And may I also remind the membership of this House that the benefits from ship construction are not merely local in character. The benefits spread throughout the length and breadth of this Nation. Every State makes some contribution in the form of its products to the construction of a ship. It would be interesting, indeed, if my time permitted, for me to take the different States of the Union and show the product or products of each particular State that enter into the building of a ship. It would be astounding and surprising to many who have never realized that the construction of ships provide benefits Nation-wide in scope.

I ask that serious consideration be given to these vital reasons showing why the Federal Government at this time should provide work for the shipbuilding industry, and that for these reasons you give your approval to the pending bill. The passage of this bill will provide but a small part of what is necessary. I am hopeful, however, that the importance of adopting a policy of providing work to keep the shipbuilding industry alive will find expression not only by the authorization for the construction of the six ships provided for in this bill but also in an increased and greatly expanded program for the construction of a merchant marine that will be in accord with the dignity and the necessity of a nation such as our own.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That for the purpose of furnishing or replacing auxiliary vessels urgently necessary for the proper maintenance and operation of the Navy, the President of the United States is hereby authorized to undertake the construction of about 36,050 tons (light displacement tonnage) of such auxiliary vessels, as follows:

(a) One seaplane tender of about 8,300 tons;
(b) One destroyer tender of about 9,000 tons;
(c) One mine sweeper of about 600 tons;
(d) One submarine tender of about 9,000 tons;
(e) One fleet tug of about 1,150 tons; and
(f) One oiler of about 8,000 tons.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, line 8, after the word "follows", insert "at a total cost for all vessels of not more than $50,000,000."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Committee amendment: Page 2, after line 6, insert the following:

"SEC. 2. Not less than 50 percent of the vessels herein authorized, allocated on an approximate tonnage basis, including such portions thereof as are customarily manufactured in Government plants, shall be constructed or manufactured in Government navy yards, naval stations, naval gun factories, naval ordnance plants, or arsenals of the United States: Provided, That the President may, however, should the public interests in his judgment so require, have the vessels built in Government or private yards notwithstanding the allocation otherwise imposed: Provided further, That the provisions of section 3 of the act entitled "An act to establish the composition of the United States Navy with respect to the categories of vessels limited by the treaties signed at Washington, February 6, 1922, and at London, April 22, 1930, at the limits prescribed by those treaties; to authorize the construction of certain naval vessels; and for other purposes", approved March 27, 1934 (48 Stat. 505; U. S. C., title 34, sec. 496), as amended, are hereby made applicable to contracts for the construction of the vessels or any portion thereof herein authorized.

"SEC. 3. Any bid for the construction on the Pacific coast of any of the vessels authorized by this act shall have a differential of 6 percent in its favor which shall be considered by the Secretary of the Navy in awarding contracts for the construction of said vessels."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule, the Committee rises.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. LAMNECK, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (S. 2193) to authorize the construction of certain auxiliary vessels for the Navy, pursuant to House Resolution 257, he reported the bill back to the House with sundry amendments agreed to in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule, the previous question is ordered.

Is a separate vote demanded upon any amendment? If not, the Chair will put them en gros.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to extend their remarks in the RECORD on the bill (S. 2193) to authorize the construction of certain auxiliary vessels for the Navy, which has just been passed.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

NAVAL MEDICAL CENTER IN DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Mr. Speaker, I call up House Resolution 256.

House Resolution 256

Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of H. R. 6547, a bill to authorize the Secretary of the Navy to proceed with the construction of certain public works in or in the vicinity of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and shall continue not to exceed 1 hour, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority members of the Committee on Naval Affairs, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the reading of the bill for amendment the Committee shall rise and report the same to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit, with or without instructions.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Mr. Speaker, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MAPES].

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, I have no requests for time on this side, and, so far as I am concerned, the resolution may be adopted by unanimous consent.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Mr. Speaker, this is a rule for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 6547) to authorize the Secretary of the Navy to proceed with the construction of certain public works in or in the vicinity of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes. I move the previous question on the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 6547) to authorize the Secretary of the Navy to proceed with the construction of certain public works in or in the vicinity of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 6547, with Mr. McREYNOLDS in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

By unanimous consent, the first reading of the bill was dispensed with.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. DREWRY].

Mr. DREWRY of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, the issues presented by this bill are few; in fact, as I see it, there are only two. First, the necessity for the establishment of a new naval hospital in Washington, or nearby, and, secondly, the cost.

So far as this particular matter is concerned, it would be well to call your attention to the fact that in 1931 Mr. Britten, who was then the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs, realizing the need of a new hospital, on his own motion proposed a measure which passed the Congress, providing $3,200,000 to build a new hospital in Washington. Unfortunately, he provided in his bill that the hospital should be built on the present site. When an investigation was made it was ascertained that the acreage was not sufficient to take care of a modern hospital with all the facilities that would be required. Consequently, nothing was done toward carrying out the authorization that was made at that time.

Therefore this measure has been brought in, and all that this bill does is to add to what has already been done by Congress a further appropriation of $1,500,000 in order that a proper hospital may be built.

The bill also provides that if the Secretary of the Navy should decide that the present site is not the proper place upon which the hospital should be constructed, he is at liberty to proceed to examine other sites and select one that will be more appropriate.

Mr. Chairman, so far as I can see, there is no need to discuss this matter at any great length. Everyone who has been over there admits there is a great, immediate necessity for a new hospital. There are only 178 beds in the hospital at this time, and they need equipment and facilities for 600. They have a prospective hospital population of around 10,000 in the vicinity that would go to this hospital for hospitalization. They come from as far as Quantico, Indianhead, and the navy yard here. There is every reason why a new hospital should be constructed.

The Committee on Naval Affairs appointed a subcommittee to make a personal examination and investigation of the present hospital. They reported unanimously that one is needed and should be erected in this vicinity. Individual members of the full committee have visited the hospital and made their own examinations. It has been reported on previously by another Congress, as I have stated, and it has the approval of the Budget and of the Navy Department.

Mr. TERRY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DREWRY of Virginia. I yield.

Mr. TERRY. How many beds is it intended to have in the hospital?

Mr. DREWRY of Virginia. Six hundred is the present proposal. This would take care of 300 during peacetime and double that number in an emergency.

Mr. TERRY. What is intended to be done with the present hospital?

Mr. DREWRY of Virginia. It depends upon whether the Secretary of the Navy decides to retain this site for the new hospital or whether he will select a site somewhere else. If the present site is retained, of course, it will be used as the location of the new hospital; but if he decides to locate the new hospital somewhere else, what will be done with the present hospital will be a subject for future decision. There are some departments of the Government perhaps that would like to have it.

Mr. TERRY. It is not the intention, if you go somewhere else, to continue to run the present hospital as a naval hospital?

Mr. DREWRY of Virginia. No.

Mr. THOM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DREWRY of Virginia. I yield.

Mr. THOM. Is the cost of this structure to be borne out of the so-called naval fund to which the men in the Navy contribute?

Mr. DREWRY of Virginia. I do not think so, except to the extent of $100,000.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DREWRY of Virginia. I yield.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I may state that this bill will require an appropriation of the full amount and the naval hospital fund will not be used for the purpose of constructing this hospital at all.

Mr. THOM. Was it not the intention that it was to be used for this purpose?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. No; the intention of the act of 1931 was to use $100,000 of the naval fund for architectural fees. This amount has been used up and they will use part of the architectural plans for the hospital on the new site in the event the Secretary puts it at a new place. If it is constructed at the present site, he already has his architectural drawings, plans, and specifications paid for out of the $100,000 provided in the act of 1931.

Mr. THOM. Then what is this hospital fund used for?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. The hospital fund is made up of a monthly contribution by the enlisted men and officers of the Navy and by fines and forfeitures, and, by permission of Congress, is used for the building of hospitals; but the gentleman must bear in mind that the individuals in the Navy should not be forced to pay for their buildings in which they are to be hospitalized. This is a duty of the Federal Government.

Mr. THOM. But what is that money used for?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. It is in a fund to be used in cases of emergency.

Mr. THOM. What is the amount of that fund now?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I forget now, but it was about a million dollars or $2,000,000 during the war. I do not know what it is now.

Mr. THOM. The understanding was when this matter was discussed previously before the Naval Appropriations Committee that a considerable amount for the construction of this building was to come out of the naval fund.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Not one penny of this proposed expenditure comes out of the Naval Hospital fund. This comes by direct appropriation from the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. MILLARD. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the Committee, this bill authorizes the Secretary of the Navy to proceed with the construction of certain public works in, or in the vicinity of, the District of Columbia. Specifically, it provides for the acquisition of land and the construction thereon of the buildings necessary for a modern hospital, a naval medical school, and a Navy medical center.

This question of providing new buildings for the Naval Hospital here at the seat of our Government is not a new one. The need for new buildings was recognized over 7 years ago, when the then chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs, the Honorable Fred Britten, introduced a bill to provide for the remodeling and reconstruction of the Naval Hospital here in Washington at that time. The bill introduced by Britten originated in the Committee on Naval Affairs and was not instigated by the Navy Department, as is the case in the present measure. That bill was enacted into law in 1931 and authorized an expenditure of $3,200,000. However, no remodeling or reconstruction was undertaken under the authority of the act of 1931. The need for the replacement of the Naval Hospital facilities which existed over 7 years ago still exists and is more urgent now than it was then. Many of the buildings in use were of temporary wartime construction. These deteriorated rapidly and were such a fire hazard it became necessary to abandon them for use as hospital spaces so that the bed space has now been reduced to about 30 percent of what it was in 1930. In addition, the buildings of permanent construction also have deteriorated to such a degree that special safety precautions have to be taken to make them safe for use. These conditions, coupled with the fact that the buildings have become obsolete, make the present hospital wholly inadequate to properly fulfill its mission. The condition of the buildings makes it necessary to spend large sums for maintenance and upkeep. In the interest of economy, therefore, there is a real need to approve the provisions of the bill now under consideration. If the need for a new hospital existed in 1931, there can be no doubt of an even greater need existing now.

The act approved in 1931, restricted the replacement of hospital facilities to the present site and the space of the present site is restricted by the Parks and Planning Commission which leaves only about 8 acres available for construction. It is plainly evident, therefore, that such a small area is wholly inadequate for the buildings and recreational spaces necessary for a modern and model hospital, the proposed medical school, and medical center. Since the enactment of the 1931 law, indications point to the probability of the erection of a building to house the War Department to the eastward of the present location, and a Navy building to the westward of it. Such being the case it is plainly evident that construction of any new hospital facilities on the site now in use would be ill advised and highly undesirable. For all of the above reasons and many more that are just as important, it is imperative that the Navy be authorized to obtain a new site for the construction of the buildings necessary for a modern up-to-date hospital, medical school, and medical center, and one that will be desirable and suitable for many years to come and one sufficiently large to lend itself to expansion in the years to come.

The Committee on Naval Affairs has gone into this question thoroughly and has reached the conclusion there is no doubt of the need for the proposed new hospital. I, therefore, strongly urge you give the measure your support and pass this authorizing legislation.

This is a departmental measure and has the approval of the Budget Director.

Mr. THOMPSON of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLARD. Yes.

Mr. THOMPSON of Illinois. Can the gentleman tell me whether it is the intention to build a medical center for the Navy, comparable to that of the Army maintained as to what is known as Walter Reed Hospital? Is this to be an institution of one big building or of some small ones?

Mr. MILLARD. I do not think any of us know exactly yet where the site will be, whether inside or outside of the District of Columbia.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLARD. Yes.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. This bill contemplates the construction of a modern up-to-date hospital, and in addition thereto it will have connected with the hospital a medical school and a dental school, and if one can classify that as a medical center, it could be so classified, but it will not be of the large scale of Walter Reed Hospital, because the population that will be hospitalized does not require such an enormous institution.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from Georgia yield for a question not related to this bill?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I yield.

Mr. McCORMACK. A bill came out of the gentleman's committee which provides, as I remember it, that a naval officer may be appointed as Director of the Bureau of Inspection in the Department of Commerce. Is that correct?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. It has been limited to that one position at the request of the administration.

Mr. McCORMACK. Can the gentleman give any information as to when he expects to bring the bill up for consideration?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. That being a House bill, and the likelihood of any new legislation not being considered at this session, in view of what is taking place at the other end of the Capitol, it will not be at an early date.

Mr. McCORMACK. But the gentleman is hopeful that it will be next session?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I am not making any statement any further than what I have said.

Mr. Chairman, I ask that the Clerk read the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act approved February 25, 1931 (46 Stat. 1419), be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to read as follows:

"That the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized to construct in the District of Columbia, or in the immediate vicinity thereof, on land already acquired or hereby authorized to be acquired therefor by purchase, gift, or otherwise, buildings to replace the present Naval Hospital and Naval Medical School at Washington, D. C., with the utilities, accessories, and appurtenances pertaining thereto, including facilities for the Naval Medical Center and Naval Dental School."

With the following committee amendment:

Page 2, line 3, after the word "school", insert "Provided, That the advice of the National Capital Park and Planning Commission be requested before the acquisition of property for this purpose and before the construction herein authorized shall begin; if located in the District of Columbia, the construction herein authorized be subject to the approval of the National Park Service under authority of section 6 of the Public Buildings Act of May 25, 1926, as amended (U. S. C., title 40, sec. 346)."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided further, Total cost of the land and of the construction hereby authorized shall not exceed $4,850,000.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 2, line 11, before the word "total", insert the words "That the", and in line 13, after the figures, insert "of which not more than 15 percent shall be expended for the purchase of the site."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. The Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized to accept on behalf of the United States, free from encumbrances and without cost to the United States, the title in fee simple to any land which may be acquired by gift.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule, the Committee will rise.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. MCREYNOLDS, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 6547, and, pursuant to House Resolution 256, he reported the same back to the House with sundry amendments agreed to in the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule, the previous question is ordered. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? If not, the amendments will be put en gross.

The question is on agreeing to the amendments.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

ATTENDANCE OF MARINE BAND AT G. A. R. REUNION

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute to make a statement.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, the purpose of making this statement is to inform the House that if recognized by the Chair I will ask unanimous consent to take up the bill H. R. 7641, a bill unanimously reported by the Committee on Naval Affairs, which permits the Marine Band to go to the city of Madison, Wis., and participate in the encampment of the Grand Army of the Republic from September 5 to September 10, 1937, at a cost of $7,500. The policy of the Budget and the policy of the Naval Affairs Committee is to permit the Marine Band to participate in the Confederate veterans' annual reunion and the Grand Army of the Republic reunion, and no other reunions. The band has already been authorized by the Congress to attend the Confederate veterans' reunion at New Orleans.

If the Chair will recognize me at this time, I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, for the immediate consideration of the bill (H. R. 7641) to authorize the attendance of the Marine Band at the national encampment of the Grand Army of the Republic to be held at Madison, Wis., September 5 to 10, inclusive, 1937.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will recognize the gentleman with the understanding that there is probably no opposition to the bill.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. There is no opposition, as I understand, Mr. Speaker.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

Mr. MILLARD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, this particular bill has the approval of the entire Committee on Naval Affairs. It is to send the Marine Band to the Grand Army of the Republic Encampment at Madison, Wis. I think we are generally against the policy of sending the band promiscuously throughout the country, as in the past, but we are in favor of this proposition.

I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President is authorized to permit the band of the United States Marine Corps to attend and give concerts at the National Encampment of the Grand Army of the Republic to be held at Madison, Wis., from September 5 to 10, inclusive, 1937.

SEC. 2. For the purpose of defraying the expenses of such band in attending and giving concerts at such encampment there is authorized to be appropriated the sum of $7,500, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to carry out the provisions of this act: Provided, That in addition to transportation and Pullman accommodations the leaders and members of the Marine Band be allowed not to exceed $5 per day each for actual living expenses while on the duty, and that the payment of such expenses shall be in addition to the pay and allowances to which they would be entitled while serving at their permanent station.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

NONMILITARY ACTIVITIES, WAR DEPARTMENT—APPROPRIATION BILL, 1938

Mr. SNYDER of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill (H. R. 7493) making appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1938, for civil functions administered by the War Department, and for other purposes, and I ask unanimous consent that the statement may be read in lieu of the report.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. STEFAN. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I wish every Member of the House would give a little attention, and I hope you have before you the conference report. First, I want to compliment the membership of this committee for making an earnest effort to reduce some of our expenditures. I know they have worked very, very hard, but I think every Member of this House realizes the time has come when we should save some money wherever it is possible.

Mr. Speaker, we cannot justify the lavish expenditures of our taxpayers' money in this appropriation for the High Commissioner in the Philippine Islands. Here is an appropriation of $152,000 for this High Commissioner to run our business in the Philippine Islands, which we are leaving in 8 years.

In view of the fact that our President has announced that he wants a 10-percent cut in Government expenditures for the purpose of aiding in the balancing of the Budget, I feel we should start helping him save the taxpayers' money wherever we can. Here is an item of expense which can be cut down. It was cut down somewhat by our own committee, and it is raised back by the Senate conferees.

Back in my district of Nebraska many farmers have been forced to leave their farms because they could not borrow a few dollars to buy feed and seed. Many of these farmers today are forced to cut their oats because they could not get enough money for poison to eradicate the grasshoppers which have attacked their fields.

Right here in Washington newspapers print stories of old people who are going hungry because they cannot get their old-age benefit money. Intimations are made in these papers that old men and women are on the verge of starvation.

Back in Nebraska we know where men and women who have families are forced to live on less than $20 a month because of their financial circumstances, and they are forced on relief.

Yet here in this item you are taking the money these people pay in taxes for the purpose of giving a political appointee $10,000 a year as an entertainment fund. Besides this you are giving him $18,000 a year salary. Besides that you give him $20,000 a year to rent his office and his living quarters. You also give him three chauffeurs and three fine automobiles. To you who have been spending billions, a $10,000 item is small change, but to many people in my district it represents a fortune.

With the great amount of suffering right here at home we should hesitate in this wild expenditure of money. I especially object to the $10,000 a year for entertainment for this High Commissioner. It is too much. It represents waste. Our Ambassador to London does not get that much money for the same purpose. It is my understanding that we pay him $4,800 for entertainment purposes. Why, I ask you, should we give $10,000 for entertainment to this Commissioner in a minor country? Our own committee admits it is too much. Our committee cut this item to $7,800. Now the committee comes back and tells us the Senate conferees put the amount back to $10,000. I earnestly request the committee to stand with me for a drastic cut in this item.

If you are going to insist on this lavish expenditure of money for a political appointee to use for entertainment purposes, I do not know how I am going to explain to the taxpayers in my district that this Congress is really spending their money efficiently. What am I going to tell farmers who want to borrow a few hundred dollars for feed and seed and who cannot even get that when they point to items like this where we take thousands of dollars of their money to be used by these appointees for the purposes of giving entertainments and banquets and cocktail parties? I for one will never vote for any such unnecessary spending, and I beg every one of you to realize that if we keep these things up our national debt, which is now near $40,000,000,000, will never be paid.

I need not tell Members of this House again that the Government is spending $8 for every four dollars and a half we take in. You are aware that our financial experts are worried over our present and future financial condition. After all of these months, during which we have been endeavoring to call your attention to the fact that the Treasury of the people is depleted, some notice is being given and some department heads are making a slight show at following suggestions to cut expenditures. These feeble attempts will bear no fruit unless this Congress takes a real stand right now. Do not forget our national debt, which is climbing so fast. Do not forget that you have gone into the red about $2,000,000,000 during the last year. Let us set a principle here. Let us show by our actions on this bill that we mean to really eliminate useless expenditures and give the taxpayers a run for their money. Here is a $10,000 item which represents useless and unnecessary expense. It makes no difference if there has been a precedent in the islands on huge appropriations for entertainments. I for one object to spending the people's money in this fashion when it is needed so badly in my district, where the people are in need. I refuse, Mr. Speaker, to vote for any of this kind of lavish spending, and I will continue to stand here in this House of the people's representatives and vigorously object. I demand that this conference report be voted down and sent back to conference so that it may be brought back with a showing that all unnecessary expenditures be cut out. I know the needs of the people in the Third District of Nebraska. They sent me here to represent them. They are 1,700 miles away from this Nation's Capital. They cannot speak for themselves. I feel that what I have said represents the sentiment of most of the serious-minded people back home.

Mr. LUCKEY of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEFAN. I yield.

Mr. LUCKEY of Nebraska. Did we not have a building down there for governmental purposes? The gentleman spoke of our paying $20,000 a year rent.

Mr. STEFAN. Yes; we had a building. We gave it to the Philippine people, but we were bad traders. They traded us a piece of ocean for it, and now we are building a wall around it and filling that in. In the meantime you are spending $20,000 a year for rent. We are poor Yankee traders.

Mr. LUCKEY of Nebraska. I feel that we should cut some of these unnecessary expenditures.

Mr. POWERS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEFAN. I yield.

Mr. POWERS. I agree with what the gentleman says. I may tell the gentleman that in conference I voted against the $10,000 entertainment fee for the High Commissioner of the Philippines. The gentleman mentioned that the High Commissioner's salary is exempt from income tax. Why is that so?

Mr. STEFAN. Because of a ruling of the Bureau of Internal Revenue. I think if the gentleman makes an investigation he will find that most of these salaries are exempt from income tax.

Mr. POWERS. I think it would be well for the gentleman to call the attention of the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means to that fact, and when the new revenue bill is written to see that it requires an income tax to be paid by these officials.

Mr. STEFAN. I shall be very glad to do that. And at the same time I wish to thank the distinguished and able gentleman from New Jersey for his continued efforts to eliminate many of these useless expenditures. The gentleman is the ranking member of the minority on this committee and has given many hours of his valuable time in working over these tremendous questions which face his very important committee. The gentleman is one of the most able statesmen in the House. He is continually working for the interests of the taxpayers of our Nation.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, without entering into any controversy with the distinguished gentleman from Nebraska, I think it is only fair to say that the Governor General of the Philippines has been greatly misrepresented lately in the press in relation to a controversy that occurred over there with reference to precedence on state occasions.

Mr. STEFAN. If the gentleman will yield, he is not the Governor General; he is the High Commissioner.

Mr. McCORMACK. The High Commissioner. He represents the United States Government in his present capacity just as his predecessors have represented it. I do not think the gentleman intends to have his remarks apply to the present High Commissioner alone.

Mr. STEFAN. I am referring to the amount of money, not to the individual.

Mr. McCORMACK. Exemption from the payment of income tax has applied to his predecessors. Former Governor McNutt is not the only one who is receiving personal tax exemption.

I am not going to pass on whether $7,800 is too little or $10,000 too much for entertainment purposes, but the fact remains that representatives of the United States Government should be given some appropriation to carry on the entertainment which their position calls for; and my only purpose in rising was to ascertain from the gentleman whether or not his remarks applied to Former Governor McNutt or to the appropriation of money for entertainment purposes to any man who might occupy the position.

Mr. STEFAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to permit me to answer?

Mr. McCORMACK. Certainly.

Mr. STEFAN. I may say to my distinguished colleague from Massachusetts that my remarks are not directed to any individual. I do not care whether Commissioner McNutt wants to be toasted first or last; it makes no difference to me. That is not what I am referring to. I am referring to the fact that for the same purposes we allow the Ambassador in London only $4,800. Why should we spend $10,000 on entertainment in the Philippine Islands?

I am not directing my remarks to any one individual. I am directing them against the appropriation for this purpose, especially when people here are hungry; do not spend this money lavishly for entertainment purposes.

Mr. McCORMACK. I fear the gentleman has misinterpreted what I said. My purpose was to find out whether his remarks were applicable to the present High Commissioner or to the position as such without regard to who occupied it, and, so far as I am concerned, the gentleman has answered my question. Personally I think some kind of appropriation should be made. Whether it should be $10,000 or $7,800 I shall not enter into any controversy about, but, so far as I am concerned, the gentleman has satisfied me that the purpose of his remarks was not, directly or indirectly, to attack the present High Commissioner, but was to attack appropriations for this purpose without regard to who might occupy the position.

Mr. STEFAN. My distinguished friend is absolutely right. The people of the United States have a message from the President of the United States that he wants expenditures cut down and the Budget balanced. We have just heard from him that he wants 10 percent cut in all departments. How can you justify spending $10,000 of the taxpayers' money for drinking parties in the Philippine Islands when people in the United States are hungry? How can you justify that? I cannot.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield.

Mr. LUCAS. Can the gentleman from Massachusetts tell the Members how long this appropriation of $10,000 for entertainment purposes in the Philippine Islands has been carried?

Mr. McCORMACK. What is the purpose of the gentleman's inquiry?

Mr. LUCAS. I want to find out whether it is not the custom to appropriate $10,000—and has been for many, many years—in order to take any odium away from the present administration.

Mr. McCORMACK. I cannot answer that question. If the gentleman can, I suggest that he do so. The chairman of the subcommittee tells me that it is a regular appropriation.

Mr. Speaker, my purpose in rising was to find out from the distinguished gentleman who opened this discussion whether or not his remarks were directed against former Governor McNutt or against the appropriation of money for the office.

Mr. LUCAS. Obviously it should not be directed against Mr. McNutt or any other individual if the appropriation has been the same over a long period of time.

Mr. McCORMACK. Exactly, but the gentleman himself has frankly admitted that he did not have former Governor McNutt in mind.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania that the statement be read in lieu of the report?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the statement.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7493) making appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1938, for civil functions administered by the War Department, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 6, 8, and 11.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 3, 13, 14, 16, and 17, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 2: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 2, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$148,200"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 5: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 5, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$9,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 10: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 10, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: Omit the matter stricken out by said amendment and on page 9 of the bill, in line 10, after the word "States" omit the comma and insert the word "and"; and the Senate agree to the same.

The committee of conference report in disagreement amendments numbered 1, 7, 12, and 15.

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7493) making appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1938, for civil functions administered by the War Department, and for other purposes, submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon and recommended in the accompanying conference report as to each of such amendments, namely:

On amendments nos. 2, 3, 4, and 5, relating to the United States high commissioner to the Philippine Islands: Makes available as a maintenance allowance of the high commissioner $10,000, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $7,800, as proposed by the House; limits the salary of the legal adviser to $10,000, instead of $8,000 as proposed by the House and $12,000 as proposed by the Senate; limits the salary of the financial expert to $9,000, instead of $7,500 as proposed by the House and $10,000 as proposed by the Senate; makes available for the pay of the assistant legal adviser and assistant financial financial expert $7,500 each, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $6,500 each, as proposed by the House, and makes available for rent $18,600, as proposed by the House, instead of $20,000, as proposed by the Senate, the net result being an appropriation in toto of $148,200, instead of $140,500, as proposed by the House, and $152,600, as proposed by the Senate.

On amendment no. 6: Restores to the appropriation for rivers and harbors the provision proposed by the House for the protection of the town of Collinsville, Ala.

On amendments nos. 8, 9, and 10, relating to flood control under the Copeland Act: Strikes out, because of action which will be proposed as to amendment no. 7, the contractual authority proposed by the Senate, and also the proposal of the Senate that the increased direct appropriation proposed in amendment no. 7 should be available in such an amount only as allotments of W. P. A. funds might fall short of such additional appropriation; and removes from the paragraph providing for the acceptance and employment of contributed funds, on account of authorized flood control work, authority to accept contributions from other than States and political subdivisions thereof, as proposed by the Senate.

On amendment no. 11: Strikes out the provision inserted by the Senate in the appropriation for flood control, Mississippi River and tributaries, with respect to protection of cities and towns on the lower Mississippi River, the particular projects in view not having been authorized by law.

On amendment no. 13: Appropriates an additional $200,000 ($300,000 in all) as an emergency fund for flood control on tributaries of the Mississippi River, in consequence of a supplemental estimate of appropriation, as proposed by the Senate.

On amendment no. 14: Strikes out, as proposed by the Senate, specific provision in the appropriation for the support of the United States Soldiers' Home with respect to motor-propelled vehicles.

On amendment no. 16: Adds a new section making the appropriations in and provisions of the bill available and effective from and including July 1, 1937, as proposed by the Senate.

On amendment no. 17: Changes a section number, as proposed by the Senate.

Amendments reported in disagreement

The committee of conference report in disagreement the following amendments of the Senate:

Amendment no. 1: Providing for the care and maintenance of Congressional Cemetery, District of Columbia.

Amendment no. 7: Increasing the appropriation for flood control under the Copeland Act.

Amendment no. 12: Relating to the appropriation for flood control, Mississippi River and tributaries, including a proposed increase therein.

Amendment no. 15: Relating to the compensation of retired officers of the Regular Army on duty at the United States Soldiers' Home.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the first amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment no. 1: Page 2, after line 7, insert "and the graves and grounds in the Congressional Cemetery."

Mr. SNYDER of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur in the Senate amendment with an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment, insert the following: ", and that portion of Congressional Cemetery to which the United States has title and the graves of those buried therein, including the burial site of Pushmataha, a Choctaw Indian chief."

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment no. 7: Page 8, line 4, strike out "$30,000,000" and insert "$60,000,000."

Mr. SNYDER of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur in the Senate amendment with an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment, insert the following: "$30,000,000, and, in addition, $30,000,000 of the appropriation of $1,500,000,000 contained in the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1937 shall be available exclusively for carrying out the provisions of such Flood Control Act, approved June 22, 1936, and shall be expended under the direction of the Chief of Engineers under the provisions established in and in pursuance of such Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1937 not inconsistent herewith: Provided, That the requirement in section 1 of such Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1937 that no Federal construction project shall be undertaken unless and until there have been allocated and irrevocably set aside sufficient funds for its completion shall not apply to flood-control projects authorized by such Flood Control Act, approved June 22, 1936."

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNYDER of Pennsylvania. I yield to the distinguished gentleman from New York.

Mr. TABER. This means yielding to the Senate in the full amount. We simply reappropriate from the so-called relief bill enough money to make up the difference between what the House allowed and what the Senate asked for?

Mr. SNYDER of Pennsylvania. Yes. That was so as to keep the bill within the Budget estimates.

Mr. TABER. In order to not go beyond what has already been provided for?

Mr. SNYDER of Pennsylvania. That is right.

Mr. TABER. In funds?

Mr. SNYDER of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. TABER. It means giving the Senate everything they asked for in dollars?

Mr. SNYDER of Pennsylvania. Yes; in dollars for flood control; but no more than we have been given to understand would be spent, even if the Senate had accepted our bill.

Mr. TABER. But it keeps within the Budget?

Mr. SNYDER of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. TABER. Does the gentleman feel we ought to appropriate as much money as this?

Mr. SNYDER of Pennsylvania. I may say to the gentleman from New York that the Army engineers have told us right along, with reference to the Copeland Act, that they have sufficient projects in readiness to proceed with which would permit them to utilize $60,000,000 during 1938. Basing our judgment on that, the conferees of the Senate and House arrived at this most amicable conclusion.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SNYDER].

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment no. 12: Page 10, line 16, strike out "$22,500,000" and insert the following: "$45,000,000: Provided, That the Chief of Engineers, when authorized by the Secretary of War, may enter into construction contracts prior to July 1, 1938, to an amount not in excess of $10,000,000, in addition to the sum herein appropriated, and his action in so doing shall be deemed a contractual obligation of the Federal Government payable after the next regular annual appropriation becomes available: Provided further, That if any funds are made available for the above purposes from the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1937, the appropriation herein made shall be reduced by an amount equal to the sum so made available, but this proviso shall not operate to reduce this appropriation below $22,500,000."

Mr. SNYDER of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur in the Senate amendment with an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment, insert the following: "$22,500,000, and, in addition, $22,500,000 of the appropriation of $1,500,000,000 contained in the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1937 shall be available exclusively for carrying out the provisions of such Flood Control Act, approved May 15, 1928, as amended by such Flood Control Act, approved June 15, 1936, and of such additional amount, $7,500,000 shall be in augmentation of the foregoing appropriation of $22,500,000, and the remainder shall be expended under the direction of the Chief of Engineers subject to the provisions established in and in pursuance of such Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1937 not inconsistent herewith: Provided, That the requirement in section 1 of such Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1937 that no Federal construction project shall be undertaken unless and until there have been allocated and irrevocably set aside sufficient funds for its completion shall not apply to flood-control projects authorized by such Flood Control Act, approved June 22, 1936."

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment no. 15: Page 12, line 16, after the word "date", insert a colon and the following proviso: "Provided further, That not to exceed five retired officers of the Regular Army may be assigned to active duty at the United States Soldiers' Home, and such officers while so assigned shall be entitled, notwithstanding any other provisions of law, to the pay and allowances of officers of the same rank and length of service on the active list of the Army."

Mr. SNYDER of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur in the Senate amendment with an amendment, and I desire to make a statement.

Is the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. TARVER] present?

Mr. TARVER. I am here.

Mr. SNYDER of Pennsylvania. Possibly, if it were not for the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. TARVER], it would not be necessary for me to make a statement.

Mr. Speaker, this proposition was submitted in the Budget and was considered by the War Department subcommittee, which favorably reported it to the full committee. The full committee voted it out of the bill. This is the first time, therefore, that the House has been called upon to pass upon the matter.

Most of you are familiar with the local Soldiers' Home. There is a population out there of about 1,400 former soldiers. The capital investment is about $6,000,000. Responsibility for the care, maintenance, and operation of this establishment and for the care, health, and contentment of these ex-service men devolves directly upon five retired officers of the Regular Army, chosen for the work because of demonstrated suitability.

The law provides for the detail either of active or retired officers of the Regular Army to conduct the affairs of the home. It has been the practice to utilize retired officers for the last 80 years or more. Judging by many of the Regular Army establishments with which we are familiar which are commanded by active officers, these retired officers at the Soldiers' Home have an equal and in many cases a far greater responsibility.

The proposition before us is just this: Prior to the Economy Act, approved June 30, 1932, retired officers on duty at the home were paid at the rate of $1,500 per annum out of the Soldiers' Home permanent fund in addition to their retired pay. All reductions applicable to regular personnel in consequence of such law have been restored, and it is proposed now instead of giving back this extra compensation to the retired officers at the home, to give them the pay and allowances they would receive if on active duty. The added expense, upon the basis of the rank of the officers presently employed, would be $2,060 per annum. The amendment gives them no more than active officers would receive if detailed to duty at the home, which they may be under the law. There will be no allowance for quarters, of course, as public quarters are provided.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNYDER of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. TABER. Is it not a fact the assignments to the Soldiers' Home at the present time are among the most desirable in the Army?

Mr. SNYDER of Pennsylvania. I should say they are.

Mr. TABER. After the members of the full committee had gone into this very carefully, they decided they did not want to be responsible for presenting this thing to Congress.

Mr. SNYDER of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. TABER. Does the gentleman think he is keeping faith with the House when he brings such a thing as this back here?

Mr. SNYDER of Pennsylvania. This is a Budget proposition, and this is the first opportunity the House itself has had to pass upon the matter. The House may dispose of it as it sees fit.

Mr. TABER. If the House votes it down, the Senate will recede?

Mr. SNYDER of Pennsylvania. I do not know about that.

Mr. TABER. I think that can safely be said.

Mr. SNYDER of Pennsylvania. The gentleman will concede it was my duty as chairman to bring it back and present it to the House.

Mr. TABER. But not to move to recede and concur. I think the gentleman should have moved to insist upon the position of the House, because I think this is a very dangerous precedent for us to start.

Mr. SNYDER of Pennsylvania. The House has never taken any position upon the matter. However, I may say we did try to have the Senate recede.

Mr. TABER. The gentleman has moved to recede and concur. We should have had a motion to insist upon the position of the House. Frankly, I do not feel there is any possibility of getting anywhere with orderly government when we hand out a bunch of money gratuitously to those who are holding the most desirable and most sought-after commissions in the Army. I do not think we ought to adopt this amendment, and I hope the House will defeat it.

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNYDER of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Speaker, I hope the gentleman will yield me more than 5 minutes. I doubt if I can discuss the matter thoroughly in that time, and, as a member of the committee, I certainly would like to explain to the House the circumstances in regard to this proposition.

The gentleman made some reference to me in opening his statement by saying it would not be necessary to make a statement except for my benefit.

Mr. SNYDER of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. TARVER. I do not appreciate that statement, because it would indicate I am the only member of the committee who has opposed the position the gentleman has assumed, when the gentleman knows the committee voted practically unanimously against the increase. In fact, so far as I recollect, the vote of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SNYDER] was the only vote cast against cutting out of the bill this proposed increase in the compensation of these five retired Army officers. The committee was practically unanimous that this provision ought to go out.

The situation is simply that these five retired Army officers, who are most excellent gentlemen, have positions which are very much sought after by retired Army officers. They have beautiful homes out there, for which they pay nothing. Of course, they have their retirement compensation. They have other considerations which come to them by reason of the fact they are stationed on this public property. It is not a question of adding compensation for the benefit of officers who are underpaid. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SNYDER] made the statement before our committee that so far as he knew these officers were receiving adequate compensation. The only question which seemed to be material in the discussion of the matter in the committee was that there seemed to be a little money that would not be spent in the ordinary activities of this organization, and the question was how to get the money into the hands of somebody who would appreciate it. Therefore, it was suggested that these five retired Army officers, who are already well enough paid, should receive the pay of men on active duty.

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. TARVER. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. McFARLANE. Does not the gentleman feel, inasmuch as the retired Army officers are already being well enough paid, that with the money which is sought to be used for this increase we ought to reduce the per-capita allotment of the service men and in that way permit a saving to the enlisted men? Should not that be the program rather than increasing the pay of these five officers?

Mr. TARVER. I do not know about that. These service men pay 25 cents a month, as I understand it, out of their small salaries toward maintaining this institution. I understand there also go into the fund for maintaining this institution the fines and penalties imposed by courts martial in the United States Army. I also understand that the retired private who is accorded domiciliary care there gets $2 a month, whereas these retired Army officers get $4,000, $5,000, or $6,000 a year. The private out there who works all the time gets $30 a month. If you are going to do anything toward increasing the pay of anybody at the Soldiers' Home, why not do a little something for the enlisted man who must make his home there, just as these retired Army officers are making their homes there, rather than increase the compensation of a class of officers who are already well paid?

As I have stated, these men are excellent gentlemen. I do not criticize them for wanting to get an increase in pay if they can, but they have sought these positions. They do not have to stay there unless they want to. There are plenty of other men who would like that assignment. Their duties are not onerous. They spend a great deal of their time playing golf on the beautiful golf course there, for which I do not blame them. However, I do say this is not a proper time to be undertaking to increase considerably the compensation of officers of this type. No good reason has been advanced, so far as I have been advised, for an increase.

Mr. TARVER. May I have just a little additional time in order to ask the chairman of the committee a question?

Mr. SNYDER of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 additional minutes to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. TARVER. Does the gentleman take the position these men are underpaid for the duties which they perform?

Mr. SNYDER of Pennsylvania. Yes; because, as I said in my opening statement, I believe their duties and responsibilities compare favorably with those of many active officers. I may say to the gentleman we are establishing no precedent in doing this. There are already seven retired Army officers on full pay at different posts throughout the United States, so we are establishing no precedent.

Mr. TARVER. I am not talking about establishing precedents. The gentleman himself plays golf out there and knows something about the circumstances to which I have referred.

Mr. SNYDER of Pennsylvania. Yes; I know something about them.

Mr. TARVER. The gentleman knows what duties, if any, these officers perform; and does the gentleman take the position that the $4,500 to $6,000 a year which they now receive, together with their quarters out there, is sufficient compensation for the work they do?

Mr. SNYDER of Pennsylvania. In view of the fact that other retired Army officers performing active duty receive full pay, I say they should receive it also.

Mr. TARVER. I am not talking about what other Army officers receive; but I am asking the gentleman if he thinks they are well enough paid now or not?

Mr. SNYDER of Pennsylvania. Not when compared with other officers who receive full pay under similar circumstances.

Mr. TARVER. What do they do except stay out there and look after things in a general way?

Mr. SNYDER of Pennsylvania. I will answer the gentleman's question.

Mr. TARVER. All right.

Mr. SNYDER of Pennsylvania. I have spent a great deal of time making a study of what the people do out there, going out mornings, evenings, and afternoons, and not on the golf course.

Mr. TARVER. That is the reason I am asking the gentleman what they do.

Mr. SNYDER of Pennsylvania. Those gentlemen are up and doing and perform such work as is necessary to keep the Soldiers' Home one of the finest conducted places in America.

Mr. TARVER. What do they do?

Mr. SNYDER of Pennsylvania. Go out and look around and see what they do. See how well the place is kept, go to their offices and see how they have their work up to date.

Mr. TARVER. What has the gentleman seen them doing?

Mr. SNYDER of Pennsylvania. I have seen them at their desks at work.

Mr. TARVER. May I have 2 additional minutes so the chairman may answer my question?

Mr. SNYDER of Pennsylvania. I yield the gentleman 2 additional minutes.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. TARVER. I yield.

Mr. TABER. Is it not a fact that the biggest part of the duties of these officers is to play golf?

Mr. TARVER. I may say to the gentleman that they are frequently engaged in playing golf. I do not think that is discreditable at all. I think it is perfectly proper for them to play golf, so far as that is concerned. I do not think they have very much to do in the way of official business, and I do not blame them for playing golf whenever they get a chance to do so, but I do think it is foolishness for this Congress to come along, when they have fine homes furnished by the Government and very little to do, and occupy places that all the retired officers of the Army want, and say just as a matter of gratuity, we are going to increase their pay $1,500 or $2,000 a year.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TARVER. I yield.

Mr. LUCAS. Who is responsible for the insistence upon this increase in the pay of these retired Army officers?

Mr. TARVER. There has been no person who appeared to assume responsibility before our committee except the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SNYDER]. Who has been urging on Mr. SNYDER of Pennsylvania that this pay be increased I do not know.

Mr. MASON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TARVER. I yield.

Mr. MASON. As I understand it, the position of the gentleman is that this Congress should not vote a bonus to these men for playing golf out there on the golf course.

Mr. TARVER. Well, I may simply say there has been no evidence before our committee that they are not getting enough for what they do, and simply to give them additional compensation without rhyme or reason, except because they may have a little extra money out there in the Treasury, to my mind is not good public policy.

Mr. MASON. I agree with the gentleman.

Mr. SNYDER of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN].

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, one of the outstanding Army politicians is now superintendent of the Soldiers' Home. I do not know of any man who has served in the Army during the 25 years I have been in Washington who excelled General Coleman in this respect. General Coleman served with distinction during the World War. He saw service at the front. Conceding he had a fine record during the war, we must also remember that hundreds of thousands of others, generals down to privates, likewise had excellent records. During peacetime General Coleman had some mighty fine assignments. He was in Washington as Chief of Finance. Few Army men were better known in this city. He had a fine personality, and if I am any judge, he certainly had a fine time during his stay here. As I recall, ending a tour of duty here, he received another assignment, but it was but a short time before he was back in Washington. Only a short period after he reached the retirement age we find him assigned to duty as superintendent of the Soldiers' Home. Within a year's time he is at the Capitol lobbying, if you please, to have his salary increased.

There was never any talk about increasing the salaries of the retired officers until General Coleman was made superintendent of the Soldiers' Home. It so happens that the quartermaster at the Soldiers' Home, who likewise had a fine record abroad during the war, comes from my home city and is a close personal friend of mine. He has never at any time in conversation with me advanced the thought that he ought to have an increase in pay.

A little over a year ago General Coleman was sent to me by the Chief of Staff when I was trying to correct abuses in connection with the administration of the travel-pay law in the Army. He came down and told me, using his own language, "You are talking right up my alley, and I want to help you stop these abuses." One of these days I am going to make a speech on how the travel-pay law operates, and when I do you will hear some things you never dreamed could occur with the consent of Congress. I pointed out some of the abuses to General Coleman and we talked for an hour or more on the subject. He conceded something must be done. General Craig, Chief of Staff, had already advised me that changes should be made. It is within the power of the War Department to make the changes under existing law by issuing regulations. I really felt that I was about to save some money for the taxpayers with the Chief of Staff and the Chief of Finance of the Army agreeing with my contention that the law was being abused, as I thought it was costing the taxpayers several hundred thousand dollars a year more than it should. Now, mind you, General Coleman tells me "You are talking right up my alley, and I want to stop these abuses." My reply was, "All right; send me down an amendment to that law that will correct the evil by law so that some future Chief of Finance cannot change it." He sent me the amendment. Due to illness—this was a year ago—I was forced to remain away from my office for 2 weeks. When I returned I had the amendment analyzed and I learned it not only would not correct the abuses but that it would add to the cost. Before I had time to reach the matter General Coleman had retired but I wrote him and told him just what he had tried to put over on me.

As a result of my activities there has been several new regulations issued since General Coleman was retired and I have introduced a bill which I hope will further correct this situation. Naturally I cannot forget this, but even if this incident had not occurred I would oppose this amendment. There are men who have served as superintendent of the Soldiers' Home whose record in the Army would have justified special recognition in the past, but they did not come here and ask us to raise their pay. I admit they have responsibilities, but they sought the job, the job did not seek them. There are hundreds and hundreds of retired officers who would like the assignments. They live in fine homes, beautiful surroundings, a golf course for their front yard.

General Coleman tried to have this amendment put on the bill when the measure was before the House. As I understand the vote in the full committee was practically unanimous against the increase. Then what does the general do? He goes over to the Senate and gets the Senate to put the amendment in the bill, although he knew full well the feeling in the House committee. In other words, General Coleman ignores the action of the House committee, saying in effect, regardless of what the House says, I will get the increase through the Senate. Let us show not only General Coleman but others that they must pay some attention to the House.

I insist there is absolutely no sound reason for increasing the pay of General Coleman. It is setting a bad precedent for us to increase the pay of the man who has this job at the Soldiers' Home which he asked for and who comes to us before he has been retired a year and says, "Give me an increase in pay." Grant that he is efficient, that he is making a good superintendent; take it from me he will not leave if you vote this amendment down. I want to go on record as being absolutely opposed to such a proposition. We should send it back to the Senate.

Mr. SNYDER of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MCFARLANE].

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Speaker, this is a very important matter that is pending before the House. It is an amendment to raise the pay of these retired Army officers out here at the National Soldiers' Home about $2,000 a year at the expense of the Government. I am sick and tired of the different officers coming in here and presenting legislation to increase their own pay and allowances, and some of these officers have probably fought the battle of Washington, it is true, and became more familiar with talcum powder than any other kind, and they soon learn how to submit legislation to increase their pay.

There is a decision from the Court of Claims—Re Jones (60 Ct. Cls. 552)—in which the court held that such officers of the Army, Navy, and Marine Corps pay no income tax at all on their subsistence and rations allowance, and then they come in here as under this amendment, even if they got only two votes in the whole Appropriations Committee, as the gentleman from Georgia has said, and want us to raise each of these five Army officers from $2,000 to $2,800 a year.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McFARLANE. Yes; I yield.

Mr. McCORMACK. Outside of this question the gentleman does not take the position that the Army officer or the Navy officer has a soft job, does he?

Mr. McFARLANE. No; I do not.

Mr. McCORMACK. I would not take their job under any condition. I think most of them are entitled to sympathy because of the hardships they have to go through.

Mr. McFARLANE. However, I do not think the Army and the Navy officers ought to be given any more preferred treatment than is given to Members of Congress. I think they ought to pay an income tax on their income as well as on their ration allowance and subsistence. We pay income taxes on our salaries as well as our allowances.

Mr. McCORMACK. The gentleman is discussing something that I did not discuss. I wanted to ascertain the gentleman's true state of mind.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McFARLANE. Yes; I yield.

Mr. MAY. If we increase the pay of these retired officers in the Soldiers' Home, why will we not also be asked to increase the pay of all retired officers?

Mr. McFARLANE. It seems that some of them have already gotten increases, and this amendment is just passing this increase down along the line to those who have not, and this is a good place to stop this kind of thing. I do not think they are entitled to this increase. I asked the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SNYDER] what they are doing and he could not tell us. As a matter of fact, their duties out there are nominal; they have a splendid home furnished them, with three-quarters of the Regular Army pay, as well as this beautiful home, which they are living in, and they are doing practically nothing for it in the way of duty. I think it is time to kill this amendment and to kill it now.

Mr. BIERMANN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McFARLANE. Yes.

Mr. BIERMANN. If this money is not voted to these officers, who gets it?

Mr. McFARLANE. It will remain in the Treasury.

Mr. BIERMANN. Is this money coming out of the post exchange fund?

Mr. McFARLANE. I am not sure, but I understand part of it does and part from court martials; and as I understand it, some of it comes from a 25-percent assessment against the enlisted personnel for the upkeep of the Soldiers' Home, as stated by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. TARVER]. We could reduce that assessment if we have a surplus, but the Army officers want to consume that surplus, and that is all there is to this. If we do not need this money, we ought to give it back to the enlisted personnel and not take it away from them and give it to these five officers who are not entitled to it. I hope this House will not vote to give it to them just because they happen to be good fellows.

Mr. LEAVY. Mr. Speaker, did not the whole Committee on Appropriations vote this item down?

Mr. McFARLANE. Yes, sir. Those in favor of the item got but 2 votes out of about 30.

Mr. LEAVY. And did not this House vote it out when the item came on the floor?

Mr. McFARLANE. Yes; and then the Senate put it back in the bill; and I hope this House will vote it out now.

Mr. SNYDER of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, in connection with the remarks just made by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. McFARLANE], I wish to make this statement: First, that the added cost involved here does not come out of the 25 cents a month contributed by each soldier. It comes directly out of the Treasury. Second, with reference to the present governor of the home, I wish the RECORD to show that he served with distinction at the front in France during the World War.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SNYDER of Pennsylvania. I yield.

Mr. TABER. Does the gentleman play golf with the general out there?

Mr. SNYDER of Pennsylvania. I am sorry to say I never have.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNYDER of Pennsylvania. I yield.

Mr. LUCAS. Who is insisting on this increase of pay to the major generals?

Mr. SNYDER of Pennsylvania. I may say to the gentleman that this is a Senate amendment which we are bringing back in disagreement.

Mr. LUCAS. That is not the question. Perhaps the gentleman misunderstood me. Who is insisting on increasing the pay of these major generals?

Mr. SNYDER of Pennsylvania. I might say the proposal comes from the Budget; it was submitted in the Budget.

Mr. LUCAS. The Budget insists that the pay of these men be increased?

Mr. SNYDER of Pennsylvania. I should not say that; the Budget submitted the proposition.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. Speaker, I still do not have any answer.

Mr. SNYDER of Pennsylvania. Well, the Senate, then. The item was in the Budget; the House omitted it and the Senate included it in the bill.

Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania to recede and concur in the Senate amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. SNYDER of Pennsylvania) there were ayes 3 and noes 95.

So the motion was rejected.

The SPEAKER. The Chair respectfully suggests to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SNYDER] that in view of the last action, the gentleman should move that the House insist on its disagreement to the Senate amendment. In other words, some disposition should be made of that amendment, and not leave it up in the air.

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. TARVER. If the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SNYDER] does not desire to make a motion to further insist upon the disagreement of the House to the Senate amendment, will the Chair recognize some other member of the committee to make such a motion?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will recognize some other member of the committee to make such a motion if the chairman of the committee does not desire to make the motion.

Mr. SNYDER of Pennsylvania. I make that motion, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania moves that the House insist on its disagreement to the Senate amendment no. 15.

The motion was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider the votes on the conference report was laid on the table.

ADJOURNMENT OVER

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns today it adjourn to meet on Monday next.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from California [Mr. VOORHIS] made a notable address last night at Charlottesville, Va., before the Institute of Public Affairs of the University of Virginia on international relations. I ask unanimous consent that the address of our colleague be printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. STEFAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my own remarks.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. Under previous order of the House the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. COX] is recognized for 40 minutes.

FREE CONSTITUTIONAL DEMOCRACY IN AMERICA

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, today we face a crisis which calls for high courage, deep integrity of purpose, and great restraint of emotionalism.

We, as a people, stand at the dividing pathways of decision. Upon the decision which we, the custodians of a sacred trust—the preservation of our Republic—shall make will depend the destiny of this Union. Upon the leaders and the citizens of today rests the responsibility of determining whether this Nation as a free constitutional democracy shall continue its progress in a complex world civilization as a united country bulwarked and buttressed by a fraternal spirit of common counsel and a unified effort irresistibly moved by a mutual love for our common country or whether constitutional democracy, personal liberty, and individual opportunity shall eventually go down in fratricidal strife and disorder or be submerged by surreptitious betrayal under the pattern of an alien political and social philosophy.

This is a time that tries men's souls and tests their tempers. In the heat of debate on these momentous questions many times words are spoken or implications are offered which wound the personal sensibilities. This should not happen. Life is too short, peace of mind is too sweet, for personal bitterness and animosities to have place in the thoughts of those who would reap some joy in life.

This is not a battle between personalities as such. It is a collision between two principles, two concepts of government, two systems of civilization diametrically opposed to each other and utterly irreconcilable at every point.

It is an epochal struggle between two fundamental ideas of a way of life. On one side is constitutional democracy, embracing, as it does, individual freedom, liberty of conscience, of speech, of press, of assemblage, of ownership of property, of opportunity, and the dictation by the governed of the laws which shall govern them.

On the other side are the communistic, the fascistic, the oligarchical, and the autocratic ideas of government, all, in the final analysis, in the same category—a form of absolutism. They each embrace as a necessity of their very existence and successful administration the suppression of individual freedom, of liberty of conscience, the abolition of free speech, free press, free assemblage, of private ownership of property, of individual opportunity, and the substitution of the will of a dictator or of an oligarchy for the laws made by the people as their governing agency.

Constitutional democracy is the American way of life and the American concept of government. Russia, Italy, Germany are examples of oligarchical, autocratic, and dictatorial absolutism.

Centralization of power in one governmental agency is the first long and dangerous step toward ultimate absolutism. It is a movement away from constitutional democracy as it operates in America. Labor despotism is another and collateral step in the same direction.

Our task today is not to persuade the people to desire a constitutional democracy as their form of government. There is no shadow of doubt that the overwhelming mass of our people want the liberties, the principles, and the operations of government guaranteed under our Constitution.

Our task is to defend and protect the populace whom we represent against the surreptitious filching, one by one, of their rights and their liberties and their powers of self-government and to prevent the moral fiber and the independent spirit of the people being sapped and weakened and finally destroyed, perhaps by propaganda and by a pseudo-paternalism financed by their own money and wrought by a base betrayal of their confidence in their leaders.

Personalities emerge in this struggle merely as men aline themselves aggressively with one or the other of these two opposite concepts of government and of civilization.

Those who advocate any form of absolutism do so in the hope and the belief that they will either be the dictators or that they will be in the high favor of those who will be the dictators. Always they find, at last, that they themselves are entrapped and enslaved in the meshes of their own machinations.

Benjamin Franklin once wisely said:

> Those who give up essential liberty to purchase a little temporary safety deserve neither liberty nor safety.

The great danger in this struggle is that acrimonious personalities will be permitted to befog and obscure the fundamental issues so that the encroachments upon free government and individual liberties will go unnoticed by the great mass of the people until when they finally awaken to what has happened it will require armed and violent action for them to recover their filched rights and liberties.

That is always the danger present in the adulation or condemnation of personalities. That is why in this struggle we must keep the fundamental principles and issues clear and visible, and not permit them to be obscured by intense controversies over and between personalities. Fundamental principles cannot be altered to fit individuals, but individuals must adapt themselves to principles.

Bitterly as I disagree with the ideas and purposes of those who advocate communism or fascism or nazi-ism as a form of government for this country, bitterly as I disagree with those who advocate a political oligarchy, a financial autocracy, or any other form of absolutism or dictatorship, I concede to every man the right to advocate peacefully, openly, and frankly such forms of government if he so desires. But let those who do desire such forms of government come out into the open so we may know them as they are and for what they stand.

Let those who desire to change this constitutional democracy into some form of absolutism or group rule come out into the light of day and meet us who believe in a free constitutional democracy in fair debate with the issues clearly exposed to the scrutiny of the people. And let them be American citizens. I for one have no word of praise for aliens who, enjoying the fruits of our hospitality in this great free Nation by our sufferance, betray our tolerance by surreptitious, subversive boring from within in an effort to undermine the very foundation of the Republic that gives them haven and liberty. Such ones deserve only condemnation and deportation to their native shores. [Applause.]

The danger to this Nation lies in those self-serving groups who by adroit use of subtle political and social propaganda accumulate power and more power while pretending to be seeking the welfare of the people. I care not under what political banner nor under what guise of pseudo philosophy such groups cover their nefarious plans and subversive actions, the fact still remains that their motives are dishonest, their movements are utterly dangerous to free government, and their efforts will result in armed resistance by liberty-loving citizens determined to preserve this Republic as soon as the purposes of these subversive elements become thoroughly understood by the people of this country.

It is such a contingency I desire to see avoided.

Mr. Speaker, this country is our common country. The welfare of this Nation is the common welfare of all the individuals in it. The liberty of one must be and is the liberty of all, and that liberty can be preserved only by the lawful suppression of any attempted license. True liberty is orderly liberty. True freedom is found in justice, in honesty, in unified effort for the good of the individuals who make up the mass of the citizenry.

If this Nation is wrecked, we are all wrecked with it. If this Republic is ruined, we are all ruined with it. Our lives and our individual interests are all so integrated that none of us can hope to escape the impact of any disaster that may overtake this country.

It is the inalienable right of the majority of the citizens of this Nation to determine what our form of government shall be. It is the right of the majority, under our American plan of government, to be wrong if they desire to be wrong; and it is only by logic, reason, and persuasion that they may be led to be right. Any effort to change the form of this democracy by subterfuge and surreptitious subversion against the will and the desire of the majority is treachery that borders on treason.

If the majority of the citizens of this Nation desire to change their form of government, let it be done in the open light of day. Let it be done by them in the full knowledge of what they are doing. It must not be brought about by organized minorities or alien agitators who, while they draw their strength and nourishment from the hospitable breasts of this democracy, plunge the blade of treachery into her vitals.

It is my understanding that the purpose of the Communists in America is to accomplish the overthrow of our constitutional form of government by subversion, covert treachery, by poisonous propaganda, if possible; and, finally, when they believe themselves strong enough, by bloodshed, disorder, revolution, coercion, and brute force, if necessary.

As to the Governments of Russia, of Italy, of Germany, of any other nation, I have no word of criticism. It is the right of the peoples of those nations to have such form of government as they desire or are willing to tolerate. But we want no Stalin, no Mussolini, no Hitler ruling this fair land of ours. [Applause.]

Dealing not with personalities but with principles, and intending no thrust at any particular individuals, I say that any organized group, whether motivated by greed for money gains, by an insatiable lust for political power, or by the inordinate personal pride of its leaders, that by subterfuge and subversion attempt to change the form of our constitutional democracy, to shackle the individual liberties of our people, to suppress free speech and free press, and to overthrow the free Republic set up out of the blood of our forefathers, without the knowledge and consent of the majority of our citizens, is a group of traitors who should be relentlessly rooted out of their noxious anonymity and made to bear the full responsibility of their motives and their acts. Let it be said here and now that those who have a passion for anonymity usually fear to face the responsibility for their acts. [Applause.]

In all ages and among all peoples, Mr. Speaker, there have always been those individuals impelled by an insatiable lust for power and greed for self-aggrandizement, who were willing and eager to enslave their fellows and to set up oppressive dictatorships over their brothers. That enigma has never been solved by any philosophy. But it is a sad fact in the history of mankind that eternal vigilance against such as these has always been the price of liberty, and it is peculiarly so today.

It was because of that unhappy fact of human nature that the founding fathers in their wisdom provided our system of checks and balances under a tripartite form of government to guard men against their own consuming lust for power.

Beset as we have been and still are by wars, natural cataclysms, diseases, depressions, fears, and hardships, it would seem that men would draw together in a common bond of fellowship, and counsel together for the common salvation from these evils. Yet it is a tragic fact that, just as flood or fire or earthquake bring immediately in their train the ghoulish looters who will rob the dead and dying and who will despoil the stricken, so the plight of a sorely beset republic has brought like a flock of vultures those who would loot the people of their money and rob them of their liberties.

America today stands almost alone as a free republic. The wealth of our country, the luxuries enjoyed by the great masses of our people, the vast natural resources which are ours, are regarded with envious eyes by much of the rest of the world.

Not only do we have to be alert to the dangers which may threaten us from without; not only do we have to tread a very tortuous course through the mazes of world financial, commercial, and political pitfalls to keep free from entanglements in the quarrels of other countries, but at the same time we have to guard against the stealthy assaults from within by those who are willing and eager to undermine the foundations of this Government and see it fall in ruins that they may find opportunity to rule and to oppress their fellow men.

Faced as we are by a stupendous task of caring for our unemployed, of balancing our financial accounts, of preserving the integrity and the solvency of the Government, we find ourselves beset by disorders and disturbances which are stopping down industry, creating gigantic losses, disrupting markets, and thrusting prices upward. Recovery is being stalled. With unerring accuracy those who would seize control struck at the moment when their blow would be the most stunning.

It is because of these conditions that I plead here today for the submergence of all partisan feeling, all sectional friction, all class hatreds and jealousies, all personal bitterness and animosities in order that we may unite to achieve the common good and to rescue our country from these impending evils.

Not only are we facing these world conditions and these domestic economic dangers, this Congress is confronted by proposals which, if enacted into laws, must have profound and far-reaching effects upon our form and character of government.

We need to ponder well what may be the ultimate effects of our acts in this session.

Without condemning any individuals it must be said that sincere men may be mistaken. Mistaken men may be sincere. And schemers there always are among us who would take advantage of the mistakes of sincere men or the sincerity of mistaken men.

Not in the entire history of this Nation have we faced more profound problems more intimately affecting our own lives and liberties and the welfare of our posterity than we do this day. It behooves us to devote our whole energies and our most intense thought to these problems that we may not make fatal mistakes.

The industrial strikes and disorders now menacing our peace and domestic tranquillity have bound up within them fundamental questions of right and justice which must be considered dispassionately and clearly if still more dangerous conditions are to be avoided.

It is the right of free American wage earners to quit their work individually or en masse when and if they so desire. It is their right under our laws to attempt peaceably to persuade other workers to refrain from taking their places. Any attempt to deny American wage earners the fullest exercise of these rights is indefensible and is dangerous to the liberties of all the people.

It is equally the right of free American working men and women to pursue their vocations, if they so desire, and if they are satisfied with their wages and their hours and their conditions of labor, without intimidation, coercion, or interference by any agency, be that agency organized employer or labor minorities. Any denial of that right to work is indefensible, and the right should be upheld by whatever force of law and Government may be required to guarantee it.

If John L. Lewis and the C. I. O. had proceeded along the lines of lawful, orderly strike and picketing to achieve organization of workers and betterment of wages and hours and working conditions for American wage earners, no word of mine would ever have been uttered in condemnation of him or his movement.

Until John L. Lewis and his associates in the C. I. O. purge their movement of the communists whose avowed purpose is the organization of American workers with the intent to violently overthrow our constitutional democracy, the C. I. O. must be regarded with deep suspicion and distrust as a highly dangerous movement by every citizen who loves his country and his liberty. [Applause.]

When the C. I. O. or any other organization undertakes by force and intimidation to debar workers from their jobs, that action is utterly indefensible under any concept of justice and liberty and should and must be met and defeated by the stern force of the Government and the law. [Applause.]

When any organized group of individuals undertake to stop the wheels of industry, to deprive citizens of their opportunity to pursue their vocations in peace, and, without the knowledge and consent of the majority of those workers, attempt to represent them and to coerce them into membership in any organization, such an action is utterly indefensible and should be put down by the stern force of the Government and the law.

When any group attempt to interfere and to close some industry of which they are not a part and in which they are not employed, such action is utterly indefensible and should be met and defeated by the whole power of the Government and the law.

When any group set themselves above the courts and in defiance of the constituted law-enforcement agencies in their interferences with industry and with workers who desire to pursue in peace their vocations, that is outlawry and should be treated as such by every power of the Government and the law.

When any organized group of workers represented by a collective-bargaining agency enter into a solemn contract with employers, and then wantonly, willfully, and in scores of instances violate and render that solemn contract a worthless scrap of paper, they have pursued an indefensible course; they have by their own acts created a grave doubt of their integrity and responsibility; they have violated every tenet of justice, fairness, and square dealing, and they have branded themselves as renegades to civilized, orderly society.

When any organized group undertakes to penalize and to terrorize the whole citizenry into submission to their demands, that is sheer terrorism and nothing else, and should be treated as such by every power of government and of law.

When any group of individuals interfere with the transit of the United States mails they have attacked the sovereignty and the integrity of the United States Government, and, regardless of who they may be, they should forthwith be put behind the bars.

No man can deny that all of these things have been done; that these indefensible acts have been perpetrated not once but scores of times by groups under the leadership of the C. I. O. The press of this Nation every day for months has been reporting just such acts. The daily newspapers have been filled with accounts of the break-down of local law-enforcement agencies, the terrorizing of entire communities, the penalizing of entire areas, of enormous economic losses inflicted upon all the citizens of whole sections of States.

O, Mr. Speaker, I do not condone, nor do I sympathize with, money-mad employers who are willing to grind their workers down to the lowest wages, the longest hours, and the harshest conditions.

The wage earners of America, in whatever strata, and whatever their race or color may be, are entitled to the highest wages and the best working conditions it is possible for them to have, consonant with a sound economic system under a free government, and compatible with the purchasing capacity of the consuming market, which makes possible the production of goods and services.

The wage earners of America are entitled to, and must have, collective bargaining rights and agencies—but those agencies must be agencies of their own free voluntary choice, and they must be reasonable and fair in their demands, with the rights and the welfare of industry, of the great consuming public, and of the Nation constantly in mind.

I do not attempt to justify the unwise and unpatriotic practices of the past or the present by employers blinded by greed any more than I would now try to justify unjust and unpatriotic and unwise actions of organized labor minorities.

But it is not necessary and it is not just that the minority of employers and stockholders in industry should be deprived of their constitutional rights and protections by any dominant or aggressive group of labor leaders.

There are three parties at interest in any industrial problem—employers, employees, and the great consuming public. The interests and welfare of each of these three factors must be fairly considered and justly dealt with in any controversy, and in any adjustment of any controversy, if such adjustment is to be economically and socially sound, lasting, and beneficial.

Justice is even-handed. Justice is just to all. When men attempt to deprive other men of their just rights, then oppression replaces justice and strife and chaos inevitably ensue.

I have no word of condemnation for John Lewis and his associates, insofar as their aims and motives are to better the lot of the workers. But any attempt by those men or by any others to mislead wage earners, to impress into membership in the C. I. O. any wage earners against their will, for the purpose of building up the political and the financial power of the leaders, is utterly at variance with free constitutional government.

It is not denied that the C. I. O. movement is infested with avowed Communists whose ultimate goal is the violent overthrow of our constitutional democracy.

If John L. Lewis and his associates have loosed a movement which they cannot now control, then theirs is the responsibility for that deed, and every power of government and of law should be invoked to bring that irresponsible movement into immediate submission to the orderly processes of government and society.

If John L. Lewis and his associates can control the actions of the C. I. O., whose power has been misused, abused, and which has instigated, fostered, and led disorders, created grave economic losses, and caused the rise of a situation menacing to the peace of this Nation, then they should immediately do so. Otherwise every power of government and of law should be invoked to bring the C. I. O. movement within the bounds of an orderly, peaceful, constructive labor movement.

I have no sympathy, Mr. Speaker, with police brutality, with military oppression, with abuse of legal powers and laws by either the courts or the law-enforcement agencies. Such abuses are to be condemned by every decent man and woman in this land and should be punished as they deserve Wrong is never made right by another wrong. Oppression is never cured by counteroppression. Injustice is never made just by counterinjustice. Disorder breeds more disorder.

Let me say here and now that I do not want revolution. I do not want class strife, sectional antagonisms, racial hatreds. I do not want to see this land of ours drenched in the blood of poor, misguided men and women, lured into lawless excesses by false and dangerous leaders through outbursts of stimulated hysteria.

Revolution is not necessary. Industrial disorders are not necessary. I point for proof of that to those States whose governors have adopted the firm policy that law and order shall prevail and that strikes and picketing shall be within the bounds of legality. Those States have had little or no trouble from the C. I. O. movement. But in those States whose governors did not take a firm stand for law and order, disorder, economic losses, bloodshed and riots have held sway. That is a singular phase of the situation that merits careful consideration.

I say I do not want to see fratricidal strife between groups or classes of citizens of our country. But we cannot close our eyes to the fact that as the C. I. O. movement has grown more arrogant, more disorderly, more unmindful of the law and of the rights of the people, there has sprung up a widespread movement by citizens organizing themselves as armed vigilantes.

These citizens in many communities, outraged by the continued violence and alarmed by the failure of the duly constituted law-enforcement agencies to act, have organized to undertake self-protection.

We are beginning, as a result of this widespread, outraged, and resentful public opinion, to hear admonitions from high official sources that illegal and ill-advised acts by reckless labor leaders be abandoned.

It is very regrettable that these admonitions did not come when the excesses first began. Had it been so, most of these deplorable incidents and the consequent great economic losses would never have occurred.

Vigilantism may become as dangerous as the C. I. O. movement because any armed organization of citizens outside the duly constituted law-enforcement agencies is always in danger of becoming a mob prone to commit excesses and to disregard the law and the legal rights of their antagonists in the heat and emotionalism of such a conflict.

Such movements are not necessary in America. We are still capable as a people of cool counsel, of dispassionate justice, of wise decisions, if we are not led astray by those who would use public hysteria, inflammatory propaganda, and false promises to lure our citizens into unwise and illegal courses of action.

It is inconceivable that in this enlightened Nation there cannot be an amicable meeting of the minds of men if they are moved by the desire to be just and fair.

Mr. Speaker, I have said that free speech and free press and the right to quit work or to remain at work are essentials to a free government. But the constitutional rights of free speech and free press do not include any right to pervert or to suppress the truth or to falsify the facts in order to delude the people.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 additional minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. DORSEY). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There was no objection.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I have said that under our free government any man or any group has the right peacefully to advocate any kind of government he or they may desire. But in a constitutional democracy any attempt by any man or any group to forcibly or otherwise overthrow that form of government without the express consent of the majority of its citizens is treason, and should be treated as such.

Mr. Speaker, this is a time of sifting. We must choose which side we are to be on; we must undertake the courageous discharge of the responsibilities which rest upon us as the trustees of this great democracy for posterity.

I would that each and every one of you might go through the tented city of the Boy Scouts. I hope that each one of you has seen that magnificent army of clean, wholesome, disciplined, eager-eyed boys, typical of the millions like them in this fair land, who are to take over this Nation when our weary hands have loosed the reins of government and we have found surcease from the cares of life.

What kind of a nation are we going to pass on to them?

Is it to be a free constitutional democracy, or is it to be a land of terrorism, of secret police, of oppression, of dictatorship, of absolutism?

Are the boys and girls of today who are the citizens of tomorrow to have the same opportunity for individual spiritual progress, social advancement, and cultural improvement that we have had, or are they to live as the youth of Russia, of Italy, of Germany are living? God forbid.

We have our inescapable debt to posterity. We have our inescapable responsibility to those who are to come after us to turn over to them a Nation of free men and women and children under a government born out of the devoted blood of those who dared all to give birth to this great free Republic. We owe it to them to pass on to them unsullied, untarnished, and unimpaired the shield of free government, that America shall continue to stand, a shining beacon of hope lighting the skies of a world torn by strife, darkened by oppression, and threatened by the godless lust of those who would rule upon the ruins of enlightened civilization.

So with malice toward none and with charity for all, with respect for those who have the courage of their convictions, no matter how mistaken they may be so long as they are honest and open in their advocacy of their beliefs, I urge that bitter personalities may be abandoned, that partisan considerations be submerged, that party advantages be disregarded while we all counsel together as soldiers of the common good to preserve this great democracy and the liberties of our people against this creeping paralysis of dictatorship and oppression that is spreading through the world. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the special order of the House heretofore entered the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN] is recognized for 20 minutes.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I do not desire to avail myself of the privilege at this time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the previous special order of the House the gentleman from New York [Mr. REED] is recognized for 15 minutes.

Mr. BIGELOW. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from New York yield?

Mr. REED of New York. I yield.

Mr. BIGELOW. Mr. Speaker, the American people are proud of their part in helping to give birth to the new nation of Poland. At the time we received solemn pledges of complete tolerance of all racial differences. A situation is now said to exist that is giving great concern to certain groups of our citizens relative to the anti-Semitic outbreaks in Poland.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to place in the RECORD a memorial signed by 130 Jewish and Protestant and Catholic fellow ministers of mine in Cincinnati.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

The matter referred to follows:

STATEMENT ON POLAND

We the undersigned, members of the American community, professing all faiths, after having studied the record of events in Poland, join in conveying to the Jews of Poland our expression of deepest sympathy with their present plight and our earnest hope that steps will yet be taken to succor them from the tragic circumstances which affect their lives.

As Americans whose Government, acting with the sympathy of the entire Nation, played such an important role in the reconstitution of Polish independence, we cannot but look with dismay upon the fashion in which the present leaders of the Polish Government, with the memory of their own oppression still before them, have returned to the barbarism of the Middle Ages in respect to their Jewish population. This in defiance of elementary standards of human decency, and in contravention of the understanding between the American people and Government and of the guaranties incorporated in the peace treaties and reiterated in the Polish constitution, assuring all racial, national, and religious groups within Poland of full equality of treatment.

We have followed the course which the Polish Government has taken in recent years toward its Jewish citizens, who are among the most loyal and patriotic citizens of the country and whose contribution to Polish independence and Polish culture has been important and second to none.

It is our solemn conviction that the policies pursued by the present authorities in Poland will not only spell the doom of the Jews but will destroy the place of the Polish Republic in the circle of civilized nations.

We call to the attention of the Polish Government that the toleration of anti-Semitic agitation and economic boycott; that the introduction of a policy which seeks the solution of the economic problems of the land at the expense of one section of the population; that the toleration of physical violence against a peaceable and nonviolent section of the population; and that the establishment of the basis of government on the principles of racial superiority cannot but lead to ultimate ruin. No nation and no government has ever flourished on the soil of oppression.

We appeal to the democratic forces in Poland to unite their strength to repudiate the Aryan paragraph and to defend with all the force at their disposal the principles of democracy which are the only guaranties of human freedom, civilization, and peace.

We address ourselves to the Polish Government in the hope that it will see the wisdom of remaining loyal to the standards of democracy, in redemption of its pledge to end oppression, and in order to fulfill the highest destiny of the Polish people.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Speaker, the Boy Scouts, 26,000 strong, have been in the Capital city for several days. These fine, clean, typical American lads, by their gentlemanly conduct, have honored themselves and their leaders. The Boy Scouts fully demonstrate the value of personal influence in molding character and developing a sound, loyal citizenry. Furthermore, I firmly believe that we have a great responsibility to meet if we are to contribute our full measure of influence to the building of men worthy to preserve, protect, and defend our heritage of freedom.

It has been said:

There is no action of man in this life which is not the beginning of so long a chain of consequences that no human providence is high enough to give us a prospect to the end.

It has been my observation that every man is some boy's ideal. This fact is a challenge to every man and it should be a welcome challenge to every man who aspires to contribute to the character and well-being of his country. I believe that the influence of every man upon the youth of the land will be felt for hundreds of years. Let us illustrate the truth of this broad assertion.

More than 2,000 years ago Athens was a huddle of unsightly mud huts. What transformed her into the most beautiful city in the world? A great patriotic and civic leader arose who sought to make Athens so beautiful that the citizens would love it and, if invaded by a foreign foe, fight for and defend it. One great work of art after another appeared to stir the enthusiasm and arouse the pride of every Athenian.

Pericles, the great leader, made it a practice to take groups of young Athenian boys into the open square, point upward to the Parthenon, and say to the young men:

I would have you day by day fix your eyes upon the greatness of Athens until you become filled with love of her, and when you are impressed with the spectacle of her glory, then reflect that it has been acquired by men who knew their duty and who had the courage to do it.

It was in that day and age, the Golden Age, that every young man in Athens, before admitted to citizenship, entered the temple and took the beautiful Athenian oath:

We will never bring disgrace to this our city by any act of dishonesty or cowardice. We will fight for the ideals and sacred things of the city, both alone and with many. We will revere and obey the city's laws and we will do our best to incite a like reverence in those above us who are prone to annul them or set them at naught. We will strive increasingly to quicken the public sense of civic duty. Thus, in all these ways, we will transmit this city not only not less but greater, better, and more beautiful than it was transmitted to us.

The question is, Did this spirit of patriotism and loyalty have a survival value? Has the spirit of Pericles lived in the hearts and minds of succeeding generations? I shall demonstrate to you, my colleagues, that it has.

In 1896 the Olympian games were reorganized. The old stadium in Athens was repaired and restored. The athletes of the civilized nations of the world were invited to participate in the games. We sent ours; among them was one from Boston. The day the historic event opened more than 100,000 persons were crowded into the old stadium. A rule was established that when an athlete won an event the flag of his country would be run up on the flagpole. For four days Old Glory's folds swept the breeze, until finally one old Athenian raised his hands in mock despair and cried: "Oh, why did Columbus discover that country!"

That which aroused the greatest curiosity among the foreign spectators was the large number of events won by a lad by the name of Burke, of Boston. A group of foreigners waited upon him to inquire the reason for his skill. They explained to him that they had come to the conclusion that it must be what he ate in America that made him so agile. They said, "Mr. Burke, what do you eat in America?" Being a true Bostonian, he replied, "Beans!"

This brings me to the real point of my story. The greatest event of all was the last one—the great marathon race of 28 miles from the battlefield of Marathon to Athens. There was entered in this event the fastest, strongest athletes from the nations of the world. The stadium was packed with people. Two hundred thousand persons, unable to gain admittance to the stadium, had camped for 10 days on a hill just outside waiting to see this great race.

The time came for the athletes who were to participate to assemble and be conveyed to the starting point. A hush fell upon 100,000 people as they saw a Greek boy and his old peasant father enter the stadium. They knelt known in the presence of 100,000 people and solemnly invoked the blessings of the gods that Louias might win the race.

As the time approached for the runners to appear, the 200,000 persons who had camped on the hillside crept down to the historic highway over which the runners were to come. The crowd lined up on each side of the road until the 200,000 extended out from the stadium a distance of over 4 miles. Soldiers kept the lane for the runners open.

A rule was established that when the first runner appeared on the horizon a cannon shot should announce it. Excitement was intense. Suddenly there was the boom of a cannon, and there on the horizon was a speck, the first runner had appeared. He reached the fringe of the crowd; then a murmer was heard, gathering in volume as thousands of voices joined the chorus until it swelled into a thunderous cheer "It's the Greek!"

On came Louias; he broke through the tape and into the stadium. The great crowd of 100,000 people rushed from their seats to the open space, picked up Louias, and marched around the stadium and cheered until exhausted.

The King sent for Louias, took him to the palace, and entertained him to show the appreciation of a greatful nation. A successful Greek, a wealthy man, misjudged the motive of Louias and approached the peasant boy with these words: "Louias, you have won a great victory. You are a poor boy. I am a rich man. I am going to give you a large sum of money for winning this race."

Then it was that after 2,000 years the spirit of Pericles found expression in the heart and soul of the Greek boy. Looking the rich man squarely in the eye, he said to him:

> Sir, I am poor; I need money; but, sir, I ran not for money. I ran for the honor of my country and the glory of my race. All I ask, sir, is the laurel wreath my ancestors wore 2,000 years ago.

Thus we find that personal influence and leadership have a survival value. It is our responsibility as Representatives to set an example to the youth of this Nation that will inspire them not only now but in the centuries to come to preserve, protect, and defend the priceless heritage of liberty. Let us hope that 2,000 years from now the youth of America will say:

> We will never bring disgrace to this our country by any act of dishonesty or cowardice. We will fight for the ideals and the sacred things of the Nation, both alone and with many. We will revere and obey the Nation's laws, and we will do our best to incite a like reverence in those above us who are prone to annul them or set them at naught. We will strive increasingly to quicken the public sense of civic duty. Thus in all these ways we will transmit this Nation not only not less, but greater, better, and more beautiful than it was transmitted to us.

[Applause.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. STARNES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my own remarks in the RECORD on the Dies immigration bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

A NATIONAL LOTTERY

Mr. PHILLIPS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Connecticut?

There was no objection.

Mr. PHILLIPS. Mr. Speaker, in the time at my disposal today I wish to call attention to the proposition of a national lottery for the raising of public funds.

First of all, I wish to call your attention to facts and figures which I have before me here, which have been derived from replies I have to letters I personally sent to every chief of police in the United States in cities of 25,000 and over, asking those officers to tell me the amount of money going out of their cities through some kind of rackets. In other words, I wished definitely to establish the fact that money was going out and is going out of practically every city in the United States in some kind of gambling racket; that is, money serving in a great degree in many cases to subvert government, unfortunately, by being used in some instances to bribe or otherwise influence public officials. In other words, this money which is going out of practically every community in the United States each day is being used to break down government.

On the other hand, it has been proven, I believe—and I will go over these replies in a brief way in a moment—that it is impossible to stamp gambling of one kind or another out of our communities. Therefore, if gambling exists, if money is being spent on rackets all the time, would it not be advisable for the United States Government to have honest and fair legalized gambling—a lottery, if you please—thereby turning the gambling instincts of the people into channels where they will be honestly treated, and at the same time Government revenue would be derived therefrom?

I wish to pause at this time to acknowledge that a great deal of my data has been received from an ex-member of the assembly in the State of Connecticut, ex-Assemblyman Leon E. McCarthy.

I shall not clutter up the RECORD with any voluminous excerpts from the data I have here or any of the facts and figures in it, but I do want to call the attention of the Members of the House in this material. If anybody is interested in the subject of lotteries, their historical background, where they began and where they ended, lotteries abroad, how much they get, and other factors in this connection, I may say the facts are available, and I will put them at the service of the committee which is now considering the lottery bill.

May I briefly run over the answers given me by various chiefs of police in America to the questions addressed to them with reference to whether or not some kind of racket money was going out of their communities. Here are some examples:

Asheville, N. C., $3,000 to $5,000 per month going out. Butte, Mont., about a million dollars. Charleston, W. Va., several thousand dollars each month. Cincinnati, Ohio, number racket and slot machines driven out of city. Sweepstakes tickets being sold. Dayton, Ohio, approximately $17,000 to $30,000 a week estimated.

Some of the replies say there is no such thing. I am afraid a chief of police so replying is a little bit more optimistic regarding his community than the facts warrant.

As I remarked earlier, I will place the data at the disposal of the committee. Here are replies from practically every chief of police in the United States of cities with a population of from 25,000 up. Here is Lynn, Mass., "I think a conservative figure going out would be $5,000 a week."

A prominent official of California writes $30,000,000 taken annually out of California.

I shall refer for a moment to lotteries in the United States. I wish I had more time to go into the matter.

These data show that historically lotteries in the United States financed hospitals, financed churches, financed government. The rebuilding of Fanueil Hall in Boston was financed by a lottery. The data showing the historical background of lotteries in America are voluminous. Apparently they were successful in their application until, for reasons which I wish I had the time to discuss here, lotteries were banned in the United States. I have before me reference to works in the Library of Congress and various other volumes found at other places which I am pleased to put at the disposal of the committee.

In closing, I wish to take this opportunity as one Member of this House, also as one who has had experience in conducting a municipal police department in a city of over 25,000 for some 6 years, and who has been intimately connected with municipal government for a great many years, to express the opinion that it is impossible to stamp out the racket and gambling proposition in America today as it now exists. I believe from my experience and from the experience of others who know infinitely more about this than I do that if we had a national lottery adequately controlled by the Federal Government it would not only furnish millions of dollars of revenue but would go a long way toward stamping out illicit gambling, racketeering, and the unfortunate connection between some people in government and the underworld.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PHILLIPS. I yield.

Mr. HOFFMAN. From the gentleman's experience would he give me his opinion as to the class from which the money would come?

Mr. PHILLIPS. I think the money comes from just about every class. As we all know, life is a gamble from the cradle to the grave. When we get up in the morning we do not know what is going to happen to us.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Would it come from the international and the Wall Street bankers, or would it come from the working people?

Mr. PHILLIPS. It would come from everybody, and it does come from everybody. Let me put a minus sign on that when I say "everybody." The people who have large means gamble in Wall Street or the market, although they play the numbers, too, but the people who have small or medium means are the ones who gamble most on the numbers and other rackets in the municipalities, in my opinion.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Then the larger amount of revenue would come from those of small means?

Mr. PHILLIPS. In its present illegal form it goes from the people of small means out to the criminals; that is correct.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. LAMBETH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include a letter from the Public Printer relative to the distribution and sale of public documents.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

THE AIR SERVICE

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Speaker, a few years ago the Army was asked if its air force could carry the air mails on the established air-mail lines of the United States, and the President was promptly advised by the Army that the Army could do that job. Its miserable failure to do this is well known and generally attributable to the training which was given the Army flyers. I wrote an article at that time for the North American Newspaper Alliance which set out the reasons I believed to be the primary cause of the fiasco.

The Navy has had placed upon its air force during the last few days a task very much less onerous and difficult, and its failure to perform it is much more gloomy and disastrous than was the Army's of a few years ago. The Army's excuse was severe winter weather. The Navy's probably will be the same, since we are told that the first relief plane dispatched turned back because of sleet and snow encountered over the Equator.

Miss Amelia Earhart was forced down within easy flying distance of Honolulu nearly a week ago, and to date, if newspaper accounts can be relied upon, only three planes have approached the vicinity of the spot where she and her companion and plane are supposed to be. And remember, Mr. Speaker, the Navy has more than 200 patrol planes for flying over water that cost around $160,000 apiece, with a supposed cruising radius of from 3,000 to 4,000 miles. Still, we are told by the newspapers that airplane carriers are going to have to leave their bases and go to the vicinity of these islands so that Navy flyers may search out for and find these missing persons; and notwithstanding their failure to find them or even to get planes within the vicinity of the place they are supposed to be, the Navy is securing day by days reams of publicity praising them for their glorious efforts.

Some may speak disparagingly of the flight which has brought about this need for succor. That has no relevancy at all to what I am saying. A condition has arisen demanding expeditious attempts at rescue, and we find the Navy, with a fleet of planes but 1,500 miles away, unable to give a helping hand, and advertising its failure as a triumph by widely publicizing the onward rush of surface vessels all the way from the west coast of the United States.

If the air forces of this country in times of peril cannot perform their missions better than the Army performed its mission a few years ago and the Navy its mission of today, the prospects of victory in times of peril are remote. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. VOORHIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Monday next, after the legislative program has been completed, and following previous special orders, I may be permitted to address the House for 15 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. ALLEN of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Tuesday next, after disposition of business on the Speaker's table and following the legislative program of the day, I may be permitted to address the House for 20 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

THE AIR SERVICE

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 2 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Speaker, the remarks of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. COLLINS] bring back to my mind something I was thinking about earlier in the day.

Miss Amelia Earhart started a publicity stunt trip around the world and got lost, and the United States Navy has been called out to find her. Naturally I hope they find her.

I think it is about time for the Navy Department or some department of the Government that has the authority to do so to say that in the future if somebody wants to pull a publicity stunt like this, they will have to do it at their own risk. I think also that we should say that the Navy can be used only in the case of disaster in a trip that will be of some scientific value or in doing something that is going to be of use later and has been authorized by a proper department of the Government. Only in cases of this kind should the United States Navy be called out to give aid. I do not for a minute say that with Miss Earhart out on the ocean, everybody should give her up and that the Navy should be called off, but I do say that somebody in the United States should have had the authority to tell her not to go.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SCOTT. Yes.

Mr. LUCAS. Does the gentleman know who financed Miss Earhart's trip?

Mr. SCOTT. No. Does the gentleman from Illinois know?

Mr. LUCAS. No, I do not.

Mr. FADDIS. If it had been some poor father of a family who had been blown off into the Pacific in a fishing boat, does the gentleman believe that the Navy would be spending $250,000 a day to hunt up that father of the children?

Mr. SCOTT. I doubt it. The Navy, of course, should continue now, but in the future stunt flyers should be on notice that they seek publicity at their own risk.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Speaker, I make the same request.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FLEGER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. VINSON of Georgia for 10 days on account of important business.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, would the gentleman from Texas tell us what the proposed program is for next week?

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, on Monday we have District day; Tuesday, omnibus claims bill from the Committee on Claims; Wednesday, Calendar Wednesday business; Thursday, the conference report on the Interior Department appropriation bill. If that is finished on Thursday, then the Ohio flood-control bill.

Mr. SNELL. Would the gentleman care to state to the House at this time if there is any possibility of working out some sort of an agreement whereby the House might perhaps stand in recess subject to the call of the Speaker during the time the other body is discussing the Supreme Court matter? We have not a very formidable array of business before the House at the present time.

Mr. RAYBURN. Not for next week.

Mr. SNELL. For a great many weeks we have not, when we have practically wasted our time.

Mr. RAYBURN. I say this to the gentleman: The Speaker and I have discussed the matter in a very small way. It will be my hope if things could be worked that way that in a week or two from now probably we might have an understanding that for 2 weeks we would not transact any business.

Mr. SNELL. I think that would be a very wise move.

Mr. RAYBURN. I hope that can be worked out.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. And may I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that following the conclusion of the Interior appropriation bill, to be called up next week, I hope some plan can be worked out for recesses.

Mr. SNELL. I think we really ought to do it. I think that is fair and ought to be done. We certainly have not been very busy.

Mr. RAYBURN. I would like very much to see it done. I one day referred to a farm down in Texas. In the past 18 months I have been on it less than 30 days.

Mr. SNELL. I know a good fishing pond that I have been on less than that. [Laughter.]

Mr. RAYBURN. But I would say to the gentleman it would certainly please me very much if we could work out some kind of a program that would give the Members of the House 2 weeks in which they might know they might be away.

Mr. SNELL. I think that would be the wise thing to do, and I hope the Speaker and the majority leader will be able to do so.

Mr. RAYBURN. The Speaker feels the same way about it, and I know he joins me in this desire.

Mr. SNELL. I thank the gentleman for those kind words.

SENATE ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bills of the Senate of the following titles:

SENATE

SATURDAY, JULY 10, 1937

(Legislative day of Tuesday, July 6, 1937)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

THE JOURNAL

On request of Mr. ROBINSON, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of the calendar day Friday, July 9, 1937, was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT

Messages in writing from the President of the United States, submitting nominations, were communicated to the Senate by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Megill, one of its clerks, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 2193) to authorize the construction of certain auxiliary vessels for the Navy with amendments, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

H. R. 6547. An act to authorize the Secretary of the Navy to proceed with the construction of certain public works in or in the vicinity of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes; and

H. R. 7641. An act to authorize the attendance of the Marine Band at the National Encampment of the Grand Army of the Republic to be held at Madison, Wis., September 5 to 10, inclusive, 1937.

ORDER FOR RECESS TO MONDAY

Mr. ROBINSON. I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate completes its labors today it take a recess until 12 o'clock noon on Monday next.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

CALL OF THE ROLL

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Connally	Johnson, Colo.	Pittman
Andrews	Copeland	King	Pope
Ashurst	Dieterich	La Follette	Radcliffe
Austin	Duffy	Lee	Reynolds
Bailey	Ellender	Lewis	Robinson
Bankhead	Frazier	Lodge	Schwartz
Barkley	George	Logan	Schwellenbach
Berry	Gerry	Lonergan	Sheppard
Bilbo	Gibson	Lundeen	Shipstead
Black	Gillette	McAdoo	Steiwer
Bone	Green	McCarran	Thomas, Okla.
Borah	Guffey	McGill	Thomas, Utah
Brown, Mich.	Hale	McKellar	Townsend
Brown, N. H.	Harrison	McNary	Truman
Bulkley	Hatch	Maloney	Tydings
Bulow	Hayden	Minton	Vandenberg
Burke	Herring	Murray	Van Nuys
Byrnes	Hitchcock	Neely	Wagner
Capper	Holt	Nye	Walsh

Chavez	Johnson, Calif.	Pepper	White

Mr. LEWIS. I announce that the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY] is absent because of illness.

The Senator from Ohio [Mr. DONAHEY] and the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] are necessarily detained from the Senate.

The junior Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD], the Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK], the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], the senior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MOORE], the Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL], and the junior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMATHERS] are detained on important public business. I ask that this announcement stand of record for the day.

Mr. AUSTIN. I announce that the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES] and the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. DAVIS] are necessarily absent.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I announce that the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] is detained from the Senate because of illness.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Eighty-four Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

PATRICK J. HALTIGAN

Mr. LONERGAN. Mr. President, I take this opportunity to call attention of the Senate to the passing of Patrick J. Haltigan, who died Thursday night after a long illness, ending a period of 25 years of service in the House of Representatives, the last 17 years of which were in the capacity of reading clerk.

The House has paid tribute to Mr. Haltigan, and I am sure that the Senate, and particularly those Members who previously served in the House and who came to know "P. J." intimately, and to love him, are grieved to learn of his passing after a long illness, and will be pleased to join with the House in this official tribute.

I personally knew Mr. Haltigan for 24 years. He was a man of high character and vital and impressive personality. He was kind, and was possessed of great dignity and intelligence. I think that one of the greatest attributes he had was in making friends and in keeping everyone good natured. So far as I know, he never made an enemy during his entire service in the House.

Possessed of a golden voice, he served efficiently as reading clerk in the House and also at several Democratic national conventions. Regular in attendance, and efficient and vigilant in handling details of his work, he performed a public service of extreme importance in our legislative tribunal.

Patrick J. Haltigan was born in Ireland, where a brother, Andrew, still lives, and 4 years ago visited his native land. At 20 "P. J." landed in New York, where for 7 years he worked at the printing trade. He came to Washington in 1889 and worked as a compositor and proofreader in the Government Printing Office for 11 years.

In 1892 he married Miss Mary Elizabeth Gradey, and 5 sons and 5 daughters and 11 granddaughters resulted from that union. His oldest son, John E. Haltigan, was mayor of Carroll, Iowa, at 29, one of the youngest mayors of any city in the United States. The son now is chief attorney for the Veterans' Bureau.

While working in the Government Printing Office Mr. Haltigan studied at Georgetown University Law School, where he earned his bachelor of law degree. Meanwhile he had been first historian of Columbia Typographical Union.

Several months ago, when it was foreseen that Mr. Haltigan would never be able to return to his post, the House paid him an extraordinary tribute. The Speaker and other leaders announced he would be continued in his position as long as he lived, while they made arrangements for training a successor.

Mr. Haltigan's 10 children are: Mrs. Frederick F. Ploehan, Audubon, Iowa; John Emmett, Daniel G., Mrs. Leo H. Bartimeier, Detroit; Mrs. Edward L. Pugh, wife of a Marine Corps captain at Quantico, Va.; James P., Patrick J., Jr., Miss Helen Agnes, Joseph A., and Mrs. James J. Farrell.

OPERATIONS OF HOME OWNERS' LOAN CORPORATION IN CALIFORNIA (PT. 4, S. DOC. NO. 77)

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a letter from the Chairman of the Federal Home Land Bank Board, transmitting, in further response to Senate Resolution 135 (submitted by Mr. McADOO and agreed to May 20, 1937), data setting forth the names, titles, salaries, and addresses of employees of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation in the regional office located at San Francisco, Calif., for the fiscal years 1934, 1935, and 1936, which, with the accompanying papers, was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

MEMORIALS

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by the Illinois Women's Auxiliary of the Progressive Miners of America, Marissa, Ill., protesting against the enactment of the bill (S. 25) to prevent profiteering in time of war and to equalize the burdens of war and thus provide for the national defense, and promote peace, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD presented a resolution of the House of Representatives of the State of Minnesota, protesting against the enactment of legislation increasing the interest rate on loans made by the Farm Credit Administration, which was ordered to lie on the table.

(See resolution printed in full when laid before the Senate by the President pro tempore on the 6th instant, p. 6782, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.)

PERMISSION TO PRINT SPEECHES IN RECORD

Mr. MALONEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that I may hereafter insert in the Appendix of the RECORD sundry speeches made by me.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

JOINT RESOLUTION INTRODUCED

Mr. WALSH. Out of order, I ask unanimous consent to introduce for Mr. LODGE, Mr. LONERGAN, Mr. MALONEY, Mr. AUSTIN, Mr. GIBSON, Mr. BROWN of New Hampshire, Mr. BRIDGES, and myself a joint resolution for reference to the Committee on Commerce.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the joint resolution will be received and referred as requested by the Senator from Massachusetts.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 177) consenting to an interstate compact relating to flood control in the Connecticut River Valley was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED

The following bills were each read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs:

H. R. 6547. An act to authorize the Secretary of the Navy to proceed with the construction of certain public works in or in the vicinity of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes; and

H. R. 7641. An act to authorize the attendance of the Marine Band at the national encampment of the Grand Army of the Republic to be held at Madison, Wis., September 5 to 10, inclusive, 1937.

AMENDMENT TO RIVER AND HARBOR AUTHORIZATION BILL

Mr. NEELY submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 7051) authorizing the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed.

REORGANIZATION OF FEDERAL JUDICIARY

The Senate resumed consideration of the bill (S. 1392) to reorganize the judicial branch of the Government.

Mr. McCARRAN obtained the floor.

Mr. POPE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Nevada yield to me?

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, I am in the old familiar position; I can yield for a question only, I take it, without losing the floor. For that reason, unless the Senator from Idaho has a question to propound, I suppose I cannot yield.

Mr. POPE. I desire to ask unanimous consent to introduce a bill. Will the Senator yield for that purpose?

Mr. McCARRAN. If I do not lose the floor, and nothing is lost by it, I shall make no objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Except by unanimous consent, the Senator would yield the floor if he yielded for that purpose.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I object.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I do not think we ought to have the rule applied to one side and not to another. I suggest that unanimous consent be asked for the transaction of business generally.

Mr. ROBINSON. I ask unanimous consent that the Senator from Nevada may yield for that purpose without losing the floor.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Michigan objects.

May the Chair state that any Senator may be recognized for any purpose before a Senator takes the floor for a speech? During the period before the Senator from Nevada took the floor the Senator from Massachusetts was recognized, and also the Senator from Connecticut, but after the Senator from Nevada has been recognized to speak there are certain matters for which he cannot yield without suffering the penalty.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. BARKLEY. May not Senators, under the rule, introduce certain bills by handing them to the clerk without securing permission in the open Senate?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Petitions and private bills may be so introduced.

Mr. POPE. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. POPE. Does a private bill include a bill of general effect, such as the new farm bill?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. No; it does not. Private bills include such as pension and claims bills.

May the Chair also state, in answer to the parliamentary inquiry, that any Senator may be recognized who addresses the Chair first and may present any matter he desires to present, if there is no objection, or, if it is a privileged matter, a motion may be made. The only time that cannot be done is when a Senator has the floor. As the Senator from Nevada does not now yield to the Senator from Idaho, when the Senator from Nevada has finished, if the Senator from Idaho then rises first and addresses the Chair, under the rule, the Chair will recognize him and he can present any matter he sees fit to present.

Mr. POPE. Mr. President——

Mr. McCARRAN. I have the floor, and I fear that the Presiding Officer may be overlooking some rulings heretofore made. I would not want to put the Presiding Officer in an embarrassing position nor would I care to be put in an embarrassing position. I take the position that I have the floor, and therefore I cannot yield. I am sorry to have to do it, but the rule has been invoked and I must take this position. So in order to be protected I will not yield now save and except for a question. That is all I can do.

Mr. POPE. Mr. President, may I make an inquiry?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. POPE. I understood the Senator from Nevada was recognized last night and that he had the floor this morning at the opening of the session. Is that correct?

Mr. McCARRAN. That is correct.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nevada, however, did not have to take the floor today unless he saw fit to do so. He saw fit to take the floor, and now has the floor.

CONSTRUCTION OF AUXILIARY NAVAL VESSELS

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I ask the Senator to yield in order that I may——

Mr. McCARRAN. I yield for a question only, and a question pertaining to the subject matter before the Senate.

Mr. WALSH. I ask the indulgence of the Senator to have laid before the Senate a privileged matter in the form of a communication from the House, which is at the desk.

Mr. McCARRAN. I am not sufficiently familiar with the rules to say whether or not I can yield for that purpose without losing the floor.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair held on yesterday that a Senator might yield for a privileged motion. If the motion were taken up, action on it would be privileged and would not set aside the pending business but would only suspend it, and it would also only suspend the speech of the Senator occupying the floor. He would continue after the suspension without further recognition and would not lose the floor.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator from Nevada that it is only a question of requesting the Chair to lay before the Senate a communication from the House.

Mr. McCARRAN. I understand that to be a privileged question and that by yielding I would not lose the floor. Therefore I yield for that purpose.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. What is the motion of the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. WALSH. I ask the Chair to lay before the Senate a communication from the House in reference to a Senate bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 2193) to authorize the construction of certain auxiliary vessels for the Navy.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I move that the Senate disagree to the amendments of the House, request a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. WHITE. Is the motion subject to debate?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is not.

The question is on the motion of the Senator from Massachusetts.

The motion was agreed to; and the President pro tempore appointed Mr. WALSH, Mr. BONE, Mr. GILLETTE, Mr. HALE, and Mr. DAVIS conferees on the part of the Senate.

REORGANIZATION OF FEDERAL JUDICIARY

The Senate resumed consideration of the bill (S. 1392) to reorganize the judicial branch of the Government.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, knowing is understanding. Understanding is the keystone in the arch of mellow judgment. A great writer stated that philosophy in other words. It was Balzac who said: "The more we know, the more we understand. The more we understand, the gentler we judge." In addressing myself to this most important question, I do so with the hope that I may draw to my aid today and from now on, as I have in the past, a certain homely training which has come to me through many years of experience. I think that training might well be summed up in the sentence from the great author whom I quoted at the outset: "The more we know, the more we understand. The more we understand, the gentler we judge."

This subject is not novel. My respect for the Executive of these United States is not to be exceeded by the respect reposed in him by any man. My President laid the foundation for my thought in his publicized and widely published life. He said:

> In the face of this congestion the remedy commonly proposed is to add new judges or new courts; but it will readily be seen that if the problem is what I have stated it to be, such a so-called remedy merely aggravates the complaint. There are, of course, legitimate demands for additional judicial manpower in sections where the population has grown rapidly; but it is easy to see that to apply this remedy in all cases is to add to the ravages of the disease, to contribute to the confusion, and, what is profoundly important at this time, to burden still further an already seriously embarrassed taxpayer.

Mr. President, those are the words of my President. Those are the words of the present Chief Executive of this Nation, spoken so that his people might know the principle upon which he stood.

I am going back to my line, because it is my text, it is my guidance, it is the light which gleams into the future and gives me a view by which I may guide myself in my conscientious way, and by which I hope I may guide those who may look to me for guidance.

If there be any element in all America that would do me the single and singular honor to listen to my words today, it is that element which takes its place at the hearth fire of the lowly and the humble. I have no other following or adherents. I have no power whatever save and except the power which comes from an alliance with the human heart in homely places, living in desert lands, destined to futures that should hold the Nation carefully balanced, though other nations may throb and tremble in the throes of civil war.

Mr. President, I am placed in a most unhappy position, for my remarks follow the outstanding, monumental speech delivered by the great progressive leader [Mr. WHEELER] on yesterday in the very place where I now stand, delivered with his soul, delivered in language that he who runs may read and understand, and so to occupy this place and follow him makes my position an anticlimax. There are few who will pause to read my words, but there are millions today in every village and hamlet of America who are reading the words of BURTON K. WHEELER. There are few who will do me the honor to read my words, but there is not a mining camp nor a farming community nor a labor group in all the length and breadth of America, from the Atlantic to the Pacific, from the Gulf to the line and yet beyond, that has not read or will not read the words which came from the heart, a heart which has pulsated for a quarter of a century for men in places where toil exists, and for whom toil is the crown of existence.

But I must follow, I must go on, not that I care to hold the place, unenviable as it is, but that perchance some word or phrase may drop from my lips that by accident may lead those who read the speech made by my predecessor, the Senator from Montana, to say that as I joined shoulder to shoulder with him in a battle for my Nation and for my organized Government, I, too, belong to the humble soldiery of which, without hesitancy, I call him the leader.

But, Mr. President, the lines of my President—and I do not say that with any other thought than the thought that comes to me when, time after time, I have gone to his executive desk and found him with a smile, found him calling me by my given name, found him ever genial, found him ever my President—the lines of my President that guide me today are not the only lines that guide me. The able Senator from Kentucky [Mr. LOGAN], for whose word and expression I have most profound respect, said that we were trying to destroy the leadership of Franklin Delano Roosevelt; that we were trying to destroy his position whereby he might choose his successor. I did not know until that time that the Presidency was a subject of succession. Neither did I know that a member of the great Democratic Party would espouse the idea that the President might choose his successor, when, as a matter of fact, democracy ordained and presented to the Nation at an early period in its history the principle of conventions whereby the masses of the demos, if you please, might choose the Executive.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McCARRAN. I yield for a question.

Mr. LEWIS. I ask the able Senator from Nevada whether he means to say that someone on the floor of the Senate has really said that the present President of the United States had a right to choose his own successor, and therefore should be encouraged and aided in such undertaking.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, I can only answer that question in the lines published as coming from the able Senator from Kentucky [Mr. LOGAN], in which he said, as I read the lines—and if I be in error I shall be glad to be corrected—that we sought to destroy—I am now quoting substance—the power of Mr. Roosevelt to choose his successor.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question at that point?

Mr. McCARRAN. I yield for a question.

Mr. BURKE. Does the Senator from Nevada, in the statement he has just made, refer to the statement quoted in the Washington Post in the edition of July 4, 1937, in which, in quotation marks, the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. LOGAN] is quoted as having said—

> I think behind all of this is the desire of the conservative Democrats to break the influence of the President so he will be unable to name his successor.

Is that the matter to which the Senator refers?

Mr. McCARRAN. That is the matter to which I refer, Mr. President; and I am grateful to the Senator from Nebraska for having drawn my attention to the exact verbiage. I used the word "choose" perhaps not correctly, but I quoted in substance.

Mr. President, if our Government is anything, it is a constitutional democracy. When we abandon that theory, then only God Almighty, so far as I now know, can designate what our next form of government will be. I use the name of the Deity, and He apparently will not disclose, because up to this time He has not disclosed. But, Mr. President, let me go just a little further along the line of following my President and my leadership and my party. I take it that the able Senator from Kentucky would seek to read the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER], and those who follow him, out of the Democratic Party. Perchance the population of our respective States would not cause him to hesitate, but there was a time in the history of this country when the able Senator from Kentucky did not hesitate to call upon my predecessor, Senator Stewart, to save the great territory and the great country and the great people whom he represents today.

Though we may play upon words and expressions, as we ofttimes do, I do not believe that the able Senator from Kentucky meant anything of the kind.

I think perchance the day might come, and the able Senator knows it, when three votes—and that is all I represent in the electoral college—might save a Democratic President. I recall, and it is in the memory of nearly every one here, when three votes and even less saved a President of the Democracy who sought to succeed himself. Notwithstanding the fact that I belong to a party with a great dominance and a great popular power in this body, I do not believe the hour has come when our party can dare to cast off certain of its own members and say, "Because you exercise the judgment God Almighty gave you, therefore you are to be read out of the Democratic Party."

But, Mr. President, if that be the theme and theory, and if those who stand under the leadership of the great Senator from Montana, as I do, are to be read out of the party by reason of the fact that we seek to hold democracy safe in the New World, that it may guide the Old World out of a torn condition—if it be the theory that we cannot exercise our individual judgment, then I am ready still to stand by the side of the Senator from Montana. I would rather go down holding the helm of the ship of state safe through these troubled waters than return to the Senate of the United States, notwithstanding the fact that that is an honor not second even to the Presidency, as I view it. But there is an honor that is even higher than that, and it is in the atmosphere of that honor that those of us who challenge this bill and this substitute are working. There is an honor higher than that.

Do you remember the saying in ancient days that to be a Roman was greater than to be a king? In this modern day, to be an American citizen, regardless of party lines, is greater than to be a President, greater than to be a member of a dominant party controlling the destiny of a nation, because the hour is coming, Mr. President—the hour is coming, sirs—when you and I will be called upon in no uncertain terms to say whether or not the seeds of destruction being sown in this Government today from afar are to take root and blossom and bloom into a fruition that will poison the atmosphere of the world.

I say that this entire proposal grows out of a rampant philosophy.

It does not come from the President of the United States; it does not come from my President; it did not emanate from the man who wrote the lines I have just read. It could not emanate from him. He is too big, he is too grand, he is too splendid ever to have a bill of this type come from him, after he heralded to the people of his country the lines I have read.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McCARRAN. I yield for a question.

Mr. WHEELER. Does the Senator know that when the charge was made by the Republicans during the campaign that the President was going to add new Justices to the Supreme Court for the purpose of getting decisions, this quotation from the President was called to our attention, and we used the very quotation in some of our campaign speeches to refute the statements that were made on the other side?

Mr. McCARRAN. Yes, Mr. President; and I am one of those who used it. I wish Mr. Farley, the Postmaster General, were listening today, because I know he made a terrible mistake; but, mistake though it may be, it was a dagger driven into my heart. It was driven home to a voting population of 42,000, which is all the voting population there is in my home State. But every man and woman knows Mr. Farley's candidate there, and when he said that when I asked for something for my humble State there would be a different viewpoint, he wrote my death warrant, and he knew it, and I may be today delivering my valedictory by reason of a mandate of Mr. Farley. Yet I do not know why, because in the closing hours of the last campaign those in charge of our party were not so sure that all the States of the West were going for Mr. Roosevelt. The State of Wyoming was doubtful. If Mr. Hurja is listening to me, he will bow his head in acquiescence to that statement. The Northwest was not so sure. If the able Senators from the Northwest are present, they, too, will acquiesce. The State of Colorado was not considered safe. Every one of those States was a desperate State, desperate to campaign in. It required men who were willing to take their lives in their hands and fly. Otherwise, the ground could not be covered in the time required.

I was called to the national committee headquarters in New York—and this is borne out by the record, and Mr. Farley will not deny it, nor will Mr. Hurja. My program was laid for me, that I must fly every day of the campaign from then on, first to Utah, then to Colorado, then to Wyoming, then to Oregon, then to Washington, then back to remain—and I have the telegrams asking that I remain—in the State of Utah and cast an absentee vote in my own State, that I might help that desperate district.

Oh, Mr. President, they did not say to me then, "When you ask for something for your State there will be a different viewpoint." When I rode out of Millings, Mont., at 2 o'clock in the morning on a plane to take me to Seattle, Wash., to speak that evening, and then back again to Portland, and on back to Salt Lake City, they did not say, "If you do this, when you go and ask for something for 42,000 voting population, there will be a different viewpoint." No; they did not say that to me then, and they do not mean to say it to me now. They only want to challenge me; they only want me to crouch beneath their thumb, and if I were remote from this Chamber where language might be otherwise, I would tell them.

When I quoted the lines from my President—my President, who has gone through 4 great years of reclaiming this Nation—when I quoted those lines against a Republican onslaught in the desperate district I have mentioned, that he did not propose to tear down that great fundamental branch of this Government—the Supreme Court—when I quoted that, night, noon, and morning, I was doing what I had been told to do. It was given to me in national committee headquarters in New York City, and I was told to fly and quote it wherever I stopped, and to give it to the press wherever I could. The publicity agency asked me to do that.

Mr. President, that was not all they asked me to do. They asked me to quote the Democratic platform, my platform, the platform of my President, the solemn covenant offered by my party to the people of this country, upon which covenant they asked to be kept in power. Let me quote the Democratic platform. First, the words of my President, then the words of my party, and I am going to quote the words of my leader, the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary, before I conclude. The Democratic platform says:

The Republican platform—

Mr. President, I do not like to deal with a Republican platform. I do not know anything about Republican platforms. I never had anything to do with drafting a Republican platform. I do not believe the Senator from Kentucky can ever make me have anything to do with drafting a Republican platform, so long as I know myself. I doubt it. But the Republican platform had laid down certain challenges. They were challenges. They could not be construed in any other light.

The Republican platform had been published first, it had been designed to enlist the attention of the American people, and it had enlisted the attention of the American people. Do not think for a moment, because there were only two States which happened to go Republican, that the Republican Party did not have hope during all that period. Do not think for a moment that the Democratic Party was altogether sure. If they had been sure, some of us would not have been sent out in the campaign.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McCARRAN. I yield for a question.

Mr. WHEELER. The Senator knows, does he not, that they were not sure of Kansas, that they were not sure of Nebraska, that they were not sure of Iowa; so they had some of us go into those States and campaign through all those States? He is familiar with that fact, is he not?

Mr. McCARRAN. That is correct, Mr. President.

Mr. WHEELER. And the Senator knows, does he not, that they did not give out orders to censor any of our speeches, or have them censored in Kansas?

Mr. McCARRAN. More than that, Mr. President, they gave us this very material to work with. I went into the State of Utah. I spent the last 4 days of the campaign, at the request of the national committee and the State committee, in the State of Utah, and both the able Senators from Utah, who are now present, will confirm what I say.

I went to Utah for two purposes. First of all, the national committee was not so certain about Utah going for the President, although that was more certain than was the outlook with regard to the Governorship. But it wanted to elect a Governor in Utah. I have telegrams which say, "You are the man to turn the State of Utah for Governor Blood." I did not believe it then, and I do not believe it now. I think that was simply a bouquet thrown at me to hold me there. Nevertheless, I went wholeheartedly into the battle to hold the State of Utah. Why? Because for every day of my mature life I have given my heart and soul, as those who do me the honor to listen today know, to the toiling masses of this country; and there is only one epitaph that I would have written upon my tombstone, and that is, "He toiled for the toiler." There is only one thing that I would have spoken of me, which I would consider the greatest praise ever given to a man, and that is, "He gave his whole being for the uplift of the lowly and the humble."

Utah has a voting population of toilers. They are railroad men, they are shopmen, they are miners. Come with me on the night when I left Salt Lake City by special car, after delivering a speech in the city and was taken up 65 miles into a mining camp to which the miners had trudged through the snow up to their knees in order to listen to what I had to say to them. Come with me to that scene, where we gave the promise to those toiling men who had come out of the bowels of the earth that day. Some of them had laid off shift to come there and listen—to listen to someone who would speak to them in their own language. Come with me and see whether I am now fighting against the President whom I sought to elect, the President who uttered the lines I have just read to the Senate of the United States.

Then I went further, and I said, "The Democratic platform has promised certain things. The Democratic platform has promised that there will be no tearing down of any one of the three coordinate branches of this Government. The charge has been hurled against democracy that we propose to change the Supreme Court. Then I read to them the Democratic platform.

Mr. President, the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] and I stand shoulder to shoulder with one whose language I think Senators will recognize when I read a plank in the Democratic platform.

First let me recall that the Republican platform proposed to meet many pressing national problems solely by action of the separate States. Senators remember that plank. Those problems were drought, dust storms, floods, minimum wages, maximum hours, child labor, working conditions in industry, monopolistic and unfair business practices.

We have sought—

This is the Democratic platform—and will continue to seek to meet these problems—

The problems I have just named—through legislation within the Constitution—

Or—

we shall seek such clarifying amendment as will assure to the legislatures of the several States and to the Congress of the United States, each within its proper jurisdiction, the power to enact those laws—

Which are necessary—

• • • we propose to maintain the letter—

Where is the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. LOGAN]?—

• • • we propose to maintain the letter and the spirit of the Constitution.

The Senator from Kentucky says there is no difference between the letter and the spirit. Well, then, the Democratic national platform becomes rather redundant there. It might be demurred to as being redundant because it said:

We propose to maintain the letter and the spirit of the Constitution.

I read that language to the men and the women of the West. They are not so many in number; they are not so powerful; but what I did in those small communities was being done by others in great communities. What I did in Colorado and Wyoming and Idaho and Utah and Nevada was being done by other nationally recognized speakers in New York City; in Philadelphia, where the platform was written, where the Declaration of Independence was written, where the Constitution of the United States was written; so that while I was reading those lines and expressing myself to the people, as I am today to the Senate, other great speakers, men worthy of higher places, were giving the same message, and the American people were led to believe there would be no attempt to tear down that which had been honored and respected for 150 years.

Mr. President, I said at the outset, in discussing the Democratic platform, that I thought Senators would recognize some of the language as coming from a certain Senator. Do Senators recognize the language of the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY] in that platform? And do Senators recognize the fact that the senior Senator from Wyoming today is standing with us shoulder to shoulder in this battle for the platform which he helped to write in Philadelphia?

There are Democrats who believe that when we utter a platform to the people of the country we also propose to keep our word, because there is a time when we are coming back, and our majority may not be so great. There is a time when we are coming back, and even the great prophet of all time—he who prophesies and reads you out of the party at the same time—may not then be figuring so large in the Democratic Party. Mr. President, there is a time coming, and it is a time to be reckoned with.

Let us go back over the Republican platform as quoted in the Democratic platform.

* * * drought—

Mr. President, I wonder if we may have order.

(The President pro tempore rapped with his gavel.)

Mr. McCARRAN. I am sorry to interrupt the Senator from Illinois [Mr. DIETERICH]. I would not interrupt him for anything in the world. He is a fine gentleman. I like him very much.

Mr. DIETERICH. Mr. President——

Mr. McCARRAN. I can yield to the Senator for a question only, if the Senator wants to ask me a question.

Mr. DIETERICH. I did not mean to disturb the Senator.

Mr. McCARRAN. I know the Senator did not mean to. It is all right. I myself have been guilty of inadvertently doing the same thing. All of us at times forget ourselves. I should not complain were it not for the fact that I am under more or less of a strain.

This is the first time for a year and a half that I have attempted to deliver a speech of any magnitude, and I am delivering it now contrary to a doctor's orders, but I think the cause is worth while. I think the cause is worthy of any man's life. I think this cause in which we have enlisted, and in which I say without hesitancy we constitute ourselves a battalion of death, to the end that the Constitution of the United States shall prevail, is worthy of the effort, humble though it may be, even of those most humble, coming from most humble and uninfluential places. I never had a greater honor done to me than to have Members of the Senate of the United States in such splendid number remain present and listen to my words, for when it comes to the electoral college Nevada counts little, but I hope that perchance some word of mine may be worth while.

Let us go back to the Republican platform. In that platform the Republican Party promised, in the form of a challenge, if you please, that they would take care of the sufferers from drought, dust storms, and floods; that they would provide for minimum wages and maximum hours; regulate child labor and working conditions in industry; and take action against monopolistic and unfair business practices. We said that we would meet their challenge and that we would do it within the spirit and letter of the Constitution; and we can meet it within the letter and spirit of the Constitution; there is no trouble about that. Mr. President, I make the assertion today on the floor of the Senate that we can write an N. R. A. law, notwithstanding the fact that the original N. R. A. law was overridden by the Supreme Court, and we can write it within the spirit and letter of the Constitution, so that the court of last resort will sustain it. I wonder if anyone wants to accept that challenge? Why change the Court when the Congress should do its work?

We are either legislators or we sit here the recipients of proposed measures coming from God knows where and no one knows when. If this body will but constitute itself a legislative body that recognizes a written Constitution, with 72 lawyers composing its membership, will anyone tell me it cannot sit down and write a constitutional bill? If 72 lawyers in the Senate of the United States cannot write a constitutional law, how can it be expected that nine old men can find the law constitutional? Seventy-two men, every one of them young—and if the Senator from Kentucky is looking at me I will say yes, I am in that category [laughter]—72 young men should be able to write a constitutional law. If they cannot write a constitutional law, then 72 lawyers, with their oaths of office upon their consciences, should say to the people of this country, "It cannot be done under the Constitution, and, therefore, we are going to submit to you a change in the organic law so that it may be done."

Let us be frank with ourselves; let us be fair with ourselves, as we would have the people be fair with us. And being fair with ourselves, let us be fair with the Court of last resort.

That expression causes me to digress for a moment. A court of last resort! Is there anyone, even the able Senator from Indiana [Mr. MINTON], who finds nothing good in the Supreme Court; is there any lawyer in all the country, who would not want a final tribunal to pass upon controversial matters; a court of last resort, where the Nation and the people may rest secure, and, resting secure, may say to the world, "We submit our causes, not only our private controversies but our national controversies as well, to a tribunal in which is resolved all differences, from the mandates of which we take guidance and find ourselves with a clear course forward"? Is there anyone who would destroy or do away with the Court of last resort? Would it not be more courageous, would it not be more in keeping with candor, to say to the people of this country, "We propose to put out of business the Supreme Court of the United States"?

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Vermont?

Mr. McCARRAN. I yield for a question.

Mr. AUSTIN. What difference does it make whether the President of the United States uses the power of placing three coadjutors on the bench to discipline the Court or its decisions or, according to the original bill, places six coadjutors on the bench for the purpose of disciplining the Court?

Mr. McCARRAN. I had expected to discuss that question later, but I am glad to take it up now, because it is ever present; it is the uppermost thing in the pending substitute.

I say there is no difference; there is not even a difference in degree, although some Senators may say there is, because the principle is the same. If the will and judgment of one of the nine Justices are to be vetoed, then the will and judgment of the whole nine are vetoed. If an Executive veto can be placed against the will and judgment of one of the nine Justices of the Supreme Court—and that is what the substitute means, just as did the original bill—a veto can be placed against the will and vote of the nine Justices; if that can be done, the Supreme Court can be destroyed; if the Supreme Court can be destroyed in that way, the judicial branch of the Government can be destroyed; and if the judiciary branch of the Government can be thus destroyed, it is only tomorrow that an effort may be made to destroy the legislative branch of the Government. That has been done in other lands.

Mr. President, I said at the outset that if there was one element in all this country that I might desire the honor, even inferentially, to represent, it is the ranks of the lowly and the humble, the ranks of labor. I do not claim to represent them. I only claim to be a soldier in their cause, and a volunteer soldier at that; but I have enlisted for the duration of the war, and, so long as the toilers of this country need some humble soldier in the rear ranks, I am willing to serve.

Mr. President, may we not look into the future by the light that is given to us coming out not only of the past but by the light of the present?

Germany came out of the Great War and organized herself into the form of a republic. Germany finally elected that grand old German general, Von Hindenburg, to the Presidency. Then a chancelor, realizing that an executive order could come from the Presidency, sought and obtained such an executive order, an executive order that hinged upon and had to do with the financial life of Germany. We know what then followed. That was an innocent act; there was not much to it. Putting three additional members on the Court of last resort of America may also look to be an innocent act; it is a simple thing. We are told it will not do any harm; that the additional Justices will merely take the place of some elderly men who should have retired but have not done so. But what grew out of the philosophy that came from the executive order of Von Hindenburg? I will tell the ranks of labor and those who represent labor what has grown out of that act. Today a labor union may not be organized in Germany; today workingmen cannot strike in Germany. That is not all. Let us go down on the Mediterranean and see what happened there.

It is said—and I say it, too—that the Executive in the White House has no intention to become a dictator; I say it unhesitatingly; but who is to follow the splendid character who sits there and now guides the destinies of this Nation? Will anyone predict who is going to be his successor, even though, in the language of the able Senator from Kentucky [Mr. LOGAN], he might choose his successor?

What type of individual will that man be? What will be his mandates and dictates? No; I believe that Franklin Delano Roosevelt wants to serve a democracy in a democratic way. I love him, I have too much respect for him, I have too much respect for my President, ever to intimate anything to the contrary.

But when Von Hindenburg issued the order that was asked by Bruning, he established a precedent which has been taken advantage of by Hitler, and today the Reichstag does not meet any more except when Hitler sees fit to call it.

That is not all. Perhaps it would not mean so much if Congress should not meet. Some people think we should adjourn now. I am one of them. But, Mr. President, that is not all. Out of that situation in Germany has grown one mandate after another, one executive order after another, not issued by the President of the Republic of Germany but issued by Mr. Hitler, who today controls Germany and holds it in the palm of his hand.

Labor, are you drifting that way? Toilers of America, this is your hour. Workers of the land, of the quarry and the soil, it is up to you. Stop this fire in its inception. If the fire had been extinguished in Germany, today there would be an opportunity to organize union labor in Germany. If the fire had been stopped in Germany, there would not be a mandate today that the toiler of Germany may not use the one and only instrument that has ever been available to the toiler, the right to strike.

But that is not all. Let us come down to the Mediterranean and see what followed. Today in Italy the same rule prevails. A labor union may not be organized in Italy. Labor does not dare strike in Italy. And that is not all; there is not a law but a mandate in Italy, coming down from the hand of Mr. Mussolini, prohibiting collective bargaining, the very thing for which we fought and for which we are fighting now; the right of labor to enter into agreements with its employers, to bargain as to what shall be the earnings of the toilers and the hours of labor.

Mr. President, there is a law for collective bargaining in Italy, but I will tell you what the law is. The law is that when the commission appointed by Mr. Mussolini says, "Take this as your bargain", that is the end of collective bargaining.

O toilers of America, where are you drifting? Toilers of America, you who today unfortunately and unhappily quarrel among yourselves as to the right of dominance, may find that your condition is better than it will be tomorrow when neither side will have a chance to quarrel; when a mandate coming from some commission may tell you that your quarrels are over and that the collective bargaining will be done elsewhere.

What will there be to prevent such a condition if the only independent tribunal we have, a legally constituted tribunal, shall be destroyed? What will there be to stop such a law as that if the Court of last resort shall be destroyed?

Toilers of America, awaken! Awaken! The hour is yours! Those of us sitting here perhaps with a minority of votes are striving with every ounce of energy in our being to the end that this thing shall not come to pass. Toilers of America, come out in the open, come to our rescue, come to our aid, come to us now because it will be too late tomorrow when some power, however wonderful, however beneficent, however grand and glorious, shall have put a spike into the gun, even though it be one spike into the gun that would fire the shot that would save you.

Mr. President, the question of the able Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN] is most timely. There is no difference; but the pending measure is an entering wedge whereby three judges may be added to the Supreme Court by appointment within the next 6 months, if the substitute should be passed. I have tried to find out, to search my own knowledge of things, as to whether or not they would be really judges. One of them, if I take the spirit of the occasion correctly, would be a judge to sit by the side of the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States, of which there shall be but one. Who would be the Chief Justice? What would become of the Chief Justice?

I am not dealing in personalities. I do not like to call names. I do not like to think we are aiming at a man who perchance by reason of the fact that he has given his life to the public service of his country and who enlisted under the colors of the Republican Party may be affected by the proposed action. I do not like to mention him, to traduce him. The history of the law of this country will never be completely written until a chapter is inscribed to the name of Charles Evans Hughes. I do not care whether he be a Republican or a Democrat. I do not care whether he be whatever the able Senator from Indiana [Mr. MINTON] would call him, or whether he be just a humble citizen, his contribution to the law of the world, not alone on the court of last resort of the United States, but in private practice as well, his contribution as a member of the Cabinet of a President who governed and guided this Nation, his contribution and public service even though we might not say that he could be President of the United States, nevertheless is a worthy thing, worthy of the students of the law in the future to read—to read that they may have great thoughts, just as we read the lines of Hamilton.

Who dares to eradicate the character of Hamilton from the history of America? When we do that we minimize the glory and the grandeur of Jefferson, because the one stood where the other did not stand. So the one became great by comparison, and continuous comparison, both of them giving their souls and their lives along with their theories of government, to build a Nation that has lived for 150 years and more.

So I come back to the question propounded by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN]. There is no difference. This thing is wrong. If it were proposed to add only one Justice, this thing is wrong, because we promised otherwise. This thing is wrong because my President said it should not take place. This thing is wrong because my party, sitting here in control of the affairs of 129,000,000 human beings, is responsible not alone for its word and its promise, but is responsible for the ages yet to come.

My party! My President! I take not off my hat to the able Senator from Indiana [Mr. MINTON] when he says "my President." I think it was the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. LOGAN] who said some of us rode in on the coattails of President Roosevelt. I have only one remark to make in that regard. The able junior Senator from Indiana, who corroborated and acquiesced in that statement, did not seem to have the courage to try to ride in on Mr. Roosevelt's coattails in 1932. He was willing that somebody else might take it then and try it. But after Mr. Roosevelt had been in for a couple of years the able junior Senator from Indiana took a try. He came in on the President's coattails all right, but it took somebody to beat Watson in Indiana. He was not a "dub." He had been through battles before, and the able senior Senator from Indiana [Mr. VAN NUYS] did not particularly desire to take on that old warrior. But his party drafted him, and the able senior Senator from Indiana came here with a greater popular vote out of Indiana than my President. He came out of Indiana with a vote that topped Mr. Roosevelt's.

That was not so bad. It seems to me somewhere along the line the coattails must have slipped. Somewhere along the line something went awry, because we did not all come in here on the coattails of anybody. If we were to speak personally, we should be accused of being too personal; and so we drop the subject at that.

But whether there are those who came here on the coattails of Mr. Roosevelt, or did not come here on the coattails of Mr. Roosevelt, what different does it make? Did we, because we were elected under the leadership of Mr. Roosevelt, become so subservient as not to dare announce our own conscientious beliefs? When that days comes—God forbid that it ever shall come!—count me out. I would rather serve one term in the Senate of the United States, have that honor, and go back into the humble walks of private life, where Mr. Farley says he will consign me, than to be here all the remainder of my days and say that I did not exercise my own judgment.

I am not alone in this crusade—and it is a crusade. If anybody thinks it is not a crusade, he will learn differently in the next 4 or 5 months.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McCARRAN. I yield.

Mr. WHEELER. The Senator knows, of course, that if Mr. Farley and some of that group try to punish those who are opposed to the Court plan, two persons can play that kind of game, and others can take issue in some of the States with other persons?

Mr. McCARRAN. Yes, Mr. President; I answer the question in the affirmative, and it makes me laugh when I answer it in the affirmative. I do not know that 42,000 votes mean much. I do not know that three votes in the electoral college mean much. I do not know that a little State where hearts and homes and hearth fires constitute a haven for the toiler means much. I only know that principle lives where desert lands put forth their bloom. I only know that human hearts are just as red and just as fresh in desert lands as they are where verdure grows. I only know that altogether we constitute a great body politic, the little and the big alike; and if we forget the little in the battle for the big, the day will come when the little will grow and the big will diminish.

No men can succeed in trampling right under foot continuously. If we pass this bill during this session, or at any other time, we shall write into the heart of every schoolboy in America one thought that he will never forget. Today the school population of this country is turning out of its doors young men and young women who are listening to this debate. They are reading more than they ever did before. If you do not believe that statement, let me refer to a little incident.

Recently there has been published a little book, put out by a special commission of Congress under Representative BLOOM, called "The Story of the Constitution." Today that little book is almost unobtainable, although hundreds of thousands of copies have been issued. During the past 60 days there has been a greater call by the youth of America for that book, for a word as to what it all means and what their Constitution is, than there has been even for Gone With the Wind. Young America is reading, young America is listening today. Young America wants to know what you meant when you met the challenge from the formerly dominant party and said what you would do. You met the challenge; but young America wants to know whether the Democratic Party intends to keep its word and to maintain the integrity of the judicial branch of the Government, that young America has learned at the teacher's knee, at the mother's knee, if you please, even from the cradle up, is a safeguard and bulwark of liberty.

Let us go into the operation of this bill, assuming that it should become operative.

Three judges would be appointed within the next 6 months. There is not any use in fooling ourselves. Those judges would not be fools when they went on the Supreme Bench. They would know the history of this whole legislation, just as you and I know it, and they would know that it was proposed to put, not young blood, but new blood on the Supreme Bench for the purpose of controlling the decisions of that bench. I do not care how the expression may be dressed up, it amounts to the same thing. It is for the purpose of controlling the decisions of the Supreme Bench.

Mr. President, do you think for a moment those judges would go on the Supreme Bench and forget everything that has transpired, one to sit by the side of Chief Justice Hughes, one to sit by the side of Mr. Justice Brandeis, that grand old man—everybody concurs in that; I do not have any trouble there—one to sit by the side of Mr. Justice Sutherland, another one of America's great characters, a great character who came out of the West, with the breadth of mind that naturally comes from the broad, wide-open spaces?

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McCARRAN. I yield for a question.

Mr. WHEELER. Can the Senator imagine any reputable lawyer or any lawyer of outstanding ability wanting to accept a place on the Supreme Court, if we should pass this bill, when he knew that by so doing he would humiliate either Chief Justice Hughes or Mr. Justice Brandeis or any other member of that bench?

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, I cannot imagine it. However, there is that allurement which would naturally entice one even to lay aside his own feeling when he knew he was to go on the Court to humiliate someone, there is that allurement of high places, there is that glamor which comes from seats among the mighty which would cause men even to forget themselves.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McCARRAN. I yield.

Mr. WHEELER. Does not the Senator think that any man who would stultify himself even for the glory of serving on the Supreme Court would not be fit to go on the bench, under the circumstances?

Mr. McCARRAN. I can only say that I concur in that view. I concur in that view because of the history of the pending bill. I concur in that view because the very appointive power so declared. I concur in that view because the Senate of the United States, through its Committee on the Judiciary, submitted a report on the bill in its original form, which, regardless of the comment of those who do not like it, will take its place in the archives of history. It will be read, as it has been read, even by those who do not generally read documents of its kind. So I say, in reply to the Senator from Montana, that America would await—129,000,000 human beings would await—with wonder and anxiety for the name of the man who would accept an appointment to go on the bench as the coadjutor of a Justice, especially if that Justice were one who, in all the vigor of human nature, had kept himself abreast of his work and had kept his Court current, as the present Chief Justice has done, as has been evinced by the letter coming from him to the able Senator from Montana.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. McCARRAN. I yield for a question.

Mr. BURKE. In the substitute bill, as I read it, provision is made for two classes of judges on the Supreme Court. It states, first, that the Court shall consist of a Chief Justice and eight Associate Justices. They are to be the permanent members of the Court. Then there is the provision for additional members being added, one a year, who are to be in a somewhat different class. I do not know exactly what to call them. They are to be neither permanent nor temporary. I assume they are to be appointed for life; but they are in a different class. My question is, following out the thought expressed in the question of the Senator from Montana, would not the new men, one at the start, perhaps six finally, in reality be different kinds of Justices of the Supreme Court? Would they not be suspect from the very start in the eyes of the people of the country and in the eyes of the other members, the permanent members, of the Court?

Mr. McCARRAN. I can only answer that by saying that perhaps we might be justified in calling them "quasi judges." I do not know whether or not that would be a good name for them; but any name will do for them. What difference would it make? They are not going on there anyway; but if they should go on the Bench, and if the judgment and conclusions of the Justices on the Bench, whom they were to sit beside, to use a figure of speech, were not in accord with what the appointive power thought was the spirit of the time, then they would vote contrarily. So by indirection the executive branch of the Government would place a veto against the will and judgment of one sitting on the Supreme Court of the United States, whose will and judgment should be free, an indirect veto coming from the White House; and not alone from the White House, but from this very body, this body which would confirm the appointment. There would be a veto power over a Judge who was regularly on the Bench, and when, perchance, his judgment went contrary to the ideas and judgment of the new Judge, then they would pair, so we would have paired Judges, and we would have no judgment at all.

Mr. President, if you can get away from this dilemma, if you can get away from this condition, if you can get away from these things, then you can do more than men who studied this bill for months and months and months could do. Some may throw a camouflage over the matter; they may sugar-coat it and say, "We cannot enact this law and we cannot enact that law; we cannot relieve drought; we cannot take care of the dust bowl, we cannot take care of rivers and harbors, we cannot take care of the hungry and the unclothed and the unsheltered; we cannot provide social security so that the aged may have compensation when they grow old." But we have done those things.

Out of 58,000 decisions handed down by the Court of last resort, 64 statutes enacted by the Congress have been declared unconstitutional. Does that indicate a great crime? Who is going to decide, when men sitting here will not? I confess that I have expressed my doubt as to bills when I have voted for them, but I have heard the ablest Members say, "I doubt the constitutionality of the measure, but let the Supreme Court pass on it."

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. McCARRAN. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. Let me ask the Senator whether, in his view, the addition of one Judge to that extent would affect the character of the Court's decisions? Some Senators have made the claim that they were against providing for six new Judges because if six were put on the Court that would amount to influencing the character of the Court, but that putting on one now and one next year would not have the same result. I should like to have the Senator's reaction to that thought. I know that is in the minds of some Senators, that they are against six; they think that the system can tolerate one Judge at a time, but cannot tolerate six. Will the Senator please explain to the Senate how that can operate?

Mr. McCARRAN. I will try to give my views. Whether I can explain it to the Senator or not is another question.

Mr. CONNALLY. That is difficult; but I will try to follow the Senator. [Laughter.]

Mr. McCARRAN. Let me address myself to the question, first of all, from a broad standpoint, as I view it. Let me address myself to the proposition that there is a principle involved. There could be no harm in enlarging the Supreme Court if the enlargement were to be permanent, natural, normal. It has been done before; it can be done again. It is permissible. But the bill before us does not propose to enlarge the Supreme Court. The bill does not propose to place new permanent members on the Supreme Bench. The bill proposes to place ad-interim members on the Supreme Bench if I may so term them; ad interim in that they will serve as coadjutors, so to speak, until the ones for whom they "pinch hit" are called beyond, or retire. When that happens, I take it from the tenor of the bill that the ad-interim Judge becomes a permanent Judge. He is always permanent to the extent that he cannot be removed except for cause. He is there to the extent that he can always affect the decisions of the Court.

That brings me to the subject of whether or not decisions would be affected by such a condition, and affected in a way that would be intolerable to the American people and to our form of government. There should be a final word in every litigation; there should be a final decision; but no one can ever say that after we place on the Supreme Bench ad interim Judges or coadjutors, or whatever we may call them, the American people will ever be satisfied with a decision rendered by such a court.

Mr. President, it may be said for the American people that, regardless of whether or not the decision is in their favor or against them, they are willing to abide by the decision of the court of last resort. It has no army to enforce its mandates. It has no power behind its judgments save and except the power of popular accord, popular declaration, and a nation, and a constitution. Those are the things that stand behind the Supreme Court, and which, if we pass this bill, we shall take from the Supreme Court. Those are the things for which some of us would rather strive here, even though we do not come back to the Senate; because, after all is said and done, a nation is more than a power, and a people is more than an individual; and, however much we may love public place, we love more those who look to us for guidance. We love the honor of following the dictates of our own consciences more than we love anything else.

Mr. President, I am wondering what the future holds if this bill is to become law. I ask Senators to remember that the bill in its present form gives a discretionary power. I say that another power is involved in it, and that is the power of a President to accumulate appointments, so that he may or may not appoint this year or next year, but may, if he chooses, defer the appointments, and have at his control more than one appointment in any one year.

Read the language of the bill, and if Senators can come to any other conclusion they will have to "show" me. Three new judges will go on the bench within the next 6 months. That is admitted by everybody. That in itself is not a bad accumulation. But it is said that the appointments would be made by my President. That is true. I believe—and I am sincere when I say it—that my President would make the appointments to the best of his ability; but he would appoint to the best of his ability to see to it that his ideas were incorporated into the judgment of the Bench. It never was the intention, however, that the Executive should control the judicial branch of the Government. If it had been the intention of the founders that the Executive should control the judicial branch of the Government, then it was equally the intention of the founders that the Executive should control every other branch of the Government, including the legislative branch.

Mr. President, I say now, in my humble judgment, without fear of contradiction, that the passage of this bill would destroy the Supreme Court of the United States; it would destroy its efficacy; and we might as well destroy the thing itself as to destroy its efficacy. The passage of this bill would destroy the confidence in the Court which now rests in the hearts of the people, and that is the only army it has behind its mandates. When we destroy the confidence of the people of the country in any one branch of the Government, we have entered upon the destruction of the Government itself.

Do you wonder, Mr. President, why some of us are so sincere in this cause, why we are so serious in this contest? How easy it would have been to go along? How lovely it would have been to go down to my President—and I can go down to him now; I am not afraid—and receive the same smile that I have always received. How easy it would have been for me to have Mr. Farley's pat on the back, and go along, go along, go along. "Go along, and you will come back to the United States Senate. Go along, and it is all right."

Mr. President, we have "gone along" too much in this country. There has been too much laying aside of the individual judgment on the part of the representatives who were elected by a sovereign people. There has been too much laying aside of individual judgment which the people's representatives took an oath to exercise. There have been too many men with deep-seated consciences who have asked themselves, "Will my vote bring me back to the Senate?" The time has come for that to stop. The time has come for the people of this country to rise in defense of their own Government, if they ever will rise to it. The time has come for their representatives, whether in the other House or on the floor of the Senate, to stand up and say, "I am here today, and that is my verdict. I am here today, and I will do today what conscience dictates to me to do. If tomorrow I am not here, I shall have the satisfaction of knowing that when I was here I did that which I believed to be right, though I am sorry that in doing so my State must be punished by Mr. Farley."

Those are only little things we must regret. With glory there always comes regret. With the glory of sitting in this body there must come the regret of having to vote one way or another according to our own beliefs. With the glory of being a Member of this body, and standing shoulder to shoulder with other Senators, there comes the regret that we cannot always vote with them. No apologies are ever necessary for the way we vote. It is always a question of judgment. In this instance it may be said that we are trying to break the Democratic Party; but in reply to that I say, "We are trying to cement the Democratic Party and have it stand for a democracy, and not for a hidden control."

Mr. President, this bill did not come from the President of the United States. This bill was not written by the President of the United States. There is an imagination, there is a philosophy which gave parental sanction to this bill, a rampant philosophy that is going the rounds of the country, which if it moves with sufficient fury will sweep this Government off its feet, because today from without there come enemies greater than any army that ever challenged our existence.

Mr. President, with apology, I hope to hold the attention of the Senate for a few moments longer while I refer to that which so threatens America that we should not even by one jot or tittle change the fundamental organization of this Government at this time.

Let us go abroad for a moment and hear the guns pealing out on the streets of old Madrid and see them flowing with human blood. Let us go into France, that does not know what form of government will be hers on the morrow. Let us go into Italy, where government is held in the palm of the hand of one man, who, if he were to be called away, only God Almighty knows what form of government would control the land of the Caesars. Let us go into Germany. Of course, a man would be arrested in Germany for calling Mr. Hitler a dictator. But be that as it may, call him anything you like, he controls the destiny of Germany. Then, let us go a little further; let us go into the great north, where Russia, with her teeming millions and her seething hordes, does not know what may happen to her tomorrow.

Mr. President, every one of those countries is today not only praying but imploring that this Nation, this Republic, created in the New World, tried and tested by 150 years of experience, will hold itself steady as the boat passes through the rapids, so that civilization, clinging to her, may emerge triumphant in the centuries yet to come. Is it an hour, is it a time, notwithstanding the voice of condemnation that may be spent against Mr. Chief Justice Hughes or Mr. Justice Sutherland or Mr. Justice McReynolds, for us to destroy the one place where the lowliest citizen of the country may go and receive final, finite judgment?

It seems to me, Mr. President, that it is not a question of whether I am a Democrat or a Republican; it is not a question of whether other Senators are Republicans or Democrats; the question is, Does the world call on America? I say the world today calls on America, as it has done before; it is calling on America to hold fast so as to sustain the hope burning in the hearts of hundreds of millions that America shall hold democracy safe and secure; demonstrate that, after all, it is a success, and that democracy will not turn upon itself and destroy itself in an hour when it is called upon to perform the greatest mission that it was ever called upon to perform.

Mr. President, I am about to conclude. It is Saturday afternoon. I regret to have held the Senate of the United States so long. There are many phases of this question, and I have only touched upon a few. I conclude by saying that I am going along with my President as he uttered his thought to the people whose votes he sought. I am going to stay with the conviction that calls upon me to say to my people in Nevada that there shall be no change in the Supreme Court. I am going to stand on my party platform that prompted me and my party leadership to say to my people in the West that the idea of a change in the Supreme Court other than by a constitutional amendment was absurd. I am going along with my leader, the chairman of the Judiciary Committee, when in June, prior to the election, he delivered one of the most magnificent speeches ever delivered on the floor of the Senate, in which he denounced the idea that any such thing as a change in the Supreme Court was contemplated. Does anyone doubt that? I am sure the Senator from Arizona does not.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. McCARRAN. I yield for a question. I am in a position where I cannot yield for more than that.

Mr. ASHURST. A question would not illuminate.

Mr. McCARRAN. I am sorry I cannot yield for more than a question, because I should like to have the assistance of the able Senator from Arizona. I know what he would say. He would say, in his usual way, something beautiful, something wonderful, something oratorical, and something that would gleam as a gem in the midst of my poor effort.

Mr. ASHURST. After that, the Senator ought to allow me to verify the prediction he has made.

Mr. McCARRAN. I should love to allow the Senator to do so, if I might.

Mr. ASHURST. The Senator would not be taken off the floor.

Mr. McCARRAN. I do not know as to that. The Chair has ruled that I am the judge of my destiny [laughter], although the Chair smiles now, and I love to see that smile, because when the Chair smiles in that way, it may betoken that he might not rule so rigidly.

Mr. ASHURST. I thank the Senator.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, it has been suggested to me that such a splendid opportunity should not be allowed to pass, and that I might ask for unanimous consent to allow the Senator from Arizona to interrupt me without taking me off the floor. I do not want the leader to think that this means a protracted discussion.

Mr. ASHURST. I will occupy but 3 minutes.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I shall make no objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Nevada ask unanimous consent that the Senator from Arizona be allowed to make a response to his statement, without the Senator from Nevada losing the floor?

Mr. McCARRAN. I ask unanimous consent that that may be done.

Mr. CONNALLY. And without its being counted as another speech?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If the Senator does not lose the floor, it could not be counted as another speech. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Nevada? The Chair hears none.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, about 16 years ago a distinguished author was preparing a book which was later issued anonymously under the title of "Mirrors of Downing Street." Although the book was published anonymously, a member of Parliament pierced or invaded that anonymity, went to the author, shook a minatory finger, and said: "If in that book you are soon going to publish and which you are to call the 'Mirrors of Downing Street' you deal with me as I am told you are going to deal with some public men in England, I will sue you under our law, and, if our law permitted, I would challenge you to a duel." The author said to the Member of Parliament, "Do not worry; you are not of sufficient importance even to be criticized."

I am flattered that I have risen to such importance as to be noticed or criticized by my able friend who serves so well on the Committee on the Judiciary. I have just read that a very distinguished gentleman, Hon. Al Smith, has completed a tour of Europe and that he was in Ireland during the time an election was being held there.

Mr. Smith is reported to have stated it as his opinion—and he is a judge of eloquence—that the best oratory, the real oratory of the world, is now to be found in Ireland, and that, however much we may suspect or fear "canned" speeches, the Irishmen in America will see to it that the art of oratory shall not cease to exist here but shall be maintained in its pristine glory. I could not conclude without saying that I have listened to the able Senator from Nevada, who, although not born in Ireland, having been born in my native State, Nevada, has undoubtedly had his lips touched with the Promethean fire.

I once studied shorthand and was a "ham" shorthand reporter. The first sentence I had to write was.

He thrusts his fists against the posts.
And still insists he sees some ghosts.

With all his oratory, my able friend from Nevada simply "thrusts his fists against the posts, and still insists he sees some ghosts." [Laughter.]

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, I knew we would listen to a gem, and I knew what the Senator from Arizona would say would really be the crowning part of my speech, because whenever the Senator takes his place on the floor of the Senate something beautiful falls from his lips as well as sometimes something founded in fancy, as in this intsance. [Laughter.]

Mr. ASHURST. I thank the Senator, just the same.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, concluding, I wish to say that mine is not a coveted position. To go against the leadership of one's party is not a thing that one desires to do; but there is something more than following party, because the years that roll on my shoulders bring me to a realization that I must soon turn over what interest I have in the affairs of my Government to a little boy who takes my name, just as the sons of other Senators are coming on to manhood. They should know and realize that those of us who have the interest of our country at heart chose to hand down to them the only heritage that a poor man can give to his son, and that is the heritage of individual human liberty under an organized form of government. This organized democracy under a written Constitution has held its place for a century and a half. It has weathered the gales of war and the menace of drought. It has seen men come and go, but, seeing them and knowing them, it still holds a prophecy for the future, and that prophecy can only come to realization if we continue with the triform of government, each branch independent of the other, yet coordinate, coextensive, and coexistent.

Mr. President, in pausing now, I pause not because the fight is over. The fight has just begun.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. BURKE. Day before yesterday the President pro tempore, as set forth on page 6922 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, when the Senator from Indiana [Mr. MINTON] yielded the floor, said:

The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY] to the amendment in the nature of a substitute.

Yesterday a query was propounded to the then occupant of the chair as to what was the question before the Senate, and, on page 6981 of the RECORD, the then occupant of the chair ruled:

The Chair will rule that the committee amendment is before the Senate.

May we have that doubt resolved so as to know exactly what is the question before the Senate?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The former occupant of the chair was right in his decision that an amendment to the matter moved to be stricken out takes precedence over a motion to amend the text of the matter proposed to be substituted in lieu of the matter to be stricken out. Such decision is in accordance with rule XVIII. In part, the rule states:

But pending a motion to strike out and insert, the part to be stricken out and the part to be inserted shall each be regarded for the purpose of amendment as a question; and motions to amend the part to be stricken out shall have precedence.

The occupant of the chair who made the former ruling, while he was correct as to the rule, was not accurately advised as to the facts. There has been no committee amendment offered and none is pending. While the original bill was in the Committee on the Judiciary two minor amendments were made without objection. Subsequent thereto the committee voted against the approval of the entire bill, including such two amendments. The committee then, on motion, duly carried, reported such bill to the calendar adversely and with the recommendation that it do not pass. Such report includes, of course, the adverse report on the amendments and everything in the original bill. Therefore, there are no committee amendments recommended to the original bill.

When there is a favorable report upon a bill, including committee amendments, such committee amendments are generally first acted upon, as it is the advisable procedure. This is generally accomplished by the Senator having in charge such bill asking unanimous consent that committee amendments be first considered before general amendments are offered. This request is universally agreed to. If, however, there were objections, then the Senator in charge of the bill could move that committee amendments be first considered; and if the motion were adopted, they would be considered first.

None of these steps have been taken. There are no committee amendments pending before the Senate, and only an adverse report against the whole bill as amended in the committee. If any Senator sees fit to offer an amendment to the text of the original bill, as pending on the calendar, whether it be the so-called committee amendments or other amendments, then such amendments will take precedence over the pending amendment of the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY] under the rule, a part of which has just been quoted. Until such action is taken, however, there is nothing pending before the Senate except the amendment offered by the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY] to the amendment in the nature of a substitute.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, there being no other Senator ready at this moment to proceed, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States, submitting sundry nominations, which were referred to the appropriate committees.

(For nominations this day received, see the end of Senate proceedings.)

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. WALSH, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, reported favorably the nominations of sundry officers for promotion, and sundry citizens for appointment as officers, in the Marine Corps.

Mr. HARRISON, from the Committee on Finance, reported favorably the following nominations:

John J. Kennedy, of Biloxi, Miss., to be comptroller of customs in customs collection district no. 20, with headquarters at New Orleans, La. (reappointment); and

A. Manuel Fox, of New York, to be a member of the United States Tariff Commission for the remainder of the term expiring June 16, 1942, vice Robert Lincoln O'Brien, resigned.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reports will be placed on the Executive Calendar. If there be no further reports of committees, the clerk will state the nominations on the calendar.

IN THE ARMY

The Chief Clerk read the nomination of Capt. Robert Jones Moulton for transfer to the Quartermaster Corps.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

The Chief Clerk read the nomination of First Lt. James Leo Dalton, 2d, for transfer to the Infantry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

That completes the Executive Calendar.

The Senate resumed legislative session.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. KING. Mr. President, in pursuance of law and the action of the Vice President, the Commission created to consider the matter of an airport for the District of Columbia has completed its labors and its report is ready for submission. The law provides that the report, when it shall have been printed, shall be presented to the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House. The report is now in the hands of the President pro tempore. It occurred to me perhaps it ought to be laid down and any inhibition of secrecy removed, so it might become public.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Utah?

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, what is the request now being made by the Senator from Utah?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Utah will please restate his request.

Mr. KING. I suggested that under the law which created the Airport Commission that Commission, when it had concluded its labors, was to report to the President of the Senate and to the Speaker of the House. The Commission concluded its labors yesterday and, pursuant to the instructions given me as chairman of the Commission, I have handed to the President pro tempore in open session the report of the Commission. It occurs to me, as the report pertains to the District of Columbia and as the people are greatly interested in it and also in the findings of the Commission, that it should be made public.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will state that the act on its face provides that the report of the Commission shall be submitted to the President of the United States, the President of the Senate, and the Speaker of the House. The President pro tempore holds in his hand the report of the Commission and under authority of that act is the agent of the Senate in that regard. Therefore the Senate may take such action as it sees fit.

The Senator from Utah asks unanimous consent that the Presiding Office lay the report before the Senate. Is there objection?

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, objection was made earlier today even to the introduction of a bill by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. POPE]. This is in the nature of a transaction of business. If we are going to transact any business, we must transact all business. In view of that situation I shall object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is heard.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an article by Jesse H. Jones entitled "Billions Out and Billions Back", published recently in the Saturday Evening Post.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Texas?

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, I shall have to object because of the situation that has developed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is heard.

RECESS

Mr. ROBINSON. I move, under the order entered earlier in the day, that the Senate take a recess until 12 o'clock noon on Monday next.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 2 o'clock and 19 minutes p. m.) the Senate, under the order previously entered, took a recess until Monday, July 12, 1937, at 12 o'clock meridian.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, with the accompanying documents, referred to the Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs, as follows:

To the Congress of the United States:

As required by section 2 (a) (11) of the act of Congress approved March 24, 1934, entitled "An act to provide for the complete independence of the Philippine Islands, to provide for the adoption of a constitution and a form of government for the Philippine Islands, and for other purposes", I transmit herewith copies of Commonwealth Acts Nos. 231 and 232, enacted by the First National Assembly of the Philippines during its special session, from October 19, 1936, to October 30, 1936.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, July 12, 1937.

REPORT OF UNITED STATES HIGH COMMISSIONER TO THE PHILIPPINES

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs, as follows:

To the Congress of the United States:

As required by section 7 (4) of the act of Congress approved March 24, 1934, entitled "An act to provide for the complete independence of the Philippine Islands, to provide for the adoption of a constitution and a form of government for the Philippine Islands, and for other purposes", I transmit herewith, for the information of the Congress, the first report of the United States High Commissioner to the Philippine Islands covering the period from November 15, 1935, to December 31, 1936.

I concur in the recommendation of the Secretary of War that this report be printed as a Congressional document.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, July 12, 1937.

[NOTE.—Report accompanied similar message to the House of Representatives.]

PETITIONS

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate resolutions adopted by Local No. 3, American Radio Telegraphists Association; Local No. 97, Marine Engineers' Beneficial Association; and Sausage Makers' Union, No. 203, of the Amalgamated Meat Cutters and Butcher Workmen of North America, all in the State of California, favoring the completion of the present W. P. A. program without personnel reductions and the making of further appropriations therefor when current appropriations become exhausted, which were ordered to lie on the table.

ENROLLED BILLS PRESENTED

Mrs. CARAWAY, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that on July 9, 1937, that committee presented to the President of the United States the following enrolled bills:

S. 114. An act for the relief of Mildred Moore;

S. 1188. An act for the relief of J. E. Sammons;
S. 1257. An act for the relief of James H. Smith;
S. 1934. An act for the relief of Halle D. McCullough; and
S. 2266. An act for the relief of John A. Ensor.

BILLS INTRODUCED

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. BARKLEY:

A bill (S. 2766) granting a pension to George Dean; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. MINTON:

A bill (S. 2767) granting a pension to Charity Cooper; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. BAILEY:

A bill (S. 2768) authorizing the Comptroller General to adjust and settle the claim of Leo L. Harrison; and

A bill (S. 2769) authorizing the Comptroller General to adjust and settle the claim of Irvin H. Johnson; to the Committee on Claims.

AMENDMENT TO THIRD DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. ASHURST (for Mr. HAYDEN) submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by Mr. HAYDEN to the third deficiency appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed, as follows:

At the proper place in the bill, to insert the following:

"PUBLIC HEALTH SERVICE

"For expenditure by the Public Health Service for an investigation of diseases of man and conditions influencing the propagation and spread thereof among transients in the United States, as authorized by section 1 of the act approved August 14, 1912 (37 Stat. 309) and section 603 (a) of the Social Security Act (49 Stat. 635), $25,000: Provided, That such funds may be used for the employment of the necessary clerical and other assistance without regard to the civil-service laws and the Classification Act of 1923, as amended: And provided further, That the Surgeon General of the Public Health Service shall report the findings of such investigation to Congress together with his recommendations as to the enactment of legislation to prevent the spread and decrease the incidence of such diseases."

GOLDENBERG FURNITURE CO.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1849) for the relief of the Goldenberg Furniture Co., which was, on page 1, line 7, to strike out "represents" and insert "shall be in full satisfaction of its claim against the United States for."

Mr. KING. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. KING. Would consideration of the amendment of the House which has just been laid before the Senate be considered the transaction of new business during the present legislative day, or under the rule is it permissible to consider it?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. This is a privileged matter. Without objection, the amendment of the House is concurred in.

ALEXANDER E. KOVNER

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1048) for the relief of Alexander E. Kovner, which were, on page 1, line 6, to strike out "Seattle, Wash." and insert "San Francisco, Calif.", and on the same page, line 12, to strike out "primarily."

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I move that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

WILLIAM K. RICHARDSON

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 30) for the relief of William K. Richardson, which was, on page 4, line 3, to strike out "law" and insert "section 179 of the Judicial Code."

Mr. KING. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. KING. Is this a privileged matter?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is.

Mr. CAPPER. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

PARITY PRICES FOR MAJOR AGRICULTURAL COMMODITIES

Mr. POPE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Idaho.

Mr. POPE. Mr. President, for several days I have attempted to introduce a farm bill in the Senate, but objection has been made each time. This morning I desire, in a very few minutes, to give the reasons why I desire to introduce that bill.

The Senator from Kansas [Mr. MCGILL] and I have joined, or will join, in the introduction of the bill, which has been referred to as the new Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1937, when we have an opportunity to introduce it. Informal hearings have been held by the Agriculture Committees of both Houses on the measure. A bill in substantially the same form has been introduced in the other House. My reason for joining in the introduction of this measure in the Senate is that it is designed to deal with a problem which is likely to arise in serious form in the year 1938 and following years.

It is estimated that this year's wheat crop will be about 875,000,000 bushels——

Mr. MCNARY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. MCNARY. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. MCNARY. The Senator from Idaho is either speaking on the amendment pending to the bill before the Senate, in which event his remarks must be charged as one address during the legislative day, or he must be speaking by unanimous consent. May I be informed as to that?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Idaho is speaking under the rules and is making one speech on the pending amendment at the present time.

Mr. MCNARY. I think the Senator should understand that this speech will be charged against him, and that he can make only one more speech on the proposal now before the Senate.

Mr. POPE. I understand that, and one more speech will be sufficient for me. [Laughter.]

Mr. President, as I have stated, it is estimated that this year's wheat crop will be about 875,000,000 bushels, or 240,000,000 bushels more than our domestic consumption. The figure used to represent our domestic consumption is 635,000,000 bushels. The amount of wheat exported during the last few years has been very small—roughly, 25,000,000 to 40,000,000 bushels. We used to regard the export market for wheat as around 160,000,000 bushels a year. It is not likely that the amount of wheat to be exported within the next few years will be much larger than that of the last few years. All this means that there will probably be an unusable surplus of about 200,000,000 bushels at the end of this year. If a similar surplus should be created next year, it can be readily seen that we will face the same problem we faced in 1932, when there was a surplus of 394,000,000 bushels. The effect of such a surplus upon the price of wheat might well be disastrous.

It is now high time that we begin the consideration of that problem. The 394,000,000-bushel surplus was reduced in two ways: First, by the Agricultural Adjustment Act, with its production-control devices; and second, by the unusual droughts during the last 3 years. The surplus of wheat is now less than a hundred million bushels. The Agricultural Adjustment Act is, of course, no longer effective, because of a Supreme Court decision. The Soil Conservation Act contains certain production-control provisions, but the whole effect of the Soil Conservation Act is to build up the soil, thereby naturally increasing the production of farm commodities on less acreage.

This year's production clearly indicates that the Soil Conservation Act will not adequately control the accumulation of surplus farm commodities.

It is not claimed that this bill is a complete answer to the question of surpluses, but it is a serious effort to answer the question, using the experience of the last several years in the method of dealing with the problem.

There is one new feature in this bill not contained in the House bill and not contained in any previous drafts of the measure. That is the provision for a referendum of all producers of a given commodity before putting into effect the marketing-quota provisions contained in the bill. These provisions as to marketing quotas are the only mandatory provisions in the bill, and the sponsors of this bill in the Senate believe it would be wise and democratic to permit the growers themselves to determine whether or not the marketing-quota provisions shall become effective.

I again ask unanimous consent to introduce the bill and to offer an explanatory statement of it, to be inserted in the RECORD as a part of my remarks. The statement has been carefully prepared and will be of service to those who are interested in the problem outlined and in the bill which seeks to deal with that problem.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is heard.

APPROPRIATION FOR CIVIL ACTIVITIES OF WAR DEPARTMENT

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I rise to ask the Chair about a privileged matter. It relates to the conference report on the War Department civil-activities bill.

It is important that action be taken, for the reason that on Wednesday next the time will expire when the continuing resolution to take care of the expenses of the various activities of the War Department involved in the bill will be effective.

I may say, if I am permitted to do so under the parliamentary situation—am I privileged to make a statement?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator may make a statement in connection with the amendment of the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY] to the amendment in the nature of a substitute.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. COPELAND. Is there no way that this privileged matter may be presented to the Senate without disturbing the pending business or being charged to the discussion of that matter?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator can move the consideration of the privileged matter, which motion is not debatable.

Mr. COPELAND. But, if I may continue propounding a parliamentary question, I would be no better off if such a motion were adopted, because that would involve merely the acceptance of the report, would it not? Would I not still be under the necessity of a further motion to agree to the amendments of the House in order that the bill might become effective, and, of course, that motion would be debatable?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That motion would be debatable.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. COPELAND. I have the answer to my parliamentary inquiry and I yield the floor.

Mr. ROBINSON. I should like to ask the Senator if he would consent to limitation of debate on the conference report?

Mr. COPELAND. If I may answer the question, I should be willing to ask for unanimous consent that the conference report be dealt with without debate. I do not see why it should be debated. There is nothing debatable in the matter involved in the conference report, it seems to me.

Mr. ROBINSON. I do not understand there is, but, anticipating that there might be prolonged debate, I will ask unanimous consent, with the Senator's approval, that the conference report be proceeded with and that at not later than the hour of 2 o'clock the Senate proceed to vote on its adoption.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I find it necessary to object to that request.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made to the request.

PARITY PRICES FOR MAJOR AGRICULTURAL COMMODITIES

Mr. McGILL. Mr. President, the bill which the Senator from Idaho [Mr. POPE] and I are seeking to introduce is one pertaining to an agricultural program in addition to the ones now being carried on. The bill is in most of its parts a measure containing the provisions of proposed legislation recently briefly outlined in hearings before the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry by certain farm organization representatives and was worked out by them, as I am advised, in conjunction with representatives of the Department of Agriculture.

The Senator from Idaho and I have been requested to introduce the measure in the Senate and seek to do so in order to insure its careful study and consideration by the Members of this body. The Senator from Idaho and I have added some provisions to the measure which were not contained in the committee print considered by the Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, and have made some additional changes. The additions made by us chiefly have to do with the administration of the program and with providing for the holding of a referendum each year among the producers of a commodity to determine whether the program shall go into effect as regards such commodity.

Under the proposed referendum if for any year more than one-third of the producers of a given commodity should vote against the program, then for that year it would not be made effective as to such commodity. Should two-thirds or more of the producers of such commodity at such referendum vote in favor of the program, the program for such year would then be made effective as to such commodity.

It has been our purpose to frame the measure so that when the program is made effective as to any commodity, its control and administration shall be, insofar as is possible, in the hands of the farmers or producers. We believe such provisions are desirable and would make the program a cooperative one among the producers and render it more certain of accomplishing the ends for which it is designed.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. McGILL. I can yield only for a question.

Mr. WHEELER. The Senator is very anxious to have his bill introduced, I understand.

Mr. McGILL. That would be indicated by the course of my remarks.

Mr. WHEELER. Would the Senator move that the Senate adjourn tonight so we could have a morning hour tomorrow?

Mr. McGILL. I do not yield for that purpose.

Mr. WHEELER. The Senator yielded for a question and I am asking if he would move an adjournment of the Senate this evening.

Mr. McGILL. I only yielded for one question. [Laughter.]

In other words, the desirability of the program would be a question to be determined by the farmers. It is our hope that hearings may be held on the measure and that representatives of all farm groups may be heard, after which doubtless it will be found that additional changes will be desirable.

It is my view that at this time the present Soil Conservation Act is generally operating satisfactorily among the producers and under present conditions is a good agricultural program. However, good crops for a short period would doubtless create a large surplusage in major commodities and, if nothing is done to deal with such a situation, such a surplusage would likely bring to pass depressed prices to a degree ruinous to agriculture. Congress should, in my judgment, if such condition arises, be prepared to enact a well-considered measure to deal with such a situation. I believe such a condition is probable at an early period with regard to some of the major crops but improbable during the next marketing period.

We are seeking to introduce the bill with the feeling that careful study and consideration should be given to its various provisions by the Members of this body, the House of Representatives, and by the committees to which it would be referred and in the hope that appropriate action be had with reference to the subject to which it applies.

I sincerely hope, Mr. President, that the senior Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] will withdraw his objection to the introduction of this bill on this occasion.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McGILL. I yield to the Senator from Alabama for a question.

Mr. BLACK. I desire to ask the Senator if it is his purpose, if this bill is introduced, to ask for hearings before the Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry?

Mr. McGILL. That is what we propose to do.

Mr. BLACK. Is it the Senator's desire to have such hearings in order that we may attempt to have a farm bill passed for the benefit of the American farmer at the present session before the Congress adjourns?

Mr. McGILL. That is correct.

Mr. BLACK. And if the bill is introduced, and objections are not made by individual Senators to its introduction, so that we may have the hearings, is it the Senator's hope and belief that the hearings may result in doing that which we have promised to do—namely, to give the farmers legislation at this session of Congress?

Mr. McGILL. In response to the Senator from Alabama, I may say that it is my view that if the bill is introduced at this time hearings will be asked for before the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, and that it is our desire to have representatives of the various farm organizations of the country appear before the committee, with any suggestions they may have, in order that we may enact some measure which will look to taking care of situations such as likely will occur in the event of large surpluses in major agricultural commodities.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator another question? Has he any assurance that the matter will be taken up before the Agricultural Committee? And would the Senator be willing to join me and others in insisting that a Senate resolution be adopted, if necessary, to require that hearings be held at the earliest possible moment?

Mr. McGILL. I am very hopeful that hearings would be held, and certainly would join in such a resolution if it were necessary. I cannot conceive of its becoming necessary.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. McGILL. I yield for a question.

Mr. WHEELER. I repeat my question: Will the Senator vote to adjourn tonight, so that we may have a morning hour tomorrow, in order that he may introduce this very important bill on behalf of the farmers of the country?

Mr. McGILL. It is unnecessary that I directly answer the question of the Senator from Montana or that the Senate adjourn in order to permit the introduction of this measure. If there is no objection, the measure may now be introduced. That is what we are seeking to do; and it occurs to me that those who are in favor of enacting adequate legislation on behalf of the farmers of the country should have no objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. McGILL]?

Mr. KING. I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made.

REORGANIZATION OF FEDERAL JUDICIARY

The Senate resumed consideration of the bill (S. 1392) to reorganize the judicial branch of the Government.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY] to the amendment in the nature of a substitute.

A RIGOROUS THROTTLE ON DEBATE

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, a moment ago, when the Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND] rose to submit a privileged motion to the Senate, and the majority leader asked unanimous consent that the conference report upon the Army appropriation bill be considered without debate, I felt called upon to make objection.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Wyoming yield to the Senator from Arkansas for a question?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. For a question; yes.

Mr. ROBINSON. The Senator understands, of course, that I did not suggest that the conference report be disposed of without debate? The Senator understands, of course, that I requested a limitation on debate which under the circumstances I thought was reasonable?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. The Senator is correct. The point I wish to make, however, is exactly the same. I made the objection to the unanimous-consent request for a limitation upon debate upon this question for the purpose of pointing out the very extraordinary rule under which the Senate now is operating.

It will be recalled that there are 76 Democrats sitting in the Senate out of a total membership of 96. It will be recalled by every Member of this body that the customary rule of procedure is for Senators to rise in their places, when any subject is under discussion, to interrupt one another to discuss at length and with full liberty every phase of any question that may be before them. That rule now is abandoned; and when this amendment in the nature of a substitute, presented by the distinguished Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON], was laid down upon the desk of the Senate, in the very same moment that he laid it down he served notice upon us that there would be a change of procedure and that an effort would be made to drive this bill through to final consideration without giving Senators an opportunity to discuss the measure in all its details fully and frankly, as we discuss every other measure.

That announcement was made for the purpose, which I am afraid the country at large does not understand, of bringing into play a rule of the Senate which prescribes that no Senator may speak more than twice upon one day. The present occupant of the chair, when the majority leader made that opening statement, served notice upon the Senate that for the purposes of this bill a day would not be a calendar day but would be a legislative day.

It seems to me, Mr. President, it is important that the people of the country, the farmers for whom the Senator from Idaho and the Senator from Kansas are speaking, and all the employees of the War Department, and all the members of the Army, should know what the difference is between a legislative day and a calendar day.

The majority leader of the Senate has served notice upon us that we shall not adjourn this session until the substitute is disposed of. Why? In order that he may invoke the rule announced by the present occupant of the Chair, that no

Member of the Senate may speak more than twice on a legislative day. This legislative day may be 1 month long, or 2 months long, or 3 months long; but, recessing night after night, it will then be possible by enforcing this rule upon the Members of this body—this body in which we are taught to believe that freedom of speech exists—to prevent a Senator from making more than two speeches in a calendar month.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senator from Wyoming pardon the Chair for a second? The Chair thinks——

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Am I to understand that the Senator from Nevada is now speaking upon the amendment?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair asked the Senator from Wyoming if he would pardon the occupant of the chair, because the Senator has misquoted the ruling of the Chair.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I am very fearful of the ruling of the Chair. If it may be understood that I am yielding for a question, I shall be very happy to yield for that purpose.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair withdraws any suggestion.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I shall be very happy to yield for a question.

Mr. ROBINSON. Does not the Senator from Wyoming understand that he has misquoted the rule of the Senate and the ruling of the Chair?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Is the Senator asking me a question?

Mr. ROBINSON. Yes; I am asking a question. Does not the Senator know that the rule which he quoted in part is to the effect that no Senator shall speak more than twice on the same subject on the same day?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Oh, yes, indeed. If I did not say that, that is what I meant to say.

Mr. ROBINSON. The Senator knows he did not say it in that way.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Certainly that is what I meant to say.

Mr. ROBINSON. Does not the Senator also realize that there is nothing unreasonable in that rule, particularly in view of the fact that when a Senator takes the floor to make either one of those speeches he may speak as long as he pleases on any subject he chooses, and nobody but Almighty God can interfere with him over his objection? Does not the Senator realize that?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I will say to the Senator from Arkansas that I do not realize anything of the kind. There is absolutely nothing unreasonable about the manner in which the debate in the Senate has been conducted, lo, these many months. This session assembled in January 1937. Here we are in the middle of July 1937, and this "reasonable" rule to which the Senator from Arkansas refers has never before been invoked. Here, for the first time, it is raised.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President——

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I am not yielding at the moment.

RESPONSIBILITY FOR DELAY RESTS ON LEADER

Mr. President, I want the country to realize that the responsibility for delay in the consideration of any measure here rests absolutely upon the desk of the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON], and nowhere else. All that it is necessary to do at the conclusion of my remarks this afternoon is for the Senator from Arkansas to rise in his place and say, "I move that the Senate adjourn until noon tomorrow", and at 12 o'clock noon tomorrow the Senator from Idaho may present his bill, the Senator from Kansas may present his bill, and for 2 hours the Senate may transact any business whatsoever.

Mr. McGILL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I shall be happy to yield for a question.

Mr. McGILL. If no objection were made by any Senator, would it not be possible to introduce the measure sought to be introduced by the Senator from Idaho and myself?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Of course it would be possible to do so, Mr. President; but what the Senator is asking us to do is to accept for ourselves a limitation upon debate, and allow those who are employing the tactics of the steam roller to have complete freedom on the matters in which they are interested.

Mr. McGILL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for another question?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Certainly.

Mr. McGILL. Does not the Senator think two speeches by each of the opponents of the bill on each question connected with the measure would be sufficient to enable them to express their views?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I think much less than two speeches, particularly if Senators who are supporting the bill, without explaining it, would dare to rise here without threatening us and argue the points out.

Mr. McGILL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I gladly yield for a question.

Mr. McGILL. Is the Senator fearing that the supporters of the bill will not explain it, or have not explained it?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, before the day is through I shall demonstrate to the satisfaction of this body and to the satisfaction of the country that the proponents of the bill have not explained it. I venture more, that those who are sponsors for the bill do not know what is in the bill. I venture the statement that the majority leader, the distinguished Senator from Arkansas, who presented the substitute for the bill that was abandoned by those who introduced it, does not know the provisions of this bill.

Mr. President, the measure which we are about to discuss is one of the most revolutionary measures ever presented to the Senate of the United States. Yet it is laid here upon our desks without a single word of explanation on the part of any one of the proponents.

Now let me say to the Senator from New York, who is in charge of the conference report on a very important bill, if I understand the rules aright, a motion to take up that conference report is a privileged motion and may be presented without debate. It will not take any Senator off the floor. If I understand the rule correctly, the Senator from New York could rise in his place and move to take up the conference report, whereupon the occupant of the chair will be under obligation, under the rules of this body, to put the question, and the question would be decided without debate. Whereupon the conference report would be before the body. I have no objection to it, and I venture to say that there would be no debate upon it, and that it would not be necessary to call for any limitation of debate.

I objected a moment ago merely that I might have the opportunity of pointing out the conditions under which we are operating, to call attention to the fact that Democratic leadership of this body is endeavoring to throttle debate upon one of the most fundamental issues that has been presented to the Senate of the United States in two generations; and the effort is being made to lead the country to believe that all the business of the Senate is being stopped, that all the business of the country is being held up, by these vicious filibusters who are opposed to the Court bill, whereas the fact is that the majority leadership is itself responsible for the condition that exists.

NO FILIBUSTER IN PROGRESS

Mr. President, there has been no filibuster upon this measure. The only talk about filibuster upon this floor has proceeded from the mouth of the majority leader, the leader of the Democratic Party in the Senate, in threats that he had the votes to pass the bill, and that he would pass it without debate, or with only that debate which could be carried on by Senators who are compelled to watch every question that is propounded to them lest they be taken off the floor in the midst of their discussion.

Is that the rule for a democratic assembly? Is that the rule for an American assembly? Is that the rule under which the people of the United States imagine their business is being conducted?

Ah, Mr. President, it is typical of the measure which is being presented to us. Force to the judiciary! Force to the Senate! We will make the judiciary dependent upon the Executive arm of the Government; we will make the Senate of the United States dependent upon the Executive arm of the Government; we who have taken the oath to support the Constitution of the United States, which describes three coordinate branches of the Government, the legislative, the executive, and the judicial.

Mr. POPE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Does the Senator desire to make a speech upon his bill or upon the pending bill? Does the Senator desire to explain the measure that is before us?

Mr. POPE. I desire to ask the Senator a question.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Does the question have anything to do with the measure before us?

Mr. POPE. Yes.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Very well.

Mr. POPE. May I ask the Senator when the opponents of this proposal decided to object to all business under unanimous consent?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, so far as I know there has never been any such decision. I have entered into no such agreement; but I have desired to point out to the country what is being done here.

Mr. POPE. May I ask the Senator one more question?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Certainly.

Mr. POPE. Is the Senator familiar with the RECORD of July 10, when the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MALONEY] asked and obtained unanimous consent to introduce into the RECORD a speech, and on the same date the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] asked and obtained unanimous consent to introduce a resolution of his, and a few moments after that I requested unanimous consent to introduce a farm bill, which was objected to, and has been objected to ever since? Can the Senator explain the reason for that situation?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I am not familiar with the RECORD of July 10, and I do not know what the explanation of that incident may be; but I do know that there probably will be no objection whatsoever, if once we get an understanding that we may conduct this debate in a reasonable manner, drawing out all the various phases of this most important question, and that when the day is done we may adjourn until tomorrow, and have our 2 hours in the morning in which to indulge in any business whatsoever, without applying the gag rule to those who are opposed to this measure.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I am very glad to.

Mr. WHEELER. The Senator knows, does he not, that when the Democratic leader invoked the very unusual rule which he did invoke, when I was asking questions, and had a colloquy with the Senator from Kentucky, it was then, and only then, when he announced what he was going to do, how we would not be permitted to speak, that I then said that, so far as I was concerned, I would object to any legislative business being done?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. It seems that I recall that statement upon the part of the Senator from Montana.

Mr. WHEELER. And the Senator knows, does he not, that this farm bill is being brought in for the purpose of trying to put the Senators who are opposed to the pending bill on the spot; but the Senator knows, does he not, that, so far as the country is concerned, they will not get away with it?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I am very certain the Senator is correct.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I yield.

Mr. BURKE. Am I to understand from what the Senator from Wyoming has stated that under the rule announced by the majority leader this is still July 6?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. It may be July 4 for all I know. It may be the anniversary of the Declaration of Independence; but the Senator from Arkansas is not operating under that rule. [Laughter.]

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I yield.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair admonishes the occupants of the galleries that there can be no laughing, talking, or other manifestations in the galleries. If there are, the Chair will have to close the galleries.

Mr. BURKE. The Senator having yielded, I will put my question in this way: This still being July 6, 1937, for our purposes here, would it not be well for the distinguished Senator from Idaho and the distinguished Senator from Kansas to explain to the farmers of the country that they do not need to worry, that their bill will be introduced on or about July 6, or immediately at the termination of July 6? [Laughter.]

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, that would be a very fine suggestion if it were not for the fact that when the legislative July 6 ends the next day will probably be the calendar September 17, the one hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the adoption of the Constitution of the United States, and then, perhaps, we will have some free speech.

Mr. POPE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I am glad to yield.

Mr. POPE. Since the statement of the Senator from Montana that he expected to object to the transaction of any business occurred on July 9, and the unanimous-consent agreements with reference to other matters, with reference to flood control on the Connecticut River, and the introduction of a speech into the RECORD, took place on the morning of the tenth, without objection, and then when an offer was made to introduce a farm bill, of benefit to the farmers of the country, objection was immediately made, I should be very much interested, if the Senator can give the explanation, in having him vouchsafe it at some time during his two speeches during this legislative day.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, let me say to the Senator from Idaho that I have no doubt the objection was made by the Senator from Montana for the same reason for which I made objection a moment ago to the consideration of the conference report, for the purpose of indicating the rule under which we are operating.

Now let me say just this to the Senator. What is the use of invoking the harsh rule against a filibuster before a filibuster has begun?

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to a question?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I am very glad to yield to my leader. [Laughter.]

Mr. ROBINSON. In that connection, if I do not take the Senator from the floor, which I would not wish to do——

Mr. O'MAHONEY. The Senator then is asking a question?

Mr. ROBINSON. I should like to state that he does me honor overmuch.

The Senator knows, does he not, that prior to the beginning of this debate it was announced in the press repeatedly from day to day that it was the purpose of those connected with the opposition to conduct a filibuster so as to prevent the Senate from ever——

Mr. O'MAHONEY. O Mr. President——

Mr. ROBINSON. Voting on this bill. Does not the Senator recall that?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Certainly, Mr. President, I have read many things in the newspapers that were not correct.

Mr. ROBINSON. Does not the Senator know that it was also reported that in private conferences held prior to bringing forward the bill in the Senate, he and others associated with him in the conduct of the opposition to the bill had entered into a solemn agreement that they would use all the time they could in order to prevent any action by the Senate; and does not the Senator know that on the occasion when I invoked the rule that has stood in the Senate for many, many years against one Senator speaking more than twice on the same subject in a single day, on that date for hours and hours Senators associated with him in the conduct of the opposition to this bill were rising on the floor and making speeches in the time of the Senator who had the floor, and that that was a process of aiding the filibuster?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President——

Mr. ROBINSON. And does not the Senator know that the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. LOGAN]——

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. How many questions may the Senator from Arkansas ask?

Mr. ROBINSON. I am asking a question.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. The Senator has asked several questions, and I wish to know how many he may ask without taking me off the floor.

Mr. ROBINSON. The Senator may stop me from asking a question if he knows he cannot answer me.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I can answer the Senator here or at any other place.

Mr. ROBINSON. Oh, well, here is the place to answer. [Laughter.]

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I will do it.

Mr. ROBINSON. We do not have to go outside to do it.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Not the Senator and I.

Mr. ROBINSON. Does not the——

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. President, I rise to a point of order. The Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] is not in order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Arkansas is asking a question with the permission of the Senator who has the floor.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I hope the President pro tempore will state the matter correctly. The Senator from Arkansas is asking a hundred questions with the permission of the Senator from Wyoming.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Wyoming may terminate the questions at any time he wishes to do so.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I am very happy to have the Senator ask me any questions.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. So long as the Senator from Wyoming permits the Senator from Arkansas to ask questions, the Senator from Arkansas is in order.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I should like to conclude——

Mr. O'MAHONEY. That is what I have been heartily hoping for.

Mr. ROBINSON. With the permission of my good friend the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON]—and ask the Senator from Wyoming to state whether he does not know that on the occasion when I invoked the rule, the filibuster was in progress; that an effort was being made to abuse the privilege of debate by interrupting and interfering with Senators who were undertaking to explain and to defend the bill; and does he now, in all seriousness——

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. President——

Mr. ROBINSON. In view of the many pages of the RECORD, insist that there was no justification for my position?

Mr. JOHNSON of California. I rise to make a point of order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. The Senator from Arkansas is not in order. He is not asking a question. He is making a speech and an argument. [Laughter in the galleries.]

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I respectfully submit that I did ask a question, and the fact that the Senator from Wyoming cannot answer it does not change the nature of the question.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. President——

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I will ask the Senator from California to take his seat for a moment. The questions of the Senator from Arkansas were asked with my full consent, and I am very happy to answer them.

Speaking for myself, Mr. President, let me say that I never participated in any conference, in the Senate or out of the Senate, in which I agreed to participate in any filibuster, in which I agreed at any time to talk at undue length to defeat this bill.

Mr. President, speaking for myself, I do not believe in filibusters. I believe Senators of the United States should be willing to take their responsibilities under their oaths in this body. As a member of the Judiciary Committee of the Senate, I took my responsibility when the question was presented to me in that committee, after having studiously refrained from making any announcement for 4 or 5 months. When the question was finally proposed, I took my responsibility and I took my stand. I am willing to have all the Senators take their stand, whether by speech or by vote. But before that time comes, Mr. President, I believe in all seriousness that this question should be fully debated, and that every dark recess of this measure which has been laid before the Senate by the Senator from Arkansas should be illuminated with the full light of publicity.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Pardon me for just a moment.

With respect to what transpired upon the day when the debate opened, I will grant you that I was one of those who took the floor to interrupt the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. HATCH] and the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. LOGAN]. I was moved to do that by resentment—resentment of the rule called down by the majority leader of this body before he or anybody else had explained the bill that he is asking us to vote upon without a full discussion.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I yield for a question.

Mr. WHEELER. Does not the Senator know that no Senator who was interrupting the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. LOGAN] was abusing the privilege; but, on the contrary, we were doing it with his full knowledge and with his consent, and not, as the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] said, for the purpose of attempting to filibuster at that time or at any other time?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I believe the Senator from Montana is absolutely correct. I know that I had the full consent of the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. HATCH] when I interrupted him. As a matter of fact, I know that my first interruption of the Senator from New Mexico was at his invitation, and I was confident that the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. LOGAN] had willingly acceded to my interruptions whenever I rose.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for a question?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I yield for a question to my distinguished friend from Kentucky.

Mr. BARKLEY. Would the Senator and his colleagues in opposition to this measure be willing to agree that we shall vote on the bill and all amendments thereto not later than September 17, which is the anniversary of the adoption of the Constitution of the United States?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I am not entering into any agreements, because I cannot speak on behalf of all the Members who are interested in opposing this bill. I do not yet know just how many there are, but I do know there are a great many more than the Senator has counted.

Mr. BARKLEY. Will the Senator permit another question? Would he himself, regardless of his colleagues, be willing that we vote not later than that date?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. When this measure has been discussed, I shall be perfectly willing to allow the matter to come to a vote.

Mr. BARKLEY. Will the Senator yield to me for another question?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I yield for a question.

Mr. BARKLEY. Does not the Senator think a discussion from now until the 17th of September will give ample opportunity for every Senator on both sides to explain not only the bill but his position?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Not if the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] and the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] continue to ask me to yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I have not taken much time of any Senator in asking him to yield. I do not want to take the Senator from his feet by what I am now saying.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I know the Senator will be careful not to do that.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I shall be glad to yield for a question.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Will the Senator please state, for the benefit of the rest of us, just when the opposition to this bill intends to start talking about the bill and stop talking about a lot of other things besides the bill?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, it is the proponents who have been talking about other things. First, I am talking about the rule under which we are operating, and my discussion of that subject has been prolonged by the questions of the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON], the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY], the Senator from Idaho [Mr. POPE], the Senator from Kansas [Mr. MCGILL], and now the Senator from Washington [Mr. SCHWELLENBACH]. [Laughter.]

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for another question?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I shall be very happy to do so.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Will the Senator be willing to agree that if we stop asking him questions he will start to discuss the bill?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I shall certainly discuss the bill, and when I start discussing the bill I hope the Senator will ask me some questions on the merits of the bill. [Laughter in the galleries.]

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for a question?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I yield to my distinguished colleague the Senator from Louisiana for a question.

Mr. OVERTON. Does not the Senator realize that while all Senators are very much interested in the pending bill and are giving it very earnest consideration, at the same time many Senators, and I hope all Senators, are very much interested and anxious that necessary and important functions of the Government be carried on? And, assuming that our majority leader has fallen into error in invoking the rule he has invoked, according to the view entertained by the Senator from Wyoming, does not the Senator think that that is no reason why another error should be committed; and does not the Senator think that so reasonable a request as a unanimous-consent request to consider a conference report on so important a measure within the limited time should be agreed to by the Senator from Wyoming and all other Senators?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I raised the objection to the report merely for the purpose of pointing out the situation. I afterward indicated to the Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND] that if I understood the rule correctly, he may bring up his conference report at any time without interfering with the discussion, or interfering with the Senator who happens to have the floor. My understanding is that the speech of the Senator having the floor at such a time would merely be suspended.

Mr. President, the point I desire to make is simply that the responsibility for preventing the ordinary operations of the Senate for the consideration of important measures lies not upon us who want to discuss this measure but upon those who desire to prevent discussion of the measure; and I am fully convinced, Mr. President, that if the Senate were permitted to debate this measure in the ordinary manner, in less than 2 weeks this proposal would be so blown out of the water that there would not be anybody upon the floor with enough courage to stand up and defend it.

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I yield for a question.

Mr. OVERTON. Then do I understand that the Senator will not urge any objection to the unanimous-consent request that has been made?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I shall make no further objection to the consideration of the privileged motion of the Senator from New York. I should like to have it considered.

A REVOLUTIONARY PROPOSAL

Mr. President, I said a moment ago that the measure which has been presented here is revolutionary in its aspects; that it is the most important measure that has been presented to this body in two generations; and yet when the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. LOGAN] arose to open the debate he uttered no word or syllable, not a single sentence, in explanation of the proposal.

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I will be very happy to yield for a question.

Mr. OVERTON. At the time I propounded the question to the Senator from Wyoming, which he so promptly and frankly answered, stating, as I understood him, that he would entertain no objection to the unanimous-consent proposal that had been submitted by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON], the Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND], who is in charge of the conference report, was temporarily absent from the Chamber. Now that I notice his return, may I request the Senator from Wyoming to make the statement to the Senator from New York that he made to me in response to my question, in order that the conference report may be disposed of?

YIELDS FOR WAR DEPARTMENT BILL

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I think I have made the statement two or three times that I raised the objection to the consideration of the privileged question solely for the purpose of developing the extraordinary conditions under which we are operating, and that, so far as I am concerned, I have no objection whatsoever to the consideration of the conference report, with the understanding, of course, I will say, Mr. President, that I am correct in my interpretation of the parliamentary rule that the consideration of the conference report at this time would not deprive me of the floor. I make that as a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That was earlier the ruling of the Chair, and it is still the ruling of the Chair.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. So that if I should yield upon the request of the Senator from New York for the consideration of the conference report I would not be charged with having made one speech on the pending measure?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The proceeding on the pending bill would be suspended by that action, and, in effect, the speech of the Senator from Wyoming would also simply be suspended.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. If under those circumstances the Senator from New York desires to ask that his privileged motion be presented to the Senate, I shall have no objection.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, on the desk of the Presiding Officer is the conference report on the appropriation bill dealing with the civil activities of the War Department. I move the adoption of the conference report.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from New York.

Mr. MCNARY. Mr. President, I stated on Saturday, prior to the time when the recess was taken, that we must have one universal rule in the Senate applying to all orders of business. If unanimous consent is granted to proceed to the consideration of the conference report, then, of course, it would be before the Senate and subject to debate. Evidently it would be the transaction of business in the highest degree. I do not care to go into that further; but in the meantime, the Senator from Wyoming has the floor and is attempting to start a speech upon the measure now pending before the Senate. I think we should proceed orderly, at this time particularly, and, reserving the right further to act definitely and finally, I shall object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Oregon objects.

CENTRALIZED JUSTICE THE ISSUE

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I was remarking that the pending measure in the nature of a substitute has been presented to this body without an explanation. I think it ought to be made clear to the Senate and to the country that we are not discussing a personal issue; we are discussing a system for the reorganization of the judiciary of the United States. The issue before this body is not the election of 1940, as some Senators seem to imagine; the issue before this body is not the New Deal, as some Senators would like to have the country believe; the issue before this body is not the record of Franklin D. Roosevelt, as some Senators would like us to believe. The issue before this body is whether or not we are going to adopt a system for the judiciary of the United States vastly different from anything which has ever existed in the history of our Government.

We are rapidly approaching the one hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the adoption of the Constitution of the United States under which our judicial system was established; and we are now asked to consider a bill which, if enacted, would revolutionize that system. The measure before us today and which will be before us tomorrow and many a day hence, I gather from the attitude of Senators, should not be entitled "A bill to reform the judiciary", as it is sometimes called in the public press; it should be called a bill to centralize the administration of justice and to give the central establishment at Washington greater control over the local administration of justice than it has ever had in this democracy.

Do we desire to centralize the administration of justice? Presidents come and Presidents go. The present occupant of the White House will not always occupy that distinguished position with the great ability and charm with which he now occupies it. Some other President will succeed him, and when he does, if this bill should become a law, it would apply to him as well as to the present occupant of the White House.

So I say, Mr. President, this is not a personal issue; this is not a question of whether or not we are going to give a certain amount of power to Franklin D. Roosevelt. The issued before us is whether we are going to give this power to any President who may occupy the White House, no matter who he may be.

I shall not engage in any invidious comparisons; I shall not mention names; but there must come to the mind of every Member of this body, as there must come to the minds of all the citizens of the United States, the names of Presidents in whom they would not for 3 minutes entrust the power which is proposed to be vested in the President by the pending measure.

A NEW SYSTEM IS PROPOSED

Remember we are acting upon a system. Let no one forget it. If this measure should be enacted into law, this generation may pass and the next generation will be operating under the system proposed, which would mark a revolutionary change from the system which has been handed down to us by the constitutional fathers.

Let us consider the bill. What proponent has yet stood upon this floor and explained the first section of the proposed substitute? Was it explained by the sponsors of the bill? Did the eminent chairman of the Judiciary Committee of the Senate of the United States, the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST], whose name is attached to this measure, explain the bill? Did the eminent Senator from Kentucky [Mr. LOGAN], whose name is attached to this measure, rise in his place to explain its purport and effect? He spoke not a single word of that character. Did the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. HATCH], who lends his name to it, give any explanation of the measure? Not a word or a syllable. And when those of us who are opposed to the measure undertake to discuss it we are told that we are filibusterers and are preventing the transaction of the public business.

What business can be more important, Senators of the United States, than the establishment of the judicial system under which you, your children, and your children's children will be governed so long as this measure remains upon the statute books, if it is passed? Good Presidents come and good Presidents go, and bad Presidents come and bad Presidents go, and the power that is proposed to be vested by this bill in any occupant of the White House could be used by a man, if he were so minded, to wreck every vestige of human liberty under the Stars and Stripes. Let us consider it.

When the original bill was proposed it provided that in the instance of each member of the judiciary who had attained the age of 70 years and had served for 10 years and within 6 months had not retired or resigned, the President should appoint another Justice.

It was mandatory. He had no discretion about it at all. The solemn duty was laid upon him by the terms of the bill to send the nomination to the Senate of the United States for every man on the bench of the given age and service. As it was written it would probably have resulted in the immediate appointment of six Justices.

DISCRETIONARY APPOINTMENTS

The resentment of the country to the plan was so sweeping and so strong that it was abandoned, or at least we are told it was abandoned, and here as a substitute we have a bill which, instead of saying that the President "shall" appoint, says he "may" appoint. The President now has the discretion to appoint an additional Justice when a sitting Justice reaches the age of 75 years. Why the discretion? Is the President to be permitted to say, "In my judgment new blood is not necessary now. It is true these men are 75 years of age. It is true that there ought to be new blood; but I am satisfied. I shall make no appointments."

Understand, Mr. President, I am speaking in an impersonal manner. I am not speaking of the present occupant of the White House. I am speaking of any occupant of the White House. If the power is discretionary then it follows as the night follows the day that the occupant of the White House at some future time, if not at this time, may say, "I am satisfied with the decisions of Justice A, who is 75 years of age, and I shall not send a new nomination."

Why the difference between "shall" and "may"? When it was pointed out on the first day of the debate, the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. HATCH] immediately announced his belief that the appointment should be mandatory, and I understand now from the newspapers that the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. LOGAN] says the same thing. How does it happen that, after the lapse of all these months, the proponents of the substitute come upon the floor not knowing exactly what the bill proposes? Who is the legislative draftsman who substituted "may" for "shall"? It was not the chairman of the Judiciary Committee [Mr. ASHURST]. It was not the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. HATCH]. It was not the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. LOGAN]. It was not the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] who proposed the substitute. Who substituted "may" for "shall"?

THE ACCUMULATION OF APPOINTMENTS

That is not all. The new bill provides that:

> Not more than one appointment of an additional Justice as herein authorized shall be made in any calendar year.

What is the explanation for that limitation? Obviously if new blood is necessary, if age be a crime, if, when Justices reach the age of 75 they are no longer fit to sit upon the bench, why should they not be removed and why should there be only one substitute Justice when perhaps there may be four or five who have reached the alleged age of senility? If the rule is good for one it is good for all.

Oh, but this limitation was put in for the purpose of preventing judgments of the Court from being influenced by the appointments. How simple-minded we are all supposed to be! Of course, we cannot understand if we do not read, and if we have no one to explain the bill to us. How many Senators have read the next clause of the proposed substitute?—

Provided, That the authority to appoint for any calendar year shall not lapse by reason of the rejection of the nomination, delay in confirmation, inability to nominate during an adjournment of the Senate, or withdrawal of the nominations in a succeeding calendar year.

Who wrote that phrase? It was not the distinguished Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] who wrote that phrase. It was not the chairman of the Judiciary Committee [Mr. ASHURST] who wrote it, nor was it the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. LOGAN], nor was it the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. HATCH]. Why is it in the bill?

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. For a question only.

Mr. ROBINSON. The Senator understands the justification for that provision. So many——

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, the Senator is making a statement and not asking a question.

Mr. ROBINSON. I was going to ask a question. Does not the Senator understand the justification for that provision?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I may say to the Senator that I am perfectly willing for the Senator to ask me at length and explain at length, and, as a matter of fact, I now ask unanimous consent that the Senator from Arkansas shall proceed with an explanation of the bill.

Mr. ROBINSON. No, Mr. President.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. The Senator objects. The Senator will take his seat because I decline to yield.

Mr. ROBINSON. Does the Senator from Wyoming desire to be fair?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Of course I desire to be fair. I want free and open debate upon the floor of the Senate.

Mr. ROBINSON. The Senator does not wish me to make a speech in his time? The Senator knows——

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, that is merely because of the order laid down by the Senator himself.

Mr. ROBINSON. Oh, yes; I understand. Would the Senator like to have me interrupt him and make a speech in his time and thus contribute to delay in the consideration of the bill?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I would not care to have the Senator interrupt me and contribute to delay.

Mr. ROBINSON. Very well. I shall not interrupt the Senator.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I would be very happy indeed to have the Senator explain his bill. He laid it before the Senate, but he has not yet explained it and I shall be very glad, indeed, to ask unanimous consent that the Senator may proceed if he desires to explain his bill.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Wyoming yield for a question?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I yield for a question.

Mr. ROBINSON. The Senator knows, does he not, that I consumed 2 hours in an effort to explain the bill?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. In an effort to denounce those who opposed the bill which he did not explain.

Mr. ROBINSON. Does the Senator think that is a statement comporting with the RECORD?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I do, indeed.

Mr. President, I was discussing the qualifying phrase which was added after the insertion of the phrase limiting the appointment to one Justice in a calendar year. How interesting is this phrase. Who is to determine when the exception lies?

The authority to appoint shall for any calendar year not lapse by reason of * * * delay in confirmation.

Mr. President, does the author of this bill imagine that the Senate of the United States would delay in confirming the appointment of Justices? Some suggestions have been made as to those who may be nominated to fill vacancies upon the Court. Was it in the mind of anybody who drafted this measure that the Senate of the United States might delay in confirming any person whose name has been mentioned?

And again:

Or withdrawal of the nomination in a succeeding calendar year.

Mr. President, who has the authority to withdraw an appointment? What is the situation that is presented to us as we read this clause? A nomination may be sent down at the latter part of a session. There may be delay in confirmation so that no action is taken upon the nomination in that session. A new session comes and the appointing power withdraws the nomination. Was it a mistake that "may" was put in instead of "shall", or was it put in by intention?

Mr. President, I am not so naive as to assume that the brilliant minds that drew this measure did not know what they were doing. The purpose of that phrase is to permit nominations to accumulate. That would be the result of that phrase; and if nominations accumulate, and the discretion lies in the appointing power to appoint or not to appoint, obviously appointments may be withheld until the necessity arises for changing the opinion of the Court, and then they may come in.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Wyoming yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. For a question.

Mr. WHEELER. The effect of that would be that they would hold a club over the Supreme Court.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, is the Senator asking me a question?

Mr. WHEELER. I am asking a question. I say, would not the effect of that be to hold a club over the Supreme Court, and to say to them, "I have the power to appoint somebody, and if you do not render decisions that are proper I will appoint them, but I do not have to appoint them"?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I do not like to use the personal pronoun; but the effect of the measure is just exactly what the Senator says, because when once this bill is placed on the statute books the members of the Supreme Court will know that the power resides in another arm of the Government to send in nominations to affect the decisions of the Court.

It may be that it was not intended to do that. I shall not impute motives to anybody. I have no desire to ascribe to any person an intention which he may not have. I sit in judgment upon no man; but under my oath as a Senator of the United States I must sit in judgment upon this measure, upon this language, upon this bill, which establishes a system for the administration of justice.

What do we mean by the word "justice"? We mean justice administered by judges who are free and independent, who are laboring under no fear of reprisal, who are laboring under no threat that their numbers may be expanded if their decisions are not satisfactory to the executive arm.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I yield to the Senator from Texas for a question.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, asking a question—that is the only purpose for which I rise—let me ask the Senator if it is necessary to ascribe any motive other than to read the bill and draw one's reasonable conclusion as to what it will do and the purpose that it has in mind.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, one may read the bill, as I have read it, and it seems to me one can come to no other conclusion than that which I have announced as to the effect of the measure. I shall not pretend to declare what the purpose of that phrase was.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I yield to my good friend the Senator from New Mexico for a question.

Mr. HATCH. Am I to understand the Senator from Wyoming to say that he can see no other purpose in that language except the one he has stated?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. No; I did not say that I could see no other purpose—oh, no! I am very willing to admit that there may be a perfectly proper purpose. I am discussing the possibility. I have said it is not necessary for me to discuss motives, and I prefer not to do so; but I must discuss the situation as it exists.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for one more question?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Certainly.

Mr. HATCH. Does the Senator conceive that any President of the United States would use the language of the bill which he has read for the purpose he has just described?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I remember very well the day when a President of this country permitted his Attorney General to send the emissaries of a private detective agency into the State of Montana to find something "on" the honorable Senator Thomas J. Walsh. I remember very well the time when they sent their agents scouring up and down the State of Montana in the effort to find something that would wreck the career of an honorable man; and when they were unable to do anything with the then senior Senator from Montana, I remember how they framed a case upon the man who was then the junior Senator from Montana, and is now the senior Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER]. Mr. President, I cannot be one to say that no man will ever again sit in the White House who will be prey to the influences which surrounded the President at that time.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for another question?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Certainly.

Mr. HATCH. Knowing full well the Senator's familiarity with the history of America and of her Presidents, is it not true that it is his opinion, so stated publicly many times, that no President in the history of the country has ever sought to pack the Court or destroy the independence of the judiciary?

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, the Senator from New Mexico has just asked me a question.

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator can answer them both at the same time.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, it has been my contention that there is no precedent for this bill; but I am also aware of the fact that many of the proponents of the measure have publicly stated that the purpose is to "unpack" the Court, as they say; and the statement has been made before the Judiciary Committee, and it was made here upon the floor just the other day, that the purpose was to secure a judiciary which would give a different interpretation of the Constitution.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, may I ask one more question?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I yield for a question.

Mr. HATCH. Does not the Senator think it is our duty, as representatives in this body and as American citizens, to maintain and uphold the honor and dignity of the executive branch of our Government, just as much as it is to maintain the independence of the judicial branch of the Government?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Why, of course I do. I agree completely with the Senator; and one of the very best ways to do that is not to pass slipshod legislation which would permit the abuse of power.

Mr. WHEELER and Mr. LEWIS addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Wyoming yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I yield first to the Senator from Montana for a question.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, does not the Senator know that in one of the very first radio speeches made in favor of this bill by one of the proponents of the bill it was stated that the purpose of the bill was to "unpack" the Supreme Court, giving the intimation that some other Presidents had "packed" the Court?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Certainly; the Senator is quite right.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President——

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Does the Senator from Illinois rise for a question?

Mr. LEWIS. May I be permitted to ask the able Senator from Wyoming a question?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. LEWIS. The Senator did not mean to draw a parallel, did he, and imply that the present Attorney General of the United States would duplicate or have the manner of conduct he has described in the case of a previous Attorney General?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Why, certainly not. I am sure the Senator from Illinois knows that I meant no such implication. I have a very high regard for the present Attorney General of the United States.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President——

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I yield to the Senator from Washington for a question.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Does not the Senator from Wyoming know that it was during the administration to which he referred a few minutes ago, under which, as the Senator said, certain efforts were made by the then Attorney General to do certain things to Members of this body, and during the time that Attorney General occupied the position of Attorney General, that the great and glorious American Bar Association which is so vigorously fighting this particular measure proposed that that President and that Attorney General be given the power to add two more judges to the Supreme Court of the United States?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I think the Senator is quite right; but I hold no brief for the American Bar Association.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I yield for a question.

Mr. WHEELER. Does not the Senator from Wyoming know that when that proposal was put forward by the American Bar Association every liberal progressive Senator in the United States and every liberal progressive throughout the United States denounced the proposal, and was opposed to it then, and opposed to President Harding and Attorney General Daugherty doing that sort of thing?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I am happy to know that. It had escaped my attention.

Let us proceed with an examination of the substitute. There are some phases of section 1 to which I shall return a little bit later. Let me go now to section 3.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator again for a question?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I yield for a question.

Mr. WHEELER. Does the Senator know that during the incidents which he has mentioned, when a former Attorney General sent out detectives to "get something" upon my then colleague and myself, a subcommittee was appointed by the Senate to investigate the matter, and that as a matter of fact the administration approached members of the subcommittee to get them to bring in an unfavorable report against me?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I was aware of that. I was present at some of the hearings conducted by the subcommittee, and I saw some of the agents who were employed at that time by the former administration for that very reprehensible purpose.

BREAKING DOWN LOCAL ADMINISTRATION

I am referring now to section 3 of the substitute. Let us remember that the system which we are asked to establish provides, first, for this extraordinary discretionary power in the appointing authority to make or withhold appointments, this extraordinary method by which appointments may be permitted to accumulate. There is a certain amount of concentration of authority.

In section 3 is the provision that any circuit judge may be designated and assigned from time to time by the Chief Justice for general service in the circuit court of appeals, and that any district judge may be assigned and designated from time to time by the Chief Justice for general service in any district court.

This is a proposal utterly new to our system, one which changes completely the present system of the local administration of justice. It concentrates in the hands of the Chief Justice the power to pick a circuit court justice from any part of the country and send him into any other circuit to try any particular case. It gives the Chief Justice the power to pick any district judge from any part of the country and send him into any other district of the United States to try any case, without regard to the desire of the litigants, without regard to the desire of the circuit court justice of the circuit into which he goes, without regard to the desire of the district judge into whose court he goes.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I yield.

Mr. WALSH. Does the Senator interpret this provision to mean that if a Chief Justice were so disposed he could select circuit judges and district judges who had opinions in accord with his own to decide cases coming before district and circuit courts in various parts of the country?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Without the slightest question.

Mr. WALSH. If the Chief Justice were a creature of and subservient to a President, the President could through such a system control decisions?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Yes; and if the Chief Justice were a creature of the corporations, the corporations would decide them. If he were a creature of concentrated wealth, concentrated wealth would decide them. If the Chief Justice of the United States were a man who had the narrow view of the Constitution of which we liberals complain—and I have always been a liberal—he would, nevertheless, under this proposal, have the authority to select his own minions and send them into any court of the land to decide questions there pending as he wanted to have them decided.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I yield for a question.

Mr. WHEELER. Does not the Senator know that this is the very thing my late colleague, Senator Walsh, and some of us complained about when Daugherty wanted to send judges into various parts of the country in order to get convictions in certain cases in which he desired convictions?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I think the Senator is correctly stating the fact. I remember reading about that in the newspapers at the time. It was before I had the honor to be a Member of this body.

Mr. WHEELER. Does not the Senator know that Daugherty sent——

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I yield only for a question. [Laughter.]

Mr. WHEELER. Does not the Senator know that Daugherty sent a man to Texas in order to get a conviction which he desired, and wanted to send an Ohio judge to Montana when my own case came up for trial out there?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. It is just that sort of thing which would be made absolutely lawful under the pending measure. It is just that sort of thing, Mr. President, which every Member of this body ought to oppose to the last breath in his body.

I asked the clerk to bring me title 28 of the Judicial Code, in order that I might here place in the RECORD the provisions of the present law, in order that I might here show that the system under which we are operating is that of local justice locally administered.

Every lawyer who practices before a Federal court knows that when, even under the present law, a judge comes in from a different district or a different circuit to sit upon a case, one or the other of the litigants is sure to believe that the case is framed against him, because it is the spirit of the American citizen to believe in local self-government, to believe in having his cases passed upon by judges whom he knows. It is a development in the long history of the legal system under which we operate that no man is to be found guilty except upon the judgment of a jury of his peers. What does that mean? The historic meaning of that phrase is that he was to be tried by those men who knew him, by those men on whom he could depend for an absolutely honest judgment. Is it not natural for any man whose life or property is at stake in a suit before a law court to want to have upon the bench a judge whose honor and integrity he knows?

What was the objection raised by the colonists before the Revolution to the administration of justice? The king was taking prisoners from their home communities and transporting them across the sea to be tried before judges and juries of whom they knew nothing. This central administration of justice was one of the complaints raised by Thomas Jefferson and the Members of the Continental Congress against the British system. By the pending proposal, instead of transporting the defendant or the litigant, we are asked to set up a system whereby the judge may be transported, may be sent out from the central establishment.

THE PRESENT LAW ON ASSIGNMENT OF JUDGES

Section 17 of title XXVIII of the Judicial Code provides:

Whenever any district judge by reason of any disability or necessary absence from his district or the accumulation or urgency of business is unable to perform speedily the work of his district, the senior circuit judge of that circuit—

Not some other circuit——

The senior circuit judge of that circuit, or, in his absence, the circuit justice thereof, may, if in his judgment the public interest requires, designate and assign any district judge of any district court within the same judicial circuit to act as district judge in such district and to discharge all the judicial duties of a judge thereof for such time as the business of the said district court may require. Whenever it is found impracticable to designate and assign another district judge within the same judicial circuit as above provided and a certificate of the needs of any such district is presented by said senior circuit judge or said circuit justice to the Chief Justice—

Observe, Senators, that the application must be made by the senior circuit judge, or, in his absence or disability, by the circuit justice for that circuit. The power is kept within the local circuit. It is not delegated to the distant center of all authority in Washington, because it was the purpose of the framers of this law to retain local justice locally administered. We are asked to upset that program by those who bring in a bill which they will not explain, by those who threaten with all the dire punishment of the rules of the Senate any Senator who dares to rise and ask for an explanation of the measure. Here we have a revolutionary bill, proposing a new system, a system which upsets every traditional principle of our jurisprudence, and we are said to be impeding public business when we insist upon discussing it. If we did not discuss it, the fact is it would not be discussed.

I proceed with the reading:

Before any such designation or assignment is made the senior circuit judge of the circuit from which the designated or assigned judge is to be taken shall consent thereto. All designations and assignments made hereunder shall be filed in the office of the clerk and entered on the minutes of both the court from and to which a judge is designated and assigned.

In looking back upon the page, after my statement of a few moments ago, I find I missed a rather important part of the sentence.

When application is made to the Chief Justice—

He, or in his absence, the senior associate justice, may, if in his judgment the public interest so requires, designate and assign a district judge of an adjoining judicial circuit if practicable * * *.

The point here emphasized is that the greatest care was taken by Congress in drafting that law to provide, first, that in any transfer or reassignment of judges they should come first from the same circuit, and then, if for some reason it was not possible to get them in that circuit, they should be gotten from the adjoining circuit; all indicating the great concern which was being taken to provide that if possible a judge who came from the area in which the disputes arose should be selected to try all cases.

Let us now read the next section:

Each district judge designated and assigned under the provisions of section 17 of this chapter may hold separately and at the same time a district court in the district or territory to which such judge is designated * * *.

SEC. 19. If all the circuit judges and the circuit justice are absent from the circuit, or are unable to execute the provisions of section 17 of this title, or if the district judge so designated is disabled or neglects to hold the court and transact the business for which he is designated, the clerk of the district court shall certify the fact to the Chief Justice of the United States, who may thereupon designate and appoint in the manner aforesaid the judge of any district within such circuit or within any other circuit.

And the appointment shall be transmitted to the Court.

I shall not take time to read the rest of these statutes; but they clearly demonstrate the fact that the purpose of Congress was to retain in the local courts, so far as possible, the power to control the litigation. Now, however, the Senate of the United States is asked to upset this system, and to permit the Chief Justice of the United States, without let or hindrance, to pick his own district judges and circuit judges and send them from coast to coast, from north to south, from east to west, to try the litigation of the people of America. Do you wonder that I call this a bill for the centralization of the administration of justice?

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I yield for a question.

Mr. WHEELER. Have any of the proponents of the bill given any reason why this revolutionary procedure should take place in this country?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, there has been no such explanation on this floor or before the Judiciary Committee when a similar proposal contained in the old bill was under consideration. No explanation is given by the proponents of this measure why they want to abandon local administration of justice.

Mr. WHEELER. May I interrupt by asking another question? Is it not a particularly dangerous procedure, in view of the fact that Federal district judges not only pass upon the law but likewise have the power to say to the jury, "This man is guilty", or "You should bring in a verdict in favor of the defendant", or the plaintiff, as they may see fit?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. The Senator from Montana is absolutely correct. Under the Federal procedure, this new district judge could be sent into a State like my State or the State of the Senator from Montana, where the judges who try cases are required to give their instructions only after consultation with the attorneys on both sides, and then only upon matters of law, and the Federal judge who is sent into the State could give his instructions on the facts as well as on the law.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me to ask a question?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Might not the new system which the Senator is discussing be accurately described as modern carpetbagging?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I think the phrase of the Senator from Michigan is absolutely appropriate.

This, however, is the important fact which I now want to call to the attention of Members of the Senate: Here we have a bill which destroys your district system, your circuit system, which imposes upon the Chief Justice the power to send his minions across the country, destroying this local system; and this measure is sent to the Senate of the United States, which is supposed to be a body representative of the States of the Union!

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I shall be very happy to yield to my distinguished friend from Vermont.

Mr. AUSTIN. May I ask the Senator from Wyoming whether he recalls the following, which occurred in the Committee on the Judiciary, which took the testimony on the original bill, namely?—

The CHAIRMAN. Any questions, Senators?

Mr. JACKSON. May I say, Mr. Chairman, that I would like to take up with you at some time a discussion of our problems in the lower courts, but I think it would be unwise to put it into this discussion at this time.

Senator KING. That will be part of your presentation?

Mr. JACKSON. I can file it with the committee.

Senator KING. I think you should come back and present it, so we may at that time have the opportunity to examine you with respect to that, as well as the statement you have made today.

I ask the Senator did Mr. Jackson ever come back with any such explanation or submit himself to cross-examination with respect to it?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, the distinguished and able Assistant Attorney General did not come back. He did not submit an explanation, and no one yet has made it.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for just one question?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I yield.

Mr. WHEELER. Let me ask the Senator, under this proposal as it would work out as a practical matter, whether what would happen would not be as follows: The Attorney General of the United States, whoever he might be, would go to the Chief Justice of the United States and say, "Here is the situation: We want to have a judge sent from New York down to Florida, or down to Georgia, to take the place of the present judge, when we are going to try this case."

Is that not what would happen as a practical matter? And is it not also a fact that the chances are that the judge who might be sent from New York or Chicago into my State or into Georgia would not know anything about local conditions in that particular community, or public sentiment in that community, or anything about the surrounding circumstances which might be involved in the case?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, it would be inevitably so.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I yield for a question.

Mr. BARKLEY. Is the Senator advocating that cases be tried according to the public sentiment of the community in which the issues may be joined?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, the Senator from Kentucky knows I am not advocating that.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator's answer would indicate——

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Now the Senator is not asking a question.

Mr. BARKLEY. Then I will ask one.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Certainly.

Mr. BARKLEY. Does not the Senator know that in every State of the Union now there is some provision of law by which either the Governor of the State or the chief justice of the supreme court of the State may send regular judges on the bench from one district to another, and to distant parts of the State, for the trial of cases if the sitting judge is sick, or if his docket is crowded, or if for any other reason he is incapacitated to sit in the trial of the case; and is that not a universal rule adopted in practically all the States to clear up dockets and to prevent congestion where in any district court there is need for the services of an extra judge?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, the answer to the question of the Senator is that the system which we now have under the Federal statutes is altogether ample to cover that situation; and I may say that the particular situation which the Senator describes, if I am correctly informed, does not exist in the Northwestern States. Judges there are confined to their own districts.

Mr. BARKLEY. May I ask the Senator, In such States, what is the remedy when there is no judge who can transact the business of a district?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. The litigants themselves, in some cases, can bring them in.

Mr. BARKLEY. May I ask the Senator another question? Does not the Senator know that while under the present system the senior supreme court judge is authorized to transfer any district judge from his own district or from his own State into another district or State within the circuit, frequently sitting judges decline to go because there is no authority whatever that can compel them to go, and that they frequently decide whether or not they shall go, according to their own convenience, and not according to the condition and status of the docket of the court to which they are asked to be sent?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Oh, yes; I think the Senator is quite right about that. Moreover, there is another phase of the matter, and that is corrected in this bill, I may say, that for some years now Congress has not permitted a per diem of $10 for judges who are so assigned. But even the $10 per diem actually is not sufficient, I am told, to pay the expenses of judges who are transferred from one circuit or district to a distant circuit or district, because, particularly with respect to circuit judges, it is necessary for them to take along with them their law clerks, their secretaries, and their libraries in order properly to do their work.

However, Mr. President, while not denying that there are some conditions which might merit consideration of some modification of the provisions of law which I have read, I am calling attention to the fact that this plan brings about a consolidation of the administration of justice.

THE OBJECTION OF THOMAS JEFFERSON

Before I proceed to the discussion of other phases of this plan I wish to call the attention of Senators to the views of Thomas Jefferson. We have been told that Jefferson complained about the members of the judiciary, and he did, I think, with good reason. We are told that he spent many years of his life denouncing the members of the judiciary, and he did. But what was the reason? Why was Jefferson concerned with the rulings of the Federal judiciary when he was President of the United States? Was it because he did not believe in an independent judiciary? Not at all. It was because he did not believe in the consolidation of government.

In July 1822, writing from Monticello to William T. Berry, Jefferson repeated some of the statements he had made about the judiciary. Let me read a sentence or two to the Senate:

> We already see the power, installed for life, responsible to no authority (for impeachment is not even a scarecrow), advancing with a noiseless, steady pace to the great object of consolidation. The foundations are already deeply laid by their decisions for the annihilation of constitutional State rights, and the removal of every check and every counterpoise to the engulfing power of which themselves are to make a sovereign part.

What was Jefferson talking about? He was talking about the concentration of the administration of justice, the consolidation of all the affairs of Government, in the Federal establishment. Yet Senators come into this body urging a bill which provides for centralization and consolidation, which wipes out not only district lines and circuit lines but the lines of the States which the Members of this body represent, and attempt to quote Thomas Jefferson as an authority for their effort to revolutionize the administration of justice in the United States.

Let us proceed with the substitute which no proponent as yet has dared to rise upon the floor of the Senate and explain or defend. Under the bill there would be concentrated in the hands of the Chief Justice the power to send judges hither and yon, and it would deny to the circuit judges in the circuits to which other judges are to be sent the power to say they are not needed.

Senators will observe that section of the bill which is brought before the Senate, paragraph b of section 3, is another step in the consolidation.

THE APPOINTMENT OF THE PROCTOR

Not content with that, the authors of the substitute authorize in section 4 the appointment of a new official, the court proctor with a new salary, another agent of the ever-expanding bureaucracy centralizing in Washington. A proctor to do what? To go up and down the country and advise the Chief Justice where to make the changes, like the chief post office inspector advises the Postmaster General. When I was First Assistant Postmaster General I found that the chief inspector, from time immemorial, had been called "the eyes and ears of the Post Office Department", because he and his men went throughout the United States to examine post offices, to go on the trains, to find out how the Post Office Department was being administered locally. The eyes and ears of the Chief Justice will be the proctor, a new official. Is that justice?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President——

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I yield to my distinguished friend from Massachusetts for a question.

Mr. WALSH. Does the bill require the proctor to be a lawyer?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, the bill does not require the proctor to be a lawyer.

Mr. WALSH. Does the bill specify any qualifications that the proctor should possess?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. None whatever.

Mr. WALSH. So far as the bill is concerned, then, the proctor might be a ward politician?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. He might be anybody who was selected by the Court.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will my friend from Wyoming yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SCHWELLENBACH in the chair). Does the Senator from Wyoming yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I yield for a question.

Mr. BARKLEY. Does the bill or does any existing law or does the Constitution itself require that the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court shall be a lawyer?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I think not.

Mr. BARKLEY. Or that any Justice of the Supreme Court shall be a lawyer?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I do not think so.

Mr. BARKLEY. Therefore, he might be a ward politician?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. That might follow. [Laughter.]

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I yield for a question.

Mr. WHEELER. The Senator knows, does he not, that some of those who have been favoring this bill have even gone so far as to suggest that a layman be placed upon the Supreme Bench; and he knows, does he not, while the law and the Constitution do not require lawyers to be appointed upon the Supreme Court, that common sense does?

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH], the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY], and the Senator from Montana, by the process of asking questions of me, are conducting a debate among themselves over a matter which I have not proposed, but I shall be very happy to have the process continued if it affords my friends any satisfaction.

Mr. BARKLEY. I merely wish to ask if the processes of common sense might not be applied to the appointment of a proctor no less than to the appointment of the Chief Justice?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I have no doubt they would, but that has no bearing whatsoever upon the merits of the plan which I am discussing. We have here a proposed system for the centralization of the administration of justice in Washington, in a democracy devoted to the theory of local self-government.

I say, Mr. President, that there is no occasion for such a concentration of power; there is no occasion for such a consolidation. I say, on the contrary, that there is every reason for every citizen of the United States to look with dread upon this proposal.

The proctor is given the authority—

> By requisition upon the Public Printer, to have any necessary printing and binding done at the Government Printing Office, and authority is conferred upon the Public Printer to do such printing and binding.

The mails are already teeming with the vast outpourings of unnecessary and unread printed matter prepared by the innumerable agencies of the bureaucracy, and now it is proposed to give the proctor the right to call upon the Public Printer to print anything that his will may please or suggest—a blank check to be drawn upon the Treasury of the United States.

He (the proctor) shall also be allowed, in the discretion of the Chief Justice, stationery, supplies, travel expenses, equipment, necessary professional and clerical assistance, and miscellaneous expenses appropriate for performing the duties imposed by this section.

In the name of economy and a balanced Budget, how many new officials are we going to create? How many new orders are we going to give upon the Public Printer? How many new salaries are we going to pay?

"Necessary professional and clerical assistance" for the purpose of administering concentrated justice in the courts of the United States.

Now, Mr. President, I come to title II.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, before the Senator reaches that, will he allow me to ask him a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wyoming yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I yield to the distinguished Senator from Georgia for a question. The Senator realizes that I must take the precaution to advise every Senator who rises and seeks to interrupt me, lest I not be taken from the floor under the ruling of my leader.

Mr. GEORGE. I appreciate that, and I am trying to ask a question within the rule and under the rule. May I ask the Senator if the proctor is to be permitted to visit all the courts of the United States—district courts and circuit courts?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Oh, yes.

Mr. GEORGE. And may go into those courts without invitation from the judges who preside over them?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. It would seem so. He has the power to investigate the need for assigning district and circuit judges to other courts and to make recommendations thereon to the Chief Justice.

Mr. GEORGE. I wish to ask the Senator if his report is to be made to the Chief Justice and if his recommendations are authorized under this particular substitute bill?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Yes. He may make his recommendations to the Chief Justice and those recommendations are authorized under this bill.

Mr. GEORGE. Am I to understand from the Senator's previous discussion that under the provisions of the substitute bill the Chief Justice may designate a district judge anywhere in the United States to sit at any place in the United States?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Absolutely.

Mr. GEORGE. And may also transfer a judge of the circuit court of appeals from one district to another, or from one part of the United States to another, at will?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Absolutely, without let or hindrance.

Mr. GEORGE. May I ask the Senator if that power, coupled with the power of which great complaint is often made of permitting the Government to choose the jurisdiction in which it may indict and transfer for trial citizens of the United States, will not, in his opinion, result in the complete concentration of judicial power in the Court at Washington?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, that is exactly the complaint I am making. It is a revolutionary bill the purport of which has not yet been recognized by the people of the United States. I say to the Senator from Georgia that if this substitute bill by any chance should ever pass and be written upon the statute books, I venture the prediction that every Senator and every Member of Congress who casts his vote for it will be driven from public office by an enraged public opinion opposed to the concentration of the administration of justice in the city of Washington.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wyoming yield to the Senator from Vermont?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I am happy to yield for a question.

Mr. AUSTIN. Is it the Senator's opinion that we inhabitants of the Green Mountains will have to raise an umbrella every time in rains in Washington? [Laughter.]

Mr. O'MAHONEY. The Senator's question answers itself.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I yield for a question.

Mr. WHEELER. What does the Senator think would have happened to the senior Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] or to myself if this procedure had been in effect during the Daugherty administration, and they could have had a proctor and he had been sent to our State, and then a judge had been sent to Montana or to Idaho to try us because of the fact that somebody in Washington wanted to prosecute us?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. The Senator from Montana would not now be rising on the floor of the United States Senate to ask me questions. [Laughter.]

WHO KNOWS ABOUT TITLE II?

Now we come to title II. Who knows about title II? What proponent of the substitute bill wrote title II? Did the chairman of the Judiciary Committee [Mr. ASHURST], whose name is attached to it, draft title II? This is a new provision of the bill. Did the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. HATCH], whose name is attached to it, draft title II? Did the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. LOGAN] draft it? Did the eminent Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON], who lays down the rule to shut off debate, draft title II?

The answer is "No." Has anyone explained it? The answer is "No." Mr. President, I venture to say that not one of the proponents or the sponsors of the substitute bill is willing now to rise in his place and explain it. This is a new section that comes into the Senate of the United States carrying upon its face the badge of unconstitutionality. Why do I say that? No; it carries two badges of unconstitutionality. The distinguished Members of the Senate who are asking us now to pass a new court bill, which will allow new appointments to the Supreme Court of the United States in order that we may have new interpretation of the Constitution, bring us a substitute bill containing title II, flying two pennants, two flags, of unconstitutionality.

Senators have heard of the separability clause. What is a separability clause? Every lawyer knows. It is the clause which is written into a bill when the author of the bill is doubtful of the constitutionality of the provisions he is writing. Otherwise it has no place in a bill. If the author of a measure writes into it, if any part of this bill is found unconstitutional it shall not affect the other parts, what does it mean? It means that the author believes there is some doubt about the constitutionality of the proposals he is making.

Turn then, Senators of the United States, to section 107, the last section of title II:

If any provision of this title, or the application thereof to any person or circumstances, is held invalid, the remainder of the act and the application of such provisions to other persons and other circumstances shall not be affected thereby.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wyoming yield to the Senator from Vermont?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I yield for a question.

Mr. AUSTIN. I ask the Senator from Wyoming if it is not apparent that the author of title II was so apprehensive about it that he also embodied in it the provision contained in the last sentence of section 103 of title II?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Yes. I say it comes here under two badges of unconstitutionality. The other separability clause to which the Senator from Vermont draws attention is to be found in the last sentence of section 103:

If this section, or any provision thereof, is held invalid, the remainder of this act and the other provisions of this section shall not be affected thereby.

Why should the leadership of the Senate of the United States try to steam roller this substitute bill through until we find out why the author wrote these two separability clauses? Why should we be asked here upon the floor of the United State Senate to pass a measure which has never been submitted to the scrutiny of a committee of this body?

Mr. President, I should like to have the author of the substitute measure come before the Judiciary Committee and explain to us why he inserted these two clauses. Is not the Senate of the United States entitled to that knowledge? Are not the people of the United States entitled to know why the unknown author of this measure was so doubtful of his brain child that he introduced these two life nets in title II?

A BILL WITHOUT AN EXPLANATION

We are asked to cast our votes without debate for a measure of this kind in a body in which the Democratic Party has 76 members out of 96. It has always been my belief that the Democratic Party was the party of free speech and free discussion. I have always been proud of my membership in a party which permitted me to stand up at any time in any place and declare my honest convictions. I have been proud of membership in a party which has always insisted upon knowing to the letter the character of legislation that any administration proposed to have enacted and to be enforced upon the people of the United States. But now, considering a revolutionary measure, we are told by the present leadership of this body that we are filibustering when we are trying to discuss the bill.

Oh, Mr. President, it was quite evident what the procedure was to be when the majority leader rose in his place and submitted the substitute, and then undertook immediately to denounce as filibusterers those who are opposed to the bill. Then the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. HATCH] rose to make his explanation of why he believed this would not result in changing decisions or packing the Court. Then the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. LOGAN] rose to make a political speech, not upon the issues of the bill, to be followed by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. MINTON], who made an attack upon the personnel of the present Supreme Court. Then without a solitary word in explanation of the provisions of the bill, they dropped the case and turned it over to us. They were intending that they should pass this substitute bill by their majority of 76 without having it discussed; but I venture to say that somebody will have to rise on this floor and explain why this substitute bill has been brought in here, and what these proposals are intended to do, before there can be any action.

Let us examine section 3. I grant you there is some very good reason for notifying the Attorney General when the constitutionality of any statute of the United States is drawn in question in litigation, so that he may have an opportunity to come into court and defend it. I know there is a good reason for preventing such abuses as that which took place in the city of Baltimore a year or so ago, when, in my opinion, there was without question a "framed" case, intended to declare the Securities and Exchange Act, or the "death sentence" law, unconstitutional. A case was prepared in which both sides represented the same interest, and a judge was selected whose opinion was pretty well known in advance in an effort to invalidate the statute. I grant you that is an abuse; it is an abuse that ought to be stopped; but is it any excuse for going to the length that we find in this bill?—

SEC. 102. Whenever any judgment, decree, or order in any suit or proceeding referred to in section 101 is based in whole or in part upon a decision that any statute of the United States is unconstitutional as therein applied, the United States, irrespective of whether or not it had previously presented evidence or argument under the provisions of section 101 shall have the same right to appeal therefrom as any party to the suit or proceeding.

Here we give to the United States the power to step into litigation between two private individuals and take an appeal whether or not the litigants are satisfied; and observe this, the last sentence of section 102:

This section shall not confer upon the United States any right of review by the Supreme Court unless a party to the suit or proceeding also takes an appeal.

Then we read in the next section, section 103:

Such appeals will lie if no appeal is taken by any party.

Section 102 says the United States may not appeal. Section 103 says the United States may appeal; and this is the substitute bill we are asked to pass by the huge majority of the Democratic Party without having it either examined by a standing committee of the Senate of the United States or explained by any of its proponents.

HOW TO PREVENT JUDICIAL USURPATION

Mr. President, there is no Member of this body, no Member of the House of Representatives, no member of the administration who is more ready to acknowledge than I that the courts have upon occasion usurped legislative power, and that usurpation ought to be brought to an end. I have repeatedly denounced it. There can be no defense of it; but I take the ground that the cure of judicial usurpation of legislative power is not executive usurpation of judicial power. The way is clear. It would be a simple matter to correct this situation. I had the privilege of introducing a constitutional amendment which would have denied to the inferior courts the right to declare laws of Congress unconstitutional; but that is not all we can do. We already have on the statute books two statutes which point the way.

Section 47 of title 28 of the United States Code provides that no ruling of the Interstate Commerce Commission may be suspended by an injunction of any district court unless three judges sit, one of whom is a circuit judge, and unless a majority of the three hold it to be subject to injunction. Is not a law of Congress of equal dignity with a ruling of the Interstate Commerce Commission? And section 380 of title 28 provides the same rule for a three-judge court to protect the constitutionality of State statutes.

How simple it would be to provide the same rule for statutes of the United States! How simple it would be to provide for a three-judge court and to avoid the plan contained in this substitute bill by which the United States may become a party to every suit that is brought anywhere in the United States in which the constitutionality of a statute is drawn in question!

Let me read some language that would do this. It could read like this:

No permanent or interlocutory injunction suspending or restraining the enforcement, operation, or execution of, or setting aside, in whole or in part, any act of Congress upon the ground that such act or any part thereof is repugnant to the Constitution of the United States shall be issued or granted by any district court of the United States, or by any judge thereof, or by any circuit judge acting as district judge, unless the application for the same shall be presented to a circuit judge or a district judge, and shall be heard and determined by three judges, of whom at least one shall be a circuit judge, and unless a majority of said three judges shall concur in granting such application.

When such application as aforesaid is presented to a judge, he shall immediately request of the senior circuit judge of the circuit in which said application is made assignment of two other judges to assist him in the hearing and determination of said application, and upon such request the senior circuit judge shall immediately make said assignment of two other judges. Said application shall not be heard or determined before at least 5 days' notice of the hearing has been given to the Attorney General of the United States and to such other persons as may be defendants in the suit: Provided, That in cases where irreparable damage would otherwise ensue to the petitioner, a majority of said three judges concurring may, on hearing, after not less than 3 days' notice to the Attorney General, allow a temporary stay or suspension, in whole or in part, of the operation of such act for not more than 60 days from the date of the order of said judges pending the application for the order or injunction, in which case the said order shall contain a specific finding, based upon evidence submitted to the judges making the order and identified by reference thereto, that such irreparable damage would result to the petitioner and specifying the nature of the damage. The said judges may, at the time of hearing such application, upon a like finding, continue the temporary stay or suspension in whole or in part until decision upon the application. The hearing upon such application for a permanent or interlocutory injunction shall be given precedence and shall be in every way expedited and be assigned for hearing at the earliest practicable day after the expiration of the notice hereinbefore provided for. An appeal may be taken direct to the Supreme Court of the United States within 30 days from the order granting or denying, after notice and hearing, a permanent or interlocutory injunction in such case.

Mr. President, a plan of that kind would give ample protection to the statutes of the United States. It would prevent the declaring of laws of Congress unconstitutional except in clear cases, and it would protect the people of the United States from the concentration of justice in Washington. It would protect the people from the consolidation of which I speak.

Mr. President, we have here a substitute which provides, first, for concentration of power by giving the appointing authority wholly new powers in the selection of Justices of the Supreme Court in the manner I have described; for concentration of power in the transfer of judges, both circuit and district, through all parts of the country; for additional concentration of power through the operation of the newly established office of proctor; and, finally—the fourth phase of concentration—permission to the United States Government to intervene in every case in which the constitutionality of a law is drawn in question, and to appeal these cases, regardless of the desires or will of the litigants.

Does this consolidation have any significance for the people of the United States? I think it cannot be denied that it does. It has a tremendous significance, a significance which I venture to say is not realized in many persons in the United States. Perhaps not many in Congress or in the administration realize the great danger that confronts them.

BIG BUSINESS AND BIG GOVERNMENT

Let me revert for a moment to a discussion of recent developments—indeed, of developments over a long period of years, perhaps. I have long been of the opinion that the election of 1936, great and glorious triumph that it was for the liberal forces of America, was the culmination of a battle which had been going on in this country for almost 50 years to prevent the control of the people's government by concentrated wealth.

The people of the United States were opposed to government by big business, and that opposition is the explanation of every political movement in that last quarter of a century. The opposition of the people of the United States to the control of their Government and of their economic affairs and of their social affairs by big business was the explanation of William Jennings Bryan; it was the explanation of Woodrow Wilson; it was the explanation of Theodore Roosevelt; it was the explanation of Senator Hiram Johnson and of Senator "Bob" La Follette; it was the explanation of Senator George W. Norris; it was the explanation of that growing liberal movement springing up in both the Democratic ranks and in the Republican ranks demanding, demanding, demanding, that the Government of the people should be restored to the people and taken away from concentrated wealth.

As long as the Republican voters of the United States held the belief that their party would eventually become the spokesman of this liberal doctrine, of this opposition to control by big business, they remained within the party, but when the time came when they were convinced that the Republican Party had fallen under the control of an organization which was in the hands of big business, they left the party in droves. That was the explanation of the election of 1932 and the explanation of the election of 1936.

But remember the campaign of 1936. Every Senator upon this side of the aisle did his part in that campaign. We went out into the States, as did the distinguished Senator from Nevada (Mr. McCARRAN) who made his appearance upon this floor last Saturday in opposition to the pending bill, when he flew by airplane from one end of the country to the other to carry the message of Democracy. We went out saying there was no fear of concentrated government under this administration. We declared that there was no danger of big government taking the place of big business. There was fear in the hearts of many of the citizens of the United States, and the charge was made that big government would succeed. It was this fear that explains what votes were cast against our party, but we declared over and over again that we stood for the democratic process.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I yield for a question.

Mr. WALSH. The able Senator from Wyoming was a member of the committee on resolutions of the last Democratic convention. I ask the Senator if there was not in that committee a deliberate, well-thought-out intent to prevent the Democratic Party going before the country in any form or manner in criticism of the Supreme Court, or advocating any change in the courts of this country?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Of course that was the intent of those who drafted the platform, and of those who adopted the platform.

There is no Member of this body who does not know that the great glory of the American judicial system is the independence of the courts. The independent judiciary was the greatest advance in the history of government, and it has been one of our great prides that it has been protected in the United States, and that it is the ideal of our people.

INDEPENDENT JUDICIARY ESSENTIAL

Mr. President, I suppose there is no great statesman of our country who has not at one time or another declared his belief in the independence of the courts. In the same month in which the Declaration of Independence was signed, Thomas Jefferson wrote a letter to the distinguished George Wythe, of Virginia, from which I wish to read an extract. It was dated July 1776 and reads:

> The dignity and stability of government in all its branches, the morals of the people, and every blessing of society, depends so much upon an upright and skillful administration of justice that the judicial power ought to be distinct from both the legislature and executive, and independent upon both, that so it may be a check upon both, as both should be checks upon that. The judges, therefore, should always be men of learning and experience in the laws, of exemplary morals, great patience, calmness, and attention; their minds should not be distracted with jarring interests; they should not be dependent upon any man or body of men. To these ends they should hold estates for life in their offices, or, in other words, their commissions should be during good behavior, and their salaries ascertained and established by law.
> For misbehavior, the grand inquest of the colony, the house of representatives, should impeach them before the Governor and council, when they should have time and opportunity to make their defense; but if convicted, should be removed from their offices and subjected to such other punishment as shall be thought proper.

Every law student who remembers his Blackstone remembers the lectures of that distinguished British jurist and his pronouncement upon this subject. I quote from Blackstone's Commentaries, volume 1, chapter 7, page 268:

> In this distinct and separate existence of the judicial power in a peculiar body of men, nominated indeed, but not removable at pleasure, by the crown, consists one main preservative of the public liberty; which cannot subsist long in any state unless the administration of common justice be in some degree separated from the legislative and also from the executive power. Were it joined with the legislative, the life, liberty, and property of the subject would be in the hands of arbitrary judges, whose decisions would be then regulated only by their own opinions, and not by any fundamental principles of law; which, though legislators may depart from, yet judges are bound to observe. Were it joined with the executive, this union might soon be an overbalance for the legislative. For which reason, by the statute of 16 Car. I., c. 10, which abolished the court of star chamber, effectual care is taken to remove all judicial power out of the hands of the King's privy council, who, as then was evident from recent instances, might soon be inclined to pronounce that for law which was most agreeable to the prince or his officers. Nothing, therefore, is more to be avoided, in a free constitution, than uniting the provinces of a judge and a minister of state.

I read, also from Kent's Commentaries on American Law, 12th edition, volume 1, pages 294 and 295:

> In monarchial governments, the independence of the judiciary is essential to guard the rights of the subject from the injustice of the crown; but in republics it is equally salutary, in protecting the constitution and laws from the encroachments and the tyranny of faction. Laws, however wholesome or necessary, are frequently the object of temporary aversion, and sometimes of popular resistance. It is requisite that the courts of justice should be able, at all times, to present a determined countenance against all licentious acts; and to deal impartially and truly, according to law, between suitors of every description, whether the cause, the question, or the party be popular or unpopular. To give them the courage and the firmness to do it, the judges ought to be confident of the security of their salaries and station. Nor is an independent judiciary less useful as a check upon the legislative power, which is sometimes disposed, from the force of party, or the temptations of interest, to make a sacrifice of constitutional rights; and it is a wise and necessary principle of our Government, as will be shown hereafter in the course of these lectures, that legislative acts are subject to the severe scrutiny and impartial interpretation of the courts of justice, who are bound to regard the Constitution as the paramount law, and the highest evidence of the will of the people.

The object of the creation of the independent judiciary—and I could quote at length from the distinguished statesmen of the past—was to preserve the individual citizen from the power of the Government. That is the purpose of the independent judiciary, to make the judges free of the executive arm so that there may be no danger of a miscarriage, so that there may be no danger that the executive arm of the Government may impose its will in decision of cases. But now we have a bill before us which tears this principle down and tends to make the judiciary the agent of the Government. Do you wonder I call it revolutionary?

Mr. President, are we free from the danger of too much government? I think perhaps that Senators who think we are, are unmindful of some of the conditions which now exist.

I hold here a part of the report of the President's committee on administrative management, the report which has been committed to the Joint Committee on Reorganization of the Government, and here on page 55 I find a table of Federal governmental corporations under Federal or State charters, the majority of whose stock owned by the United States, and no member of whose board of directors is elected by private interests, showing that there are now 93 separate Federal corporations, some of them created by law, some of them created by Executive order without knowledge of Congress, some of them organized in the District of Columbia, some of them organized in the State of Delaware, some of them organized in the State of New York, and all of them dealing with matters which are of the most fundamental interest to the plain citizens of the United States, and the Congress of the United States, the representatives of the people, exercise no authority over what they do except to appropriate funds for their support.

These corporations have done a great service. They were a necessary creation, no doubt; they were a necessary agency. Some of them were created long before this administration came into power. But they are corporations and are run by their directors or by the authority set up in the charters, and thousands and thousands and thousands of the plain citizens of the United States who have borrowed money from them, or who deal with them, whose affairs are handled by them, are vitally interested in what they do. Most of them are administered centrally from Washington.

Understand, Senators, I am not complaining about them. I am but reciting the fact that there are now 93 such corporations, handling the most important affairs of the people of this country. I am pointing out that we have the consolidation of economic power and of the Government power in Washington. We have been creating big Government, a Government so vast that it is already almost beyond conception.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I shall be glad to yield to the Senator.

Mr. KING. Does the Senator know that in 60 percent of all the litigation in the Federal courts the Government is a party on one side or the other, and that in 40 percent of all the cases in the Supreme Court the Federal Government is either the plaintiff or the defendant? Therefore the courts are indispensable, apparently, for the protection of the rights of the people.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, the Senator from Utah is quite right. Certainly almost 50 percent of all the litigation that comes before the Federal courts is litigation in which the Government of the United States is a party, and here we propose to concentrate the power in the Government to control that litigation and to switch the judges here and there. The humblest citizens of the country will be affected.

Mr. President, have we lost our comprehension of the importance of free principles in a republic that we are willing here to create this big Government to take the place of big business.

I shall not here undertake to read the entire list of these corporations. Some of them I say, like the regional agricultural corporations and the R. F. C., were created before the present administration came into power. The United States Government acquired its interest in the Panama Canal Railroad Co. long before the New Deal. The United States Government acquired its interest in the Alaska Railroad long before the New Deal. I am not talking about what this administration has done. I am talking about a tendency which has been discernible for a generation to concentrate power in the Government.

I know, if I know anything, that this Republic is a Republic of free men and of free women. I know, if I know anything, that the ideals of the Constitution, the anniversary of which we will celebrate on the 17th of September next, are ideals intended to protect the individual citizen from concentrated power in any form. De we not know that the tendency toward the authoritarian state is to be seen in every quarter of the globe. Are we so naive as to imagine that we are free from these influences, that they will not exert themselves here?

Mr. President, the record shows that they have asserted themselves here.

I ask unanimous consent that there may be incorporated in my remarks at this point a list of all of these corporations showing how they came into existence.

Mr. POPE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I shall be very glad to.

Mr. POPE. Does the Senator ask for unanimous consent to introduce that into the RECORD?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I shall be very glad to read it.

Mr. POPE. I just wanted to say that I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I thought the Senator would withdraw his objection.

Mr. POPE. I have never raised an objection to unanimous consent to introduce anything into the RECORD or to introduce a bill.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I want it noted that that was a question.

The matter referred to is as follows:

GOVERNMENT CORPORATIONS

(Source: Government Corporations and Independent Supervisory Agencies, by Herbert Emmerich in the Problems of Administrative Management published by the President's Committee on Administrative Management)

Government corporations are distinguished broadly as Federal business corporations and Federal governmental corporations. Federal business corporations are those "which are federally chartered and in which private rights are represented by stock ownership and board representation" (p. 50). There are 13,999 of these corporations, such as 5,374 national banks, 5,028 national farm-loan associations, etc. Federal governmental corporations are those which are incorporated under Federal or State charters and which are federally owned and controlled. There are 93 of these corporations, which are listed on page 55 of the study. Exhibit 3, page 56, lists the corporations under their supervisory agencies and the instances of the parent and subsidiary corporations.

The following is a list of the Federal governmental corporations with the authority for their creation, compiled from information obtained from the United States Government Manual, 1937, and from various agencies.

Regional agricultural credit corporations: The Emergency Relief and Construction Act of 1932 authorized the R. F. C. to create these corporations in any of the 12 Federal land bank districts.

Federal Farm Mortgage Corporation: Established under the authority of the Federal Farm Mortgage Corporation Act (Pub., 88, 73d Cong.).

Home Owners' Loan Corporation: Created by the Home Owners' Loan Act of 1933.

Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corporation: Created by title IV of the National Housing Act.

Tennessee Valley Authority: Created by Public Act No. 17, Seventy-third Congress. The President, by Executive Orders Nos. 6161 and 6162 of June 8, 1933, delegated to the directors of the Authority certain powers granted to him by the act.

Reconstruction Finance Corporation: Established by Public Act No. 2, Seventy-second Congress.

R. F. C. Mortgage Co.: Public Act No. 1, Seventy-fourth Congress, authorizes the R. F. C., with the approval of the President, to "subscribe for or make loans upon the nonassessable stock of any class of any national mortgage association organized under title III of the National Housing Act and of any mortgage loan company, trust company, savings and loan association, or other similar financial institution * * *." Pursuant to this authority, the R. F. C. has subscribed to $10,000,000 of the capital stock of the R. F. C. Mortgage Co., which was organized under the laws of Maryland on March 14, 1935.

Commodity Credit Corporation: Created under laws of Delaware October 17, 1933, pursuant to Executive Order 6340 of October 16, 1933. Section 7 of Public Act No. 1, Seventy-fourth Congress, ratifies the organization of the Commodity Credit Corporation.

Electric Home and Farm Authority: Incorporated under the laws of the District of Columbia August 1, 1935, to succeed Electric Home and Farm Authority, Inc., a corporation organized under the laws of Delaware January 17, 1934, pursuant to Executive Order 6514, issued under authority of the act of June 16, 1933. Executive Order 7139, August 12, 1935, designated the Authority as an agency of the United States. Public, 484, Seventy-fourth Congress; Public, 2, Seventy-fifth Congress, authorized the continuance of the Authority as an agency of the United States.

Export-Import Bank of Washington: Organized as a District of Columbia banking corporation by Executive Order 6581 February 2, 1934, pursuant to Public, No. 67, Seventy-third Congress.

Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation: Organized under the Banking Act of 1933, Public, No. 66, Seventy-third Congress.

Federal Prison Industries, Inc.: Created by Executive Order 6917, December 11, 1934, under authority of Public, No. 461, Seventy-third Congress.

Federal Surplus Commodities Corporation: Formed as the Federal Surplus Relief Corporation under laws of Delaware October 4, 1933. Name changed to Federal Surplus Commodities Corporation at meeting of the board of directors November 18, 1935.

National Academy of Sciences: Established by an act approved by President Lincoln March 3, 1863.

United States Housing Corporation: Established by Executive Order 2889 June 18, 1918, pursuant to the authority of the act of May 16, 1918.

Panama Railroad Co.: Purchased pursuant to the act of June 28, 1902.

Inland Waterways Corporation: Incorporated under the authority of the act of June 3, 1924.

War Finance Corporation: Created by act of April 5, 1918.

Warrior River Terminal Co.: Purchased by the Inland Waterways Corporation in 1926 under the authority of the act of June 3, 1924.

United States Shipping Board Merchant Fleet Corporation: The United States Shipping Board Emergency Fleet Corporation was created by the United States Shipping Board under the authority of the act of September 7, 1916. The name was changed to the United States Shipping Board Merchant Fleet Corporation by the act of February 11, 1927. The functions of the Corporation were transferred to the Commerce Department by the Executive order of June 10, 1933, and subsequently to the Maritime Commission by the act of June 29, 1936.

Rural Rehabilitation Corporations: Grants for rural rehabilitation were made to governors of States pursuant to the Federal Emergency Relief Act of 1933 and the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1935 on the condition that corporations in the States would be formed. After the Resettlement Administration was created in 1935 it became the managing agency of the corporations, a majority of which are now dormant.

Federal Subsistence Homestead Corporations: Executive Order No. 6209, July 21, 1933, pursuant to section 208 of the National Industrial Recovery Act, designated the Secretary of the Interior as the agency for administering the fund provided. By an administrative order of the Secretary, a Delaware corporation was created which in turn became the parent of corporations organized for the individual projects. After January 1934 the activities of the corporations were gradually absorbed into the regular Federal operation so that now the corporations are dormant.

Public Works Emergency Housing Corporation: Incorporated under the laws of Delaware pursuant to Executive Order No. 6470, November 29, 1933. The corporation never functioned and was dissolved by declaration of the incorporators. No stock was ever issued.

Alaska Railroad: Authorized under the acts of August 24, 1912, and March 12, 1914.

Virgin Islands Co.: Incorporated under a charter granted by the Colonial Council, April 9, 1934. Under the authority of title II of the National Industrial Recovery Act $1,000,000 was granted to the company.

Tennessee Valley Associated Cooperatives, Inc.: Incorporated under the laws of Tennessee through the authority granted by the Federal Emergency Relief Act of 1933.

Public Works Emergency Leasing Corporation: Incorporated under the authority granted by section 203 (a) (3) of the National Industrial Recovery Act. The corporation has been dissolved.

THE ARGUMENT OF THE PROPONENTS

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, before I take my seat I want to make a brief allusion to the argument which has been made to date. Of what does it consist? First, the courts have usurped legislative power. That is the burden of the talk.

Second, other administrations have packed the Court before, and therefore we may do it.

Let us now examine these arguments. The courts have usurped legislative power; therefore let us pass this substitute. Wherein does this substitute prevent the usurpation of legislative power? The appointing authority can have no contract with any judge whose nomination is sent down here that he will hold in a particular case in a particular way. When a justice is appointed, when his name has been sent to the Senate, and his nomination has been confirmed, and he goes upon the bench, he may decide any way he chooses. No court could probably stay packed very long.

I remember very well the story that was told during the hearing on the original bill before the Judiciary Committee about the appointment of Justice Oliver Wendell Holmes to the Supreme Court of the United States. His name was submitted to the President, Theodore Roosevelt, by the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts, the grandfather of the present junior Senator from Massachusetts who sits upon the other side—Henry Cabot Lodge. I am told there is a letter in existence from Theodore Roosevelt to Senator Lodge saying that he wanted to be sure that Justice Holmes' mind went along with his, so Justice Holmes was invited to the White House. He spent a night or two there, and he received his nomination, and went on the Supreme Court. The great President was engaged upon his campaign of trust "busting", and the Northern Securities case arose. Mr. Justice Holmes sat upon the case and wrote a dissenting opinion against the Government. He decided exactly contrary to the manner in which the President who appointed him thought he should have decided. Then some person, speaking to Theodore Roosevelt, asked, "What do you think of Justice Holmes now?" Mr. Roosevelt replied, "I could whittle a better Justice out of a carrot." [Laughter.]

There can be no contract with any justice that he will hold any particular way or that his interpretation of the Constitution will be the interpretation that is desired. Mr. President, is it not obvious that the only way to prevent the Justices of the Supreme Court overruling acts of Congress is by a constitutional amendment to withdraw the power from them or to limit the power?

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I yield to the Senator from Idaho for a question.

Mr. BORAH. Does the Senator recall that in the noted case of McCulloch against Maryland and the case of Cohens against Virginia a majority of the Court at that time, which was composed of members appointed by Jefferson and Madison, rendered an opinion in harmony with the views of Marshall, although they were appointed by Presidents who held the very reverse of those views?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. The Senator from Idaho is quite accurate. The facts he cites emphasize the point I am endeavoring to make, which is simply that the bill presented to us would not necessarily accomplish the purpose for which it is presented or, at least, not for long. Why, then, should we go further with it?

Then, Mr. President, there is the argument that others have packed the Court; others have sinned; therefore we have the right to sin. What sort of an argument is that? What sort of reasoning is that on which to present to the American people a revolutionary change in our administration of justice, that others have committed this wrong?

Senators say that Jefferson attacked the judiciary, and he did; there can be no question of that. I wish to call the attention of the Senate before I close to an instance in the history of Jefferson's fight upon the judiciary. The distinguished Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. GUFFEY] spoke about Justice Chase and his impeachment. When that reference was made my mind went back to the circumstances which existed at that time. The impeachment of Chase was provoked by a long series of what I regard outrageous offenses, outrageous infractions of the decorum which ought to clothe the Bench.

Justice Chase, while still a member of the Supreme Court, was openly engaged in electioneering against Jefferson, and even after the election he continued his political activities; and when the grand jury was assembled in Baltimore, in giving a charge to the grand jury, he delivered what amounted to a political harangue denouncing the Government. His conduct was outrageous. The President had great provocation. He and his friends believed that such a Justice should not sit upon the bench, and I believe they were right. So they undertook to remove him by impeachment. The trial took place in the Senate Chamber in a Senate composed of 34 Members, every one of whom participated in the vote, and only 9 of the 34 Members were Federalists. In other words, Jefferson in 1805 had a majority in the Senate of the United States comparable to the majority which the Democratic Party now has in this body. There was provocation, there was reason, and the charges were brought. What happened? By a Senate in which there were 25 Jeffersonians and only 9 Federalists, Justice Chase was acquitted. On some of the charges there was a unanimous vote of acquittal on the part of the 34 Senators, and on only one of the eight charges were there so many as 19 votes cast for conviction. The Jeffersonian Senate acquitted the Justice. Let me say to my distinguished friend the Senator from Nevada [Mr. McCARRAN] and my distinguished friend the senior Senator from Indiana [Mr. VAN NUYS], and to any other Democratic Senators who will be up for reelection in 1938, that the record shows that of the six men who voted against their President on the most serious charge in the impeachment proceedings, John Smith, of New York, came back; Stephen R. Bradley, of Vermont, came back; and John Gaillard, of South Carolina, came back and remained a Member of the Senate for more than 20 years after that vote was cast.

The Jeffersonian Senate of 1805 believed in the independence of the judiciary; the Jeffersonian Senate of 1805 believed, in the face of great provocation, that the way to correct abuses in the judiciary is not to pull the judiciary down but to build it up. So they acquitted Justice Chase; and, Mr. President, I make the prediction that this bill will never pass by the votes of Democrats.

Mr. BAILEY obtained the floor.

Mr. GERRY. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Clark	Johnson, Colo.	Pittman
Andrews	Connally	King	Pope
Ashurst	Copeland	La Follette	Radcliffe
Austin	Davis	Lee	Reynolds
Bailey	Dieterich	Lewis	Robinson
Bankhead	Donahey	Lodge	Russell
Barkley	Duffy	Logan	Schwartz
Berry	Ellender	Lonergan	Schwellenbach
Bilbo	Frazier	Lundeen	Sheppard
Black	George	McAdoo	Shipstead
Bone	Gerry	McCarran	Smith
Borah	Gibson	McGill	Steiwer
Bridges	Gillette	McKellar	Thomas, Utah
Brown, Mich.	Green	McNary	Townsend
Brown, N. H.	Guffey	Maloney	Truman
Bulkley	Hale	Minton	Tydings
Bulow	Harrison	Moore	Vandenberg
Burke	Hatch	Murray	Van Nuys
Byrd	Herring	Neely	Wagner
Byrnes	Hitchcock	Nye	Walsh
Capper	Holt	O'Mahoney	Wheeler
Caraway	Hughes	Overton	White
Chavez	Johnson, Calif.	Pepper

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Ninety-one Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

LUCILLE M'CLURE

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SCHWELLENBACH in the chair) laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 707) for the relief of Lucille McClure.

Mr. BAILEY. I move that the Senate disagree to the amendment of the House, request a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Presiding Officer appointed Mr. BAILEY, Mr. LOGAN, and Mr. WHITE conferees on the part of the Senate.

REORGANIZATION OF FEDERAL JUDICIARY

The Senate resumed consideration of the bill (S. 1392) to reorganize the judicial branch of the Government.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I would not wish to begin without offering profound thanks to the distinguished senior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY] for his remarkably powerful and eloquent exposition of the amendment in the nature of a substitute now before us. I believe all Senators, and I would venture to believe that all Americans, join me in an expression of appreciation and gratitude to him for his searching exposition of the proposed legislation, for an exposition so clear and, I regret to say, so new, and yet at the same time so absolutely true.

There must be from this time forward new thinking on the substitute. Probably the Senator from Wyoming has served the purpose of a committee hearing. At any rate we know now the character of the legislation, and we owe it to him that we know it. The deep damnation of it all stands before us, stands before the American people, and welcomes, or at any rate invites, the same condemnation that was bestowed by millions of our fellow citizens upon the original bill.

I am very grateful to the Senator from Wyoming. I honor him. I am cheered by the thought that notwithstanding there may come times of perplexity and confusion, occasions in our land have never failed to produce men who were equal to them. I think the Senator from Wyoming gave indubitable proof of that in the amazing address which he has just delivered.

THE GRAVITY OF THE ISSUE

Mr. President, in the matter of the proposed legislation we are concerned with the highest aspects of our Government. We are dealing with one of the three branches of the structure of our Republic among which all its powers and functions are distributed. We are dealing with the judicial branch. We are dealing with the source of justice to the individual and in the national life. We are dealing with the means of determining the meaning of the Constitution which is a covenant made, not by the Congress, but by the people, the bond of the Union, the source of the national existence.

We are dealing with the powers of the Congress, with the powers of the States, with the rights of the people, and we are dealing with the indispensable means of the maintenance of those rights. We are dealing with the meaning of due process of law that underlies the liberties of man. We are dealing with the taxing power which is the power to destroy. We are dealing with the significance of the general-welfare clause. In dealing with this legislation, my fellow Senators, we are dealing with the soul of the American Republic.

We are dealing with an institution, the judicial system, at the head of which stands the Supreme Court of the United States. We are dealing with the only means of justice to a great and numerous people whose greatest interest is justice; and justice, we must bear in mind, is the highest function of government and the most essential to the existence of government.

We are dealing with the institution which has been now, for nearly a century and a half, the pride and glory of America, which has served throughout 15 decades with marked acceptation, which has commanded the respect and confidence of all good citizens here, and has won the admiration of the enlightened in all the nations of the earth as a special contribution to the victorious progress of mankind.

We are dealing with that branch of our Government which is most helpless, which is indeed utterly helpless, the relation of which to the national life is at once of the utmost importance and the utmost delicacy. It is ours to destroy if we will. It is ours to preserve if we will. We will either exalt it now or we will bring it low.

I have said that the judicial branch of the Government is utterly helpless. The President has power, great power, and the present President has greater power than any of his predecessors. Congress still has great power. But our courts have no power other than the power of justice and a great people's confidence. Our courts cannot even defend themselves.

They cannot even speak for themselves. They have no means to repel attack. I know of no better statement on this subject than that of the Court itself in the notable case of United States v. Lee (106 U. S. 196):

> While by the Constitution the judicial department is recognized as one of the three great branches among which all the powers and functions of the Government are distributed, it is inherently the weakest of them all. Dependent as its courts are for the enforcement of their judgments upon officers appointed by the Executive, and removable at his pleasure, with no patronage and no control of the purse or the sword, their power and influence rests solely upon the public sense of the necessity for the existence of a tribunal to which all may appeal for the assertion and protection of rights guaranteed by the Constitution and by the laws of the land, and on the confidence reposed in the soundness of their decisions and the purity of their motives. From such a tribunal no well-founded fear can be entertained of injustice to the Government or of a purpose to obstruct or diminish its just authority.

These considerations have been submitted at the beginning because they have moved me to say that never before has the Congress had to deal so seriously with matters of such high import and such grave consequence; and if ever we are to summon power from unseen sources to rise to our best, to bring out the noblest within ourselves, now is the occasion. If there are times when men rise above themselves, surely this occasion must be one of them. In dealing with a matter so high we must reject low impulses, bitter feelings, harsh judgments, ordinary considerations, selfish motives. We must spurn appeals to prejudice. We must rise to the heights upon which justice dwells.

And in dealing with our own power, its source and extent, we must be faithful to our trust and not abuse it. In this proposed legislation we are dealing with the terms and the limitations of our own power, and we are dealing under a great trust.

In dealing with justice, we must be just.

JUSTICE OF THE HIGHEST IMPORT

Coming down Pennsylvania Avenue from the place of my residence to this Chamber morning after morning, I pass by a new building, and never fail to read the inscription thereon. It is on the face of the new building of the Department of Justice, and the inscription reads:

The place of justice is a hallowed place.

The place of justice is a holy place; and I am saying that, my fellow Senators, because so often lately I hear men say that there is nothing sacred about the Constitution; there is nothing sacred about our courts. But if that inscription, placed there by the authority of the United States, is true, and if that inscription is worthy to be there, it should remind not only the passer-by but the Senator as well, President and Attorney General, mighty power and humble litigant, that there are holy things in the national life—and that the place of justice is one of them.

When we lay our hands upon the sources of justice, when we deal with the institutions out of which, by the evolution of the race and under the guidance of a kindly Providence, a system has been established from which we expect justice to come, let us remember that our Government itself reminds its citizens on the face of the great Department of Justice building, as they go by the door down the street on business or as they go within its portals to deal with those who minister there, that "the place of justice is a hallowed place."

You and I, my fellow Senators, in this great debate and in the matter of this legislation, are dealing with hallowed things, with holy things—not only with the meaning of the Constitution, not only with the organization of the courts, but with the rights of citizens against their Government, with the fountain springs out of which the lifeblood of the Government flows; for the lifeblood of your Government is not wisdom, and it is not reason, and it is not politics, and it is not money, and it is not taxes.

The life-blood of the Republic is the justice that flows through its processes, and by means of its courts, out into the relationship and the life of those who dwell under its ægis.

Wisdom may come of men, and reason may come by way of learning and of training, but righteousness and justice are the gift of God. Questions of policy may be resolved by the brain of men, and those who attack a government may be repelled by armed force, but those who seek justice must be mindful that justice is the endowment of the good God to His chosen and noblest creatures.

So, Mr. President, I approach this subject with a great sense of awe and a deep sense of humility, and I sometimes think with a too terrible earnestness, but before I shall have finished, today and tomorrow, I hope I shall be able to show, and without offense at least to you who hear me, why I am so terribly in earnest in the matter of the pending legislation.

THE SUBSTITUTE IS NO COMPROMISE

It becomes me first in the discussion to speak briefly of the difference between the pending substitute and the original bill.

As I said just now, I am grateful to the senior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY] for his magnificent exposition of the substitute. It relieves me of the necessity of discussing it at length, but I am going to undertake to maintain very briefly one proposition concerning the two measures. They are the same in principle. They are the same in consequence. They are the same in degree. The substitute does not constitute a compromise.

What is the principle? The principle is the principle of enabling half of the Government, or the political two-thirds, Congress and the President, to add Justices to the Supreme Court, in the instance of the Supreme Court, and the judges to the lower courts, not in aid of the courts, confessedly not in aid of the courts, not because judges are old, not because dockets are congested, but to add them in order to affect judicial determination. My statement will not be gainsaid with respect to either point. That is the principle.

Now let us look at the consequence. It is said that to do it in the little way and year by year will not be such a grave matter. Commit murder on that theory, by slow poison or swift assassination, and see how quickly you get electrocuted. The consequence is the consequence of erecting the political power over the judicial. The consequence is the consequence of using powers which we technically have to accomplish things which the Constitution forbids our doing. Senators cannot avoid that; they cannot escape that. The American people know that. Pretext hides nothing; pretext deceives no one now. If I thought there were a man in the United States who did not understand this, I would be willing to prolong the debate until he did. All that would be necessary would be for him to hear such a speech as was made in here this afternoon by the senior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY].

I shall go into all the consequences in the course of my argument; but I wish now to come to the degrees. Now hear me. What is the background of the original proposal? Why were six Judges called for in the original bill? Simply because 6 and 3 make 9; that is all. The theory of the original proposal was that there were three Justices on the Supreme Bench who were satisfactory. I need not call their names. In the debate here the names have been called over and over again. One of them—and I honor him—is 80 years of age. He is satisfactory. His dissenting opinions are pleasing to gentlemen. Six and three make nine, and the theory behind the original bill was, "We will get the 6 in addition to the 3, and have 15 Judges, and 9 Judges are 60 percent of 15, and that is the control of the Court." It is as simple as that.

Now we come to the pending substitute. There is one vacancy and the substitute was drawn since that vacancy occurred. That is one Justice to be appointed. If the bill passes, an additional Judge may be appointed for this year. That is two. An additional Judge may be appointed in January 1938, less than 6 months off. That is three. Three and three make six, and the total number of Judges is 10, and 6 is 60 percent of 10. Control again, in the same ratio, in the same percentage. I said there was no difference in degree. Each measure contemplates 60 percent of the Supreme Court.

The consequence is the same, the principle is the same, the objective is the same, the degree is the same. I am not impugning the motives of anyone; I am not reflecting upon anyone. It may all have been a strange coincidence; and there are strange coincidences, as those who happen to go to the movies and see the "Believe it or not" pictures understand. Believe it or not, the pending substitute provides the same control over the Supreme Court the original bill provided, 60 percent of the Judges at no distant date but within 6 months.

I do not think I will at this time take the time to go into the other features, except for just a moment to refer to the lower courts. In that respect the bills are alike, except the substitute provides for 20 judges instead of 50. They both provide that without any special reason, and upon the will of the Chief Justice, whoever he might be, a judge in Maine could be assigned to try a case in North Carolina, far from his people, and go back to Maine and settle the case at his pleasure outside of the term. I, being a defendant in an action in a Federal court, could not have a judge who knew me or whom I knew, could not have a judge who ever breathed the air of my State, but there could be a judge upon whom the hand of the Government had been laid to try a Government case, requiring me, an American citizen, to submit myself to a court like that. The Government would select its judges. The proponents of the bill thought so much of that provision that they put it into the substitute.

Again I say I am not impugning motives; I am stating facts. I have but one conclusion to make about it; the amendment in the nature of a substitute is not a compromise. You may call it anything else you please, it has every vice of the original bill and would lead to every consequence that would follow the original bill. If the original bill, as I think, would have destroyed the American people's respect for their system of justice, the substitute will do no less.

WE CANNOT COMPROMISE PRINCIPLE

I have something to say about the matter of compromise. Even if it were a compromise, even if it were a compromise to accomplish slowly what was first undertaken to be accomplished at once, it must be said honorable men can make no compromise of a principle. Compromise of a principle is a betrayal of the principle.

So far as I am concerned, no compromise can be accepted that is tainted with any implication of congressional or Presidential or special control of the judiciary or its determinations. We will accept no compromise that does not leave the courts of our land as independent as they are at this moment, as independent as they have been these 150 years of respect, of honor, and of glory. I am not going into all this talk about filibuster. I must express a profound regret that at the outset, while the proponents of the bill had the floor, not we, the Senate was adjusted to the situation of a filibuster, and debate limited even before we were heard and before the bill had ever been exposed to the people or to the Senate. That is all right; that may be within the rules; that may be the new way in America and the new way in the Senate. It speaks for itself, and it charts our course.

We are here, Mr. President, and we are going to be heard, and we are going to prolong the debate until the American people understand what is on foot and the reason why we stand as we do stand. If that takes all summer, we may take the motto of Ulysses Grant and "fight it out on this line if it takes all summer." We intend that the truth shall be told and that the American people shall be informed.

Mr. President, I am now going to take up my argument by way of a number of contentions which I shall undertake to support by facts and by reason.

THE PURPOSE OF THE LEGISLATION

We contend, first, that the purpose and effect of the proposed legislation is to affirm and exert the power of the legislative and executive branches of the Government of our Republic to control the judicial branch with the view to shaping judicial determinations.

That is the contention. I intend to argue it on the facts. I leave the determination to you. Is it true or is it not? In the first place, is it denied? I have heard in the debate here a sort of a half-and-half denial; sometimes a little talk about aged Justices, but always winding up with criticism of the Court; sometimes a little talk about men needing assistance, but always by way of intimating that we need to validate legislation.

I know how the legislation started. You do also. The President's message put the legislation on the basis of congested dockets and aged Justices. Could he maintain it—even the President—could he maintain his proposition? He did not. To be sure, he would have maintained it if he could have done so; but in that very message he said that if you will follow the outlines and carry out the purposes of this bill you will make it unnecessary to amend the Constitution. Here are the words:

If these measures [recommended] achieve their aim—

That is the aim. If a bullet placed in a rifle strikes the bull's-eye, "we may be relieved of the necessity of considering any fundamental changes in the powers of the courts or the Constitution." So that was the aim—to be relieved of the necessity of considering any changes in the fundamental power of either Court or Constitution.

But, of course, that is not by any means the whole story. We are all familiar with the evidence. I do not have to refer to the documents. We know that the President was misled by someone—we do not know by whom, and we do not criticize him on that account—when he was informed that the Court was behind in its work and in need of assistance. But all that was refuted at once by the report of the Attorney General of the United States filed just a year ago. The Court was current with its work. The Court was up with its work.

In his message of February 5 the President stated his aim. In his message of January 6 he made the suggestion of accommodating the Court to what he conceived to be the needs of the time. Agree that he may have been right, that there were different needs. I am not driving at that. I am saying that the purpose of the bill was to accommodate the Court to the President's conceptions and purposes, and that that is wrong.

Then on March 4 came the Victory Dinner speech, which I have here. I should like to go through just a little of the speech, printed in the Appendix of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD on page 422. The President, speaking to his party in behalf of this legislation, used these words:

For as yet there is no definite assurance that the three-horse team of the American system of Government will pull together.

Senators, get the picture. The Court has to pull his way and the way of the Congress. That is the idea. When, before, did courts get to pulling? Courts find the truth. Courts declare the law. Nobody rides in a buggy behind the courts. Courts are not hitched up. Courts heretofore have been free and independent. Here is a three-horse team with the Court all hitched up, but the Court is not pulling.

If three well-matched horses are put to the task of plowing up a field where the going is heavy, and the team of three pull as one, the field will be plowed.

I think that is true.

If one horse lies down in the traces or plunges off in another direction, the field will not be plowed.

That is true also. But here is another thing: The Supreme Court is a court. It is not anything like a horse. There is no analogy between a court and a horse. It is an illustration which does not illustrate the case, but it illustrates the conception here. The conception here is that we ought to have a Court which will construe the Constitution and pull the way the other two horses are pulling. You can call the Congress a horse if you want to, and you can call the Executive a horse if you want to. Now, the Court has to pull the way they want it to pull, and if we want power, they have to give us the power. Remember to what all this is addressed. It is addressed to the proof of my statement that the purpose of this legislation is to control and direct the judiciary of the United States.

Again:

Furthermore, court injunctions have paralyzed the machinery which we created by the National Labor Relations Act to settle great disputes raging in the industrial field, and, indeed, to prevent them from ever arising. We hope that this act may yet escape final condemnation in the highest Court. But so far the attitude and language of the courts in relation to many other laws have made the legality of this act also uncertain and have encouraged corporations to defy rather than obey it.

Very well; you can make your criticisms of the Court, to be sure. It is a free country, free to the humblest as well as to the greatest. But when complaining in the matter of injunction, we are dealing with the equitable jurisdiction of the courts, and in the absence of assurance of wrong or of arbitrariness or willfulness it becomes you and me to reach no conclusion.

We are not going to deny injunctive relief in America. It is the only remedy whereby a citizen, whether great or small, prevents his Government or his fellow men from doing him an irreparable injury. If you take away the injunctive relief, or you affect it adversely to the great, you will affect it adversely to the small. So I am saying that if there is abuse there, there is a remedy by way of impeachment, and there is no other remedy. You cannot undertake by legislation or Presidential appointment to change the character of the judiciary in order to affect the administration of injunctive relief in equity.

I could read on:

> But I defy anyone to read the opinions concerning A. A. A., the Railroad Retirement Act, the National Recovery Act, the Guffey Coal Act, and the New York minimum-wage law, and tell us exactly what, if anything, we can do for the industrial worker in this session of Congress with any reasonable certainty that what we do will not be nullified as unconstitutional.

What is the idea? The President wants a Court that will make legislation to be proposed by him constitutional. I am saying that that discloses the purpose of the proposed legislation. It is a purpose to effect judicial determination, and I am saying that the Congress has no power to do that.

I quote further from the President's address:

> As Chief Executive and as head of the Democratic Party, I am unwilling to take those risks—to the country and to the party—of postponing one moment beyond absolute necessity the time when we can free from legal doubt those policies which offer a progressive solution of our problems.

That is the idea. He wants a Court that will "free from legal doubt" the policies which he espouses. Grant that the policies are good, grant that they ought to be enacted into law, grant that they ought to be constitutional, I deny the power of Congress or the President to create—I deny the righteousness of the effort to create—additional judges or change the judicial system in order to free prospective legislation from "legal doubt." If there is a legal doubt under the Constitution there is a way by which to resolve it, and that is by "a clarifying amendment" duly submitted to the people from whom the powers of the Congress and the President come, and without whose consent they cannot get additional power. This was the promise in our platform.

Mr. President, I could go on at great length along this line. I have before me the other speech delivered by the President over the radio in which there is great complaint about judicial opinions, but I do not think I have to go into that. We are all perfectly familiar with it. The whole complaint was not of the Court being behind in its work, not of the docket of the Court being congested, not of the judges being old; oh, no; all through that address to the American people was the complaint about judicial decisions and a desire for a different character of judicial decisions.

Is that all? Mr. President, the Attorney General went first to the radio and then came before the Committee on the Judiciary. He did not hesitate to argue that the justification of the bill was the necessity for a new type of mind on the Supreme Court of the United States. He did not like the opinions of the Court, and, therefore, he would change the Justices. That is what he says of the bill. And the Assistant Attorney General, Mr. Jackson—and I call him by name because there are several assistants—came before the committee and argued that because Congress was responsible for the organization and the maintenance of the judiciary, it was also responsible for its judicial determinations. A monstrous proposition! That is in the record, too.

Then the other Assistant Attorney General who has been the chief lobbyist around the Capitol to my certain knowledge from the outset was heard by the Senator from Montana in a debate to say that what we want is Judges whom we can trust. Nobody in America is distrusting the Judges on the Bench. We know they are men of character.

There is not one of us but would leave our children and our State to their care and keeping. That is not what the Assistant Attorney General was talking about. He meant to say that he and those working with him in the lobby to support this pending legislation and get it through wanted it put through in order that they might have on the Bench Justices whom they could trust to do their will and hold their acts constitutional. That is the situation and the proponents of the bill cannot get rid of it.

Senators here have argued to the same effect. I am going to come to that before I take my seat, but I have one piece of conclusive and overwhelming evidence. I think what I have stated is sufficient, but I have been astonished, Mr. President, that the President and some Senators have argued that the Democratic platform demanded a change in the Court in order to change its decisions. That is their interpretation of the platform. When we said the platform called for a constitutional amendment, they said, "Oh, no; the platform says that if we cannot get the legislation we desire validated as constitutional by legislative act, then we will submit an amendment." They want a legislative act to amend and change the character and constitution and decisions of the Court. That is their position with respect to the Democratic platform. That is what they say it means.

So I have proved my case, and all I would have to do before a jury of the proponents of this bill to prove that its purpose is to shape the Court in order to determine judicial decisions would be to read the platform, and let them interpret it according to the interpretation which they have given here.

Mr. President, if I have satisfied you that that is the purpose of the bill—and I do not think it can be gainsaid—I may be allowed to proceed to another contention.

I sum up by saying that in the months that have elapsed since the 5th day of February, when this matter came first before us, age, inadequacy, and tenacity of office, and congested dockets have disappeared like the figments of a dream. They do not now have the status even of pretext, and we all know, as the people of America know, that the object of this proposed legislation is to shape the judiciary in order to determine the judgments of courts. Concerning individuals? Yes; remember the reference to injunctions. Concerning the Constitution? Yes. Concerning the power of the President? Yes. Concerning the power of Congress? Yes. Concerning the rights of the States? Yes. All of those questions are involved.

The background of the legislation is complaint and attack upon the Court and its decisions.

OPPOSED TO THE CONSTITUTION

Very well. Then, if I have shown that this is the purpose of the proposed legislation, our second contention is that a proposal having such a purpose is beyond the constitutional power of the Congress or the President, or both together. It is beyond our constitutional power to legislate with the motive of shaping the courts, for the purpose of interpreting the Constitution to suit the President or Congress; and if this bill should pass, and I had to go before the Court, I do not think there would be serious question of showing its unconstitutionality on the basis of the exhibits that are in the record. I would read the message of the President sending down the draft of the legislation in which he said its aim was to eliminate the necessity for an amendment to the Constitution concerning the power of the Court or the Congress. I would read his speech of March 4, in which he said the necessity exists for this legislation, because we must have judges and we must have courts that will validate the acts which we have in mind.

I would read into the record the statement of the Attorney General and the statement of Mr. Jackson, the Assistant Attorney General; I would read the platform of the Democratic Party; I would read the interpretation of that platform given by the President and the interpretation of it given by the Senator from Kentucky; and I think I would have no difficulty in showing the Court that the purpose of the legislation was not to aid the Court, was not to perform a function of the Congress, but the purpose was to shape the Court and to take a part of the judicial power.

But I have another proposition. Even if we agree that the proposed legislation is within the letter of the Constitution—and I do not think there is any doubt about that—even if we agree that on the face of the Constitution the Congress has the power to destroy the Court or to impair it or to deprive it of means of support or to take away the marshals who would execute its judgments—even if we agree that we have the power, I undertake to assert that we have no moral right to do so. I undertake to go further and say that the moral law is higher than Constitution; it is higher than Congress; it is higher than President. The moral law is the law that underlies all law. It is the source of the spirit of the law.

Sometimes I think we forget, Mr. President, in the midst of our little statute making that we dwell under the moral law. There are restraints above constitutional restraints. Old Abraham, 6,000 years ago, confronted the Almighty himself and challenged him, "Shall not the judge of all the earth do right?" There is, in the conception of man at any rate, a moral restraint upon the Almighty himself. It may be recalled that the Almighty responded to the challenge of the humble son of the wilderness and the plain.

POWER AND RIGHT

Mr. President, there is a constitutional morality, and I thank heaven that I have a better witness than myself. I have a witness who was described here by the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. LOGAN] as, in his judgment, the noblest of all Americans—Woodrow Wilson. When the attention of the Senator from Kentucky was called to the fact that Woodrow Wilson pronounced this precise sort of legislation an assault upon constitutional morality, I was amazed that he undertook to avoid the situation by saying that the great President had "overspoken" himself.

Mr. President, those words were not the words of impulse. They were not the words of a man in politics. They were the words of a student of the Government writing his great book on Constitutional Government in America. Wilson never uttered more deliberate words in his life and he never made a better appeal to Democrats, to Americans, to Republicans, and all, than when he said this sort of thing is an "assault upon constitutional morality to be made impossible by the curses of public opinion."

I can become indignant. I plead in extenuation that Woodrow Wilson, not in the midst of the thing, but foreseeing it in the cloister of his study many years removed, was likewise indignant. He used the word "curse" and he used the word "outrage."

Mr. President, what are the powers of the Congress and the President concerning the judiciary? They are—

The power to fix the number of Justices; the power to fix salaries; the power to provide expense of administration; the power to provide marshals and clerks; the power to determine jurisdiction, leaving out just a small class with respect to the Supreme Court, the power to determine districts and circuits and their jurisdiction; and the President has the power to appoint, the Senate to confirm or reject.

What was the purpose? The purpose was to provide the American people with an independent system for the administration of justice, and whenever a particle of that power is used for any other purpose it is a violation of the Constitution and a violation of the moral law.

Mr. President, we have the power.

> O, it is excellent
> To have a giant's strength; but it is tyrannous
> To use it like a giant.

The same Constitution from which you and I derive these powers over the Court—now hear me—vests in the Court the judicial power. I want to dwell a moment on that word "vest."

In the Constitution it is recited that the executive power of this Government "shall be vested in the President." He has it. The other day when we passed a bill providing an appropriation for a world's fair in New York City we undertook to name the commissioners from the United States Government to that fair, the President vetoed the bill. Why? Because, as he said, Congress had encroached upon the executive power—and it had. He depended on that word "vest"—"the executive power is vested in me and not in you." He returned the bill to the Congress, and we reformed it.

The legislative power is vested in the Congress.

We know what that means. It is ours and no one else's. It cannot be taken away from us. We had to have the Supreme Court tell us about 2 years ago that we could not abdicate, either. Senators remember that. "The Congress cannot abdicate", said the Court. No, we cannot give it away even if we want to do so. It is vested in us, vested like a fee-simple title. It is vested in us and in us alone.

The Constitution vests the executive power in the President, vests the legislative power in the Congress, and vests the judicial power in the Supreme Court, and such other courts as the Congress shall ordain and establish.

Transgress that if you wish. Cross that line if you want to. Lay your hands upon the judicial power, undertake to create a court that will find the Constitution to mean what you want it to mean, or that will administer injunctive relief as you want it to do it, and I tell you that you have violated your oath of office. You have trespassed upon the judicial power. You have assumed the function of a judge of the judges. You have put yourselves above the courts and above the Constitution. You have invaded the judicial power in defiance of the fundamental law and the moral law.

If you place any other meaning on the word "vest", and say it does not mean that we get all legislative power, but it goes first here and then there, then you have dropped your Government into a twilight of meaninglessness. It is either all there, or it is not there at all. If you can cross the line a little way, one judge at a time, you can cross it all the way. If you can put one judge on the Court to affect a judicial determination, you can put a hundred there. Where is your judicial power then? Here, in us, and not there. Where are the powers of the Constitution? In us, not there, not in the Constitution.

Mr. President, I have just received a note suggesting that we may adjourn or recess at 4:30 o'clock. That is agreeable to me.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BAILEY. Yes.

Mr. ROBINSON. If the Senator will permit me to do so, I will say that I think we ought to continue until at least 5 o'clock.

Mr. BAILEY. Very well. I simply did not understand the message, and I did not think I could get through with my next contention in 10 minutes. I can do so by 5 o'clock.

A RUINOUS PRECEDENT

Mr. President, the next contention is that to enact legislation having for its purpose the control of the judicial branch, with the objective of shaping judicial determinations, sets a precedent the consequences of which are plain and inevitable. Now, let us see about that.

Among these consequences are, first, the destruction of the Constitution as an instrument on which the humblest individual may rely, to which one may go for refuge against all powers, including the powers of majorities, the powers of the Government itself.

I say that the plain consequence of this legislation, if the precedent is set, will be just that in the first instance.

I know Senators are saying that "we will do it this time, but it will never be done again." If that is your view about it, Senators, you ought to be ashamed to do it the first time.

The idea that you are something special, and that you can get away with this, and better men than you will come along and be ashamed to do it, will not go. This Congress sets the example to all the Congresses. How many times have we heard it argued here that "they did it under Grant, and therefore we can do it"? I am not conceding that it was done under Grant, but assume that it was done under President Grant. It is a precedent to be abhorred and hated, and we may be thankful that it has not been followed until now. But if we do it, how many will be rising up and saying, "Well, the great progressive Roosevelt administration did it; why cannot we do it? Why will not we do it?" And it may work the other way.

There is a great ebb and flow in politics, my friends. One type is in power today, and another tomorrow. We cannot tell what will happen. There is action and reaction. Multitudes cry "Hosannah!" today and "Crucify!" tomorrow. We do not know; but if we yield to the temptation here, under a leadership which we honor, and in causes which are dear to us—to some of us, at any rate—then what Senator or what Senate or what President may not reverse the whole process within the next decade? That is your precedent.

THE NATIONAL SENSE OF SECURITY

I said that the proposed action would result in the destruction of the Constitution as an instrument on which citizens may rely. Now, hear me, Senators: The Constitution now gives in itself and in the minds of the American people a sense of certainty. It has been the underlying law, the restraint upon Presidents and Congresses and courts, upon majorities and minorities, upon States and upon peoples, now for one century and a half. Sometimes we have not quite known just why we felt so secure in America. Sometimes it has been hard to convince people that our security was not dependent upon police, armies and navies, and political parties; but if we will look down into the hearts of the fathers before us and of ourselves as we are now and our children who are to come after us, we shall find that, after all, that sense of security rests upon the simple fact that there is a Constitution which declares constitutional rights, and which cannot be altered, which cannot be changed, save by the will and the consent of the people themselves; and that there are independent courts to declare it.

Let a hand be laid upon me tomorrow, and I can wrap the Constitution about myself, walk into the humblest court in the land, and demand that inquiry be made as to why I am detained. There is no jail for me because there is a Constitution. There were jails for better men. But if there were courts to hear me, and the courts were appointed by the political powers, Congress and President, what would the Constitution mean to me? What would liberty mean to me? I may be in the minority tomorrow. We do not know what may happen in our democracy. If it is going to survive, I will say to my friends, it is going to survive because of its restraints. I do not know what may happen, but tomorrow there might be 129,000,000 people against me. There might be armies, there might be navies, there might be Presidents, there might be Congresses, there might be legislatures, there might be all the political parties against me; but no man could lay his hand upon me, no man could disseize me of my property, no man could deprive me of my life or my liberty without the due process of law, which the Constitution demands, and which independent courts, and independent courts alone, must enforce and will maintain.

That is the stake here. Lay your hands upon the judiciary, and you lay your hands upon the rights of every American citizen; you disturb the security of every home in the land; you turn me over to the mob, and I am the victim of the majority.

I know of cases, I like to think of cases, illustrating what I have just said. Probably there may be people in the South who will not quite like the case I am about to mention, but I like it—that of the Negro boy tried down in Scottsboro, tried for the most offensive crime known to our people, without a friend on earth, and with much of evidence to convict him. The mighty power of a State tried him, and sentenced that his life be taken; but that humble Negro boy, with only the Constitution of the United States to defend him, finds his way to the Supreme Court, still independent, and the Supreme Court says to the great State of Alabama, "You did not try him according to due process of law. You must try him again. You cannot take his life." He is living now, and being tried again. Perhaps he is guilty. I do not know. Thank God, innocent or guilty, there is due process of law in this country at this time! I am saying that the moment political power lays its hands upon the courts and the Constitution, due process of law will be in jeopardy.

I think now of the home of Robert E. Lee.

This Washington of ours is rich in symbols. I go over to Arlington, and see those columns and that front porch on which our Southern chieftain walked, and where he made the great decision in which he threw the laurels of a lifetime at the feet of his Nation in order that he might serve his own State—a man who chose to dwell in the tents of Israel rather than the palaces of the mighty. I look forward from Arlington to the Tomb of the Unknown Soldier, and the little tombs that mark the graves of many valiant heroes. Across the Potomac is the mausoleum of Lincoln, the savior of the Union, the great emancipator of slaves. We Southern men honor him and love him. He is an inspiration to me as much as he is to any man who ever drew blood from the veins of a Federal soldier. I drew mine from the veins of a Confederate soldier, but I honor Lincoln. And then I look to the Washington Monument, and then to the dome of this Capitol.

Arlington was the possession of Mrs. Robert E. Lee. In those dark days they could not pay the taxes on the estate, and the estate was sold for taxes; and the Federal Government bought Arlington, the home of Lee. Robert E. Lee died without the benefit of the property, and Mrs. Lee died without the benefit of the property; but their son came on, and he came to the Supreme Court of the United States. He had the Constitution around about him. He had an independent Court. The Army which had conquered his great father was in possession of Arlington. He brought suit against the commander in charge. The United States Government made itself a party to the suit, and said, "You cannot sue the Government." The Supreme Court said, "Yes; you can sue the Government. The taxes were tendered in due time. It is not the fault of the Lees that they were not paid. The property must be restored." And Arlington is today a possession of this great Government, by purchase from the Lees, under the direction of the Supreme Court of the United States. What sort of a disposition of that case would have been made if the Government could have appointed Justices to find a judgment according to the contention of the Government?

There is certainty in the United States because of the Lee case. When I walk in Arlington I think about Lee; to be sure, I think about the honored dead all about me, and I think about the Unknown Soldier and all he represented, and Lincoln and Washington, but I drink deep, my fellow Senators, from the inspiration that Arlington is also a symbol of the rights of conquered men under the Constitution as declared by an independent judiciary, and the heroic dead who seem to sleep around Arlington are to me guardians of that independence!

After that Civil War, when men's minds were inflamed, and hate rather than reason ruled, a Civil Rights Act was passed, aimed at the States of Senators who sit all about me. The verdict of history now is that that Civil Rights Act would have destroyed the South, that Sherman's army and his march to the sea would have been a summer breeze compared with the overturning of our civilization, the destruction of all its standards and traditions, the social equality of the Negro and his dominance in a thousand counties. We were helpless. The bayoneted soldiers of the Federal Government were there to put the Negroes in power, and give them their so-called rights under that Civil Rights Act.

There was despair in the South. We did not dream of giving up at Gettysburg. We could retreat like men. We did not despair at Appomattox. We could rebuild a civilization; and we did. But when we saw the Federal Government, inspired, as we now think, by hate and prejudice and ignorance, undertake to impose upon us that humiliation, that disgrace, that ruin, that woe, our despair was overwhelming. But here was the Court; here was the Constitution. We were back in the Union, and the Court said that the Constitution was ours, and that the Congress had no power to determine the civil rights of our citizens, that that was a power in the States. And that ended the night. Today the South is what it is because of the Constitution and an independent court.

Suppose Congress had had charge of the courts then; suppose they had succeeded in adding six Justices or three Justices to determine that their acts were valid. I am saying to the Senate the South would have been a land of the abomination of desolation to this day. Thank God there was a Supreme Court. Thank God it was free. Thank God there was a Constitution. Thank God the truth of it could be declared.

Mr. President, there are other cases; there are a thousand. There were the Catholic Sisters in Oregon, when the State by a majority undertook to say that a Catholic could not send his children to a Catholic school, that the father who was faithful to his church and the mother who felt that her allegiance to her Redeemer was the greatest allegiance of all, could not control the education of their children. They came across the continent to the Supreme Court, and the Supreme Court said to the great people of Oregon:

> There is a Constitution. There are human rights. The father and the mother do control the child, and if they wish to send him to a Christian school conducted by their church, they may do it, the State to the contrary notwithstanding.

Now, cut your Court to suit your convenience. Put up a Court according to the will of the people of Oregon if you choose; have a referendum on the judiciary; throw it into politics; then what will become of your Christian education? What becomes of the relation of a father to his child and his church? I say this to Baptists and Methodists and Presbyterians and Lutherans and all others.

Mr. President, there is one race which has always and everywhere been persecuted. Its story is a story of courage and persistence the like of which the human race has never seen. That persecution has never yet ceased. That race has been driven by nation after nation into the ghetto; then following that has come the pogrom; then the dispersal, over and over again, generation upon generation. In the Holy Land, in Asia, in Italy, in Spain, in France, in Russia, even in England. In Germany today the Jew has no rights. He is driven from the home for which he toiled a lifetime. His property is taken away from him. His citizenship is gone. Even the names of the Jewish soldiers who died in the battles for Germany have been erased from the monuments of the brave. In America, so long as there is a Constitution such as we have, and a Court that is independent, there will be no dispersal; there will be no persecution. There will be equality; and, by the Eternal, strike them down and you will give neither Jew nor Gentile, Greek nor barbarian, hope in this land or any other.

I revert, Mr. President, to my original thought. The Negroes in the South feel secure tonight because they know there is a Constitution and an independent Court. The religious peoples of this land feel secure tonight because they know there is a Constitution and an independent Court. The Jews in America feel secure tonight because they know there is a Constitution and an independent Court to guard it. Strike down the Court, and you will see this civilization of ours shaken to its foundation. Then the night of fear will justly fall upon us.

UNLIMITED POWER

The second consequence would be to extinguish the constitutional limitations upon the powers of Congress and the President by means of legislation. I want the Senate to get that point. If this legislation, having the avowed purpose which I have shown, should be passed, the consequence would be to extinguish the constitutional limitations upon the powers of Congress and President by legislation.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BAILEY. I yield.

Mr. McNARY. Is the Senator from North Carolina about to start upon another theme?

Mr. BAILEY. I was just starting on the second consequence.

Mr. McNARY. I desire to ask the able Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON], in view of the fact that it is 15 minutes to 5 o'clock, whether the Senate might not now take a recess until tomorrow?

Mr. ROBINSON. Would the Senator from North Carolina like to suspend now?

Mr. BAILEY. If it is agreeable, I should be glad to suspend; but if it is not, I am willing to proceed.

Mr. ROBINSON. I understood that the Senator was willing to go on until 5 o'clock.

Mr. BAILEY. I am.

Mr. ROBINSON. If the Senator would prefer to discontinue now, I shall move an executive session.

Mr. BAILEY. Very well.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. ROBINSON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGE REFERRED

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a message from the President of the United States submitting the nomination of Franklin Mott Gunther, of Virginia, to be Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary to Rumania, vice Leland Harrison, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF A COMMITTEE

Mr. McKELLAR, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, reported favorably the nominations of sundry postmasters, which were ordered to be placed on the Executive Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no further reports of committees, the clerk will state in their order the nominations on the Executive Calendar.

UNITED STATES TARIFF COMMISSION

The legislative clerk read the nomination of A. Manuel Fox, of New York, to be a member of the United States Tariff Commission.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

COMPTROLLER OF CUSTOMS

The legislative clerk read the nomination of John J. Kennedy, of Biloxi, Miss., to be comptroller of customs, customs collection district no. 20, with headquarters at New Orleans, La.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

IN THE MARINE CORPS

The legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations in the Marine Corps.

Mr. ROBINSON. I ask that the nominations in the Marine Corps be confirmed en bloc.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the nominations in the Marine Corps are confirmed en bloc.

That completes the Executive Calendar.

RECESS

The Senate resumed legislative session.

Mr. ROBINSON. I move that the Senate take a recess until 12 o'clock noon tomorrow.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 4 o'clock and 46 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until tomorrow, Tuesday, July 13, 1937, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

MONDAY, JULY 12, 1937

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Reverend W. E. Harrop, of the Graham Presbyterian Church, Graham, N. C., offered the following prayer:

Our Heavenly Father and our God, we pause to give Thee thanks for Thy watchful care and Thy blessings, that come anew every morning and with the evening retain their freshness. We pause to ask Thy presence to guide us in the deliberations of this day and this week. Give us wisdom, give us understanding, give us grace and strength, that we fail not nor falter where duty calls us. Enable us to do justly, to love mercy, and to walk humbly with our God. Continue Thy blessings upon our Nation, our President, and all departments of Government; and our prayer we make in His name. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Friday, July 9, 1937, was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Frazier, its legislative clerk, announced that the Senate disagrees to the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 2193) entitled "An act to authorize the construction of certain auxiliary vessels for the Navy", requests a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. WALSH, Mr. BONE, Mr. GILLETTE, Mr. HALE, and Mr. DAVIS to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the amendments of the House to bills and a joint resolution of the Senate of the following titles:

S. 1048. An act for the relief of Alexander E. Kovner.

THE LATE JOSEPH G. RODGERS

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 2 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, it is with a great deal of regret that I announce to the House the death in the city of Washington this morning of another one of our old, trusted, courteous, and popular employees of the House, Joseph G. Rodgers, of Pennsylvania.

It is a rather remarkable coincidence that his death came so closely after the death of that other much-respected and efficient employee of the House, Mr. Haltigan. Mr. Rodgers has been an employee of the House of Representatives for nearly half a century. For nearly 15 years he was Sergeant at Arms of the House, and since that time he was a special minority employee. He probably has known personally as many Members of the House of Representatives during the last 30 or 40 years as any man connected with the House, and I am sure there has been no more popular employee, no man who was more deeply interested in the work of the House, no man who would more quickly go out of his way to do a favor to any Member on either side of the aisle than our willing friend, Joe Rodgers.

It was with very deep regret that I heard of his passing, and I know that his friends on both sides of the aisle are sorry to know that no longer when they enter this Chamber will they be greeted by Joe's friendly smile, which was always ready for any Member. I have been specially close to Joe Rodgers for many years, and I am proud to call him my long-time friend, and it is with deep sadness that I announce his death this morning.

NEW YORK WORLD'S FAIR COMMISSION

The SPEAKER. Pursuant to the provisions of Public Resolution 53 of the Seventy-fifth Congress, the Chair appoints as members of the United States New York World's Fair Commission the following Members of the House of Representatives: Mr. McREYNOLDS and Mr. MERRITT of New York. The Chair states that at a later date he will appoint the minority member of this Commission.

ANNA PAUL

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Speaker, I offer a privileged resolution from the Committee on Accounts and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 272

Resolved, That there shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House to Anna Paul, wife of Stephen J. Paul, late an employee of the House, an amount equal to 6 months' compensation, and an additional amount, not to exceed $250, to defray funeral expenses of the said Stephen J. Paul.

The resolution was agreed to.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA AIRPORT COMMISSION (H. DOC. NO. 288)

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following report from the District of Columbia Airport Commission, which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia and ordered printed:

JULY 9, 1937.

The Honorable WILLIAM B. BANKHEAD,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

SIR: In conformity with the provisions of an act of Congress, Public, No. 529, Seventy-fourth Congress (H. R. 3806), and approved April 21, 1936, a District of Columbia Airport Commission was created to examine all available data concerning potential sites for commercial airports, to inspect such potential sites, and to select a site for such purpose.

I have the honor, therefore, to submit herewith confidential report of the Commission required by section 2 of the act.

Respectfully,

WILLIAM H. KING, Senator from Utah,
Chairman, District of Columbia Airport Commission.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. CURLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks with respect to the Home Owners' Loan Corporation, and to insert therein excerpts of the report made public by the Federal Home Loan Bank Board.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD by inserting a very brief editorial written by Generoso Pope, president of the Italian-American newspaper Il Progresso Italo-Americano, published in New York.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, and I do not intend to object, I wonder how far the present administration is going in permitting the inclusion of editorials in the RECORD? I call it to the attention of the majority leader in hope that he will try to preserve the RECORD as a record of the proceedings of the Congress.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by incorporating a speech I made on the radio last Friday.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, in an extension of my remarks concerning the life and character of our late colleague from Massachusetts, Mr. Connery, I ask unanimous consent to include therein an article written by Will P. Kennedy, that appeared in the Sunday Star of Washington on June 20, 1937.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. ELLENBOGEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks on three subjects: First, on general subjects; second, on the minimum wage and hour bill; and third, on floodwaters, including in the third extension a letter which I wrote to the Chief of the Army Engineers at Pittsburgh concerning floodwaters.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. MAVERICK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein an address by Mr. Karl A. Crowley, Solicitor of the Post Office Department, delivered before the State Bar Association of Texas, at San Antonio, Tex.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. ARENDS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein the ceremonies of the McLean County Historical Society in dedicating a tablet marking the birthplace of Maj. Gen. James G. Harbord, 4 miles south of Bloomington, in McLean County, State of Illinois.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES—INDEPENDENCE OF THE PHILIPPINE ISLANDS (H. DOC. NO. 287)

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, with accompanying documents, referred to the Committee on Insular Affairs and ordered printed, with illustrations:

To the Congress of the United States:

As required by section 7 (4) of the act of Congress approved March 24, 1934, entitled "An act to provide for the complete independence of the Philippine Islands, to provide for the adoption of a constitution and a form of government for the Philippine Islands, and for other purposes", I transmit herewith, for the information of the Congress, the first report of the United States High Commissioner to the Philippine Islands covering the period from November 15, 1935, to December 31, 1936.

I concur in the recommendation of the Secretary of War that this report be printed as a congressional document.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, July 12, 1937.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES—INDEPENDENCE OF PHILIPPINE ISLANDS

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following further message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, with accompanying documents, referred to the Committee on Insular Affairs:

To the Congress of the United States:

As required by section 2 (a) (11) of the act of Congress approved March 24, 1934, entitled "An act to provide for the complete independence of the Philippine Islands, to provide for the adoption of a constitution and a form of government for the Philippine Islands, and for other purposes", I transmit herewith copies of Commonwealth Acts Nos. 231 and 232, enacted by the First National Assembly of the Philippines during its special session from October 19, 1936, to October 30, 1936.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, July 12, 1937.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein a letter from the Attorney General of the United States, as well as a letter from the Comptroller General of the United States, on the Interior Department conference report.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. FLANNAGAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Wednesday next, after the disposition of the business on the Speaker's table and at the conclusion of the legislative program for the day, I may be permitted to address the House for 15 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. ZIMMERMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein an address I made at Valley Forge on July 4, 1937.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA DAY—REGULATION OF REAL-ESTATE BROKERS AND SALESMEN

Mr. PALMISANO. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 6563) to define, regulate, and license real-estate brokers and real-estate salesmen; to create a Real Estate Commission in the District of Columbia; to protect the public against fraud in real-estate transactions; and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. PALMISANO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill may be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maryland?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc.,

ENACTMENT AND PROHIBITION CLAUSE

SECTION 1. That on and after 90 days from the date of enactment of this act it shall be unlawful in the District of Columbia for any person, firm, partnership, copartnership, association, or corporation (foreign or domestic) to act as a real-estate broker, business chance broker, or real-estate salesman, or to advertise or assume to act as such, without a license issued by the Real Estate Commission of the District of Columbia.

DEFINITIONS AND EXCEPTIONS

SEC. 2. Whenever used in this act "real-estate broker" means any person, firm, association, partnership, or corporation (foreign or domestic) who, for another and for a fee, commission, or other valuable consideration, or who, with the intention or in the expectation or upon the promise of receiving or collecting a fee, commission, or other valuable consideration, lists for sale, sells, exchanges, purchases, rents, or leases or offers or attempts or agrees to negotiate a sale, exchange, purchase, lease, or rental of an estate or interest in real estate, or collects or offers or attempts or agrees to collect rent or income for the use of real estate, or negotiates or offers or attempts or agrees to negotiate, a loan secured or to be secured by a mortgage, deed of trust, or other encumbrance upon or transfer of real estate: Provided, however, That this definition shall not apply to the sale of space for advertising of real estate in any newspaper, magazine, or other publication. A "business chance broker" within the meaning of this act is any person, firm, partnership, association, copartnership, or corporation who for a compensation or valuable consideration sells or offers for sale, buys or offers to buy, leases or offers to lease, or negotiates the purchase or sale or exchange of a business, business opportunity, or the goodwill of an existing business for others as a whole or partial vocation.

"Real-estate salesman" means a person employed by a licensed real-estate broker to list for sale, sell, or offer for sale, to buy or offer to buy, or to negotiate the purchase or sale, or exchange of real estate, or to negotiate a loan on real estate, or to lease or rent or offer to lease, rent, or place for rent, any real estate, or collect or offer or attempt to collect rent or income for the use of real estate for or in behalf of such real-estate broker.

Persons employed by a licensed real-estate broker in a clerical capacity, as collectors, or in similar subordinate and administrative positions shall not be required to obtain licenses.

One act for a compensation or valuable consideration of buying or selling real estate for or of another, or offering for another to buy, sell, or exchange real estate, or leasing, renting, or offering to lease or rent real estate, except as herein specifically excepted, shall constitute the person, firm, partnership, copartnership, association, or corporation performing, or offering or attempting to perform any of the acts enumerated herein, a real-estate broker or a real-estate salesman within the meaning of this act.

The provisions of this act shall not apply to receivers, referees, administrators, executors, guardians, or other persons appointed or acting under the judgment or order of any court; or public officers while performing their official duty, or attorneys at law in the ordinary practice of their profession.

CREATION OF COMMISSION

SEC. 3. There is hereby created the Real Estate Commission of the District of Columbia. The Commissioners of the District of Columbia within 30 days after the enactment of this act shall appoint two persons, not more than one of whom shall have been actively engaged in or closely connected with the business or vocation of real-estate broker or real-estate salesman within 5 years immediately prior to appointment, who shall serve as members of said Real Estate Commission of the District of Columbia. In addition thereto, the assessor of the District of Columbia shall serve, ex officio, as a member of said Real Estate Commission, but without added compensation for his services as such. One member of said Commission shall be appointed for a term of 1 year; one member shall be appointed for a term of 2 years, and until their successors are appointed and qualified; thereafter the term of the members of said Commission shall be for 3 years and until their successors are appointed and qualified. Members to fill vacancies shall be appointed for the unexpired term. The Commissioners of the District of Columbia may remove members of the Real Estate Commission at any time for cause.

The assessor, ex-officio, shall be the chairman of said Real Estate Commission, which is hereby authorized and empowered to elect a treasurer of said Commission and to do all things necessary and convenient for carrying into effect the provisions of this act and the rules and regulations promulgated from time to time by the Commissioners.

The Commissioners of the District of Columbia shall employ and remove at their pleasure a secretary and such assistants as shall be deemed necessary to discharge the duties imposed by the provisions of this act and shall prescribe their duties and fix their compensation in accordance with the provisions of the Classification Act of 1923, as amended.

The Commissioners of the District of Columbia shall provide for the use of the Real Estate Commission such office space, furniture, stationery, fuel, light, and other proper conveniences as shall be reasonably necessary for carrying out the provisions of this act.

The Commission shall adopt a seal with such design as it may prescribe engraved thereon by which it shall authenticate its proceedings. Copies of all records and papers in the office of the Commission, duly certified and authenticated by the seal of said Commission, shall be received in evidence in all courts equally and with like effect as the original. The Commission shall keep a record of all its proceedings and a complete stenographic record of all hearings authorized under this act.

All records kept in the office of the Commission under authority of this act shall be open to public inspection under reasonable rules and regulations to be prescribed by the Commission.

Each member of the Commission, except the ex-officio member, shall receive an allowance at the rate of $10 for each day of 7 hours such member is actually engaged in the performance of duties as a member of the Commission: Provided, however, That no member shall receive in any one year a sum greater than $2,000.

The payment of such allowance shall be made from any unexpended balance in the treasury of said Commission remaining on June 30 of the year during which the services have been rendered, and if the unexpended balance is insufficient to meet the total amount of such allowance the rate of compensation shall be reduced to a rate which will permit payment from such unexpended balance. Such expenses shall in no event exceed the total receipts; and if at the close of each fiscal year any funds unexpended in excess of the sum of $1,000 shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the District of Columbia: Provided, That no expenses incurred under this act shall be a charge against the funds of the United States or the District of Columbia.

All fees and charges payable under the provisions of this act shall be paid to the treasurer of the Commission. The Commission is hereby authorized to refund any license fee or tax, or portion thereof, erroneously paid or collected under this act.

It shall be the duty of the auditor of the District of Columbia to audit the accounts of the Commission at the end of each fiscal year and make a report thereof in writing to the Commissioners of the District of Columbia. The said auditor shall have free access to all books of accounts, papers, and records of the said Commission.

The Commissioners of the District of Columbia are hereby authorized and empowered to make and enforce, revise, or repeal whatever reasonable regulations may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this act.

QUALIFICATIONS FOR LICENSE

SEC. 4. No license under the provisions of this act shall be issued to any person who has not attained the age of 21 years, nor to any person who cannot read, write, and understand the English language; nor until the Commission has received satisfactory proof that the applicant is trustworthy and competent to transact the business of a real-estate broker or real-estate salesman in such a manner as to safeguard the interests of the public.

In determining competency the Commission shall require proof that the applicant for a broker's license has a fair understanding of the general purposes and effect of deeds, mortgages, land contracts of sale and leases, a general and fair understanding of the obligations between principal and agent, as well as of the provisions of this act. Such proof of competency to act as broker shall not be required of any applicant who shall furnish proof within 120 days from the effective date of this act of 2 years' experience as real-estate broker or real-estate salesman within the District of Columbia.

No license shall be issued to any person, firm, partnership, copartnership, association, or corporation whose application has been rejected in the District of Columbia or any State within 3 months prior to date of application, or whose real-estate license has been revoked in the District of Columbia or any State within 1 year prior to date of application.

APPLICATION FOR LICENSE

SEC. 5. Every applicant for a license under the provisions of this act shall apply therefor in writing upon blanks furnished by the Real Estate Commission.

The application of every person for a real-estate broker's license or a real-estate salesman's license shall be accompanied by the recommendation of at least two residents of the District of Columbia, real-estate owners, who have owned real estate in the District of Columbia for a period of at least 1 year and who are not related to the applicant but who have personally known the applicant for a period of at least 6 months prior to the date of application, which recommendation shall certify that the applicant bears a good reputation for honesty, truthfulness, fair dealing, and competency, and recommend that a license be granted to the applicant.

The application of every firm, partnership, copartnership, association, or corporation for a real-estate broker's license shall state the location of the place or places for which said license is desired and set forth the period of time, if any, which said applicant has been engaged in the real-estate business, together with a complete list of all former places where the applicant may have been engaged in any business for a period of 30 days or more during the 5 years preceding date of application, accounting for such entire period. Such applications shall also state the name and residence of each individual member or officer of said applicant who actively participates in the brokerage business thereof.

The application of every individual member or officer of a firm, partnership, copartnership, association, or corporation for a real-estate broker's license shall state the full name and residence address of the applicant and the full name and business address of the firm, partnership, copartnership, association, or corporation with which he is or will be associated, the length of time he has been so associated, and in what capacity. Such application shall also state the period of time, if any, during which said applicant has been engaged in the real-estate business, together with a complete list of all former places where the applicant may have resided and all former places where the applicant may have been engaged in any business for a period of 30 days or more during the 5 years preceding date of application, accounting for such entire period.

The application of each person for an individual real-estate broker's license shall state the full name of the applicant, his business address, and residence address. Such application shall also state the period of time, if any, during which said applicant has been engaged in the real-estate business, together with a complete list of all former places where the applicant may have resided and all former places where the applicant may have been engaged in any business for a period of 30 days or more during the 5 years preceding the date of application, accounting for such entire period.

The application of every person for a real-estate salesman's license shall state the full name of the applicant, his residence address, and the name and business address of the real-estate broker by whom he is or will be employed. Such application shall also state the period of time, if any, during which said applicant has been engaged in the real-estate business, together with a complete list of all former places where the applicant may have resided and all former places where the applicant may have been engaged in any business for a period of 30 days or more during the 5 years preceding the date of application, accounting for such entire period. Such application shall be accompanied by a written statement by the broker by whom the applicant is employed or is about to be employed, stating that in his opinion the applicant is honest, truthful, and of good reputation, and recommending that the license be granted to the applicant.

Every application for a license under the provisions of this act shall be sworn to by the applicant and shall be accompanied by the license fee herein prescribed. In the event that the Commission does not approve the application for a license the fee shall be returned to the applicant.

Every application for a license shall be accompanied by a bond in the sum of $2,500 in the case of a broker and $1,000 in the case of a salesman, running to the District of Columbia, executed by two good and sufficient sureties, to be approved by the Commission, or executed by a surety company duly authorized to do business in the District of Columbia: Provided, however, That no bond shall be required of any firm, partnership, copartnership, association, or corporation when the application of every member or officer of such firm, partnership, copartnership, association, or corporation actively participating in the brokerage business thereof is accompanied by a bond as provided for in this section. Said bond shall be in form approved by the Commission, and conditioned that the applicant shall conduct himself and his business in accordance with the requirements of this act; and for his failure so to do any person aggrieved thereby shall have, in addition to his right of action against the principal thereof, a right to bring suit against the surety on said bond either alone or jointly with the principal thereon, and to recover in an amount not exceeding the penalty of the bond any damages sustained by reason of any act, representation, transaction, or conduct of the principal which may be prohibited by this act or enumerated as one of the causes for suspension or revocation of a license granted hereunder. If a recovery be had on any bond the licensee shall restore the bond to its original amount.

Nothing in this act shall be construed to impose upon the surety on any such bond a greater liability than the total amount thereof or the amount remaining unextinguished by any prior recovery or recoveries as the case may be.

No suit or action against the surety on any such bond shall be brought later than 1 year from the accrual of the cause of action thereon. The surety may terminate its liability under such bond by giving 30 days' written notice thereof, served either personally or by registered mail, to the principal and to the Commission; and upon giving such notice the surety shall be discharged from all liability under such bond for any act or omission of the principal occurring after the expiration of 30 days from the date of service of such notice. Unless on or before the expiration of such period the principal shall duly file a new bond in like amount and conditioned as the original in substitution of the bond so terminated, the license of the principal shall likewise terminate upon the expiration of such period. Upon making any payment on account of its bond, the surety shall immediately notify the Commission.

The Commission, with due regard to the paramount interest of the public, may require other reasonable proof of the honesty, truthfulness, and integrity of the applicant.

PROCEDURE WHEN LICENSE IS REFUSED APPLICANT

SEC. 6. The Commission, after an application in proper form has been filed, shall, before refusing to issue a license, set the application down for a hearing and determination as hereinafter provided in section 9.

DETAILS RELATING TO LICENSE

SEC. 7. The Commission shall cause to be issued to each licensee a license in such form and size as shall be prescribed by the Commission. Every license shall show the name and address of the licensee, and if licensee is a member or officer of a firm, partnership, copartnership, association, or corporation, the full name and address of such firm, partnership, copartnership, association, or corporation shall also be shown on said license. Licenses issued to real-estate salesmen shall in addition show the name and address of the real-estate broker by whom the said salesman is or will be employed. Each license shall have imprinted thereon the seal of the Commission, and in addition to the foregoing shall contain such matter as shall be prescribed by the Commission. The license of each real-estate salesman shall be delivered or mailed to the real-estate broker by whom such real-estate salesman is employed and shall be kept in the custody and control of such broker. It shall be the duty of each real-estate broker to conspicuously display his license in his place of business.

At any time within 6 months, but not thereafter, after the issuance of an original license the Commission may, upon its own motion, and shall, upon the verified complaint, in writing, of any person, provided such complaint, or such complaint together with evidence, documentary or otherwise, presented therewith, shall make out a prima-facie case that the licensee is unworthy to hold such license, notify the licensee, in writing, that the question of his honesty, competency, truthfulness, and integrity will be reopened and determined de novo. Such written notice may be served by delivery thereof personally to the licensee or by mailing same by registered mail to the last known business address of the licensee. Thereupon the Commission may require and procure further proof of the licensee's trustworthiness and competency, and if such proof shall not be satisfactory such license shall be recalled and shall thereafter be null and void. Upon the recall of any such license it shall be the duty of the licensee to surrender to the Commission such license.

The fee for an original real-estate broker's license and every renewal thereof shall be $25.

No fee shall be charged for any original license or renewal thereof issued to any firm, partnership, copartnership, association, or corporation all of whose members or officers actively participating in the brokerage business thereof have been issued a broker's license.

The fee for an original real-estate salesman's license and every annual renewal thereof shall be $5.

Every license shall expire on the 1st day of July of each year, except that the original or initial licenses, first issued under the provisions of this act, shall expire on the 1st day of July 1938, subject, however, to revocation as hereinbefore provided.

The Commission shall cause to be issued a new license for each ensuing year, in the absence of any reason or condition which might warrant the refusal of the granting of a license, upon receipt of the written request of the applicant and the annual fee therefor, as herein required. The revocation of a broker's license shall automatically suspend every real-estate salesman's license granted to any person by virtue of his employment by the broker whose license has been revoked, pending a change of employer and the issuance of a new license. Such new license shall be issued without charge if granted during the same license year in which the original license is granted.

No person, firm, partnership, copartnership, association, or corporation engaged in the business or acting in the capacity of a real-estate broker or a real-estate salesman within the District of Columbia shall bring or maintain any action in the courts of the District of Columbia for the collection of compensation for any services performed as a real-estate broker or a real-estate salesman or enforcement of any contract relating to real estate without alleging and proving that such person, firm, partnership, copartnership, association, or corporation was a duly licensed real-estate broker or real-estate salesman at the time the alleged cause of action arose.

Every real-estate broker shall maintain a place of business in the District of Columbia. If a real-estate broker maintains more than one place of business within the District of Columbia, a duplicate license shall be issued to such broker for each branch office maintained; and there shall be no fee charged for any such duplicate license.

Notice in writing shall be given to the Commission by each licensee of any change of principal business location, whereupon the Commission shall cause to be issued a new license for the unexpired period without charge. The change of business location without notification to the Commission shall automatically cancel the license theretofore issued.

When any real-estate salesman shall be discharged or shall terminate his employment with the real-estate broker by whom he is employed, it shall be the duty of such real-estate broker to immediately deliver or mail by registered mail to the Commission such real-estate salesman's license. The real-estate broker shall, at the time of delivering or mailing such real-estate salesman's license to the Commission, address a communication by registered mail to the last-known residence address of such real-estate salesman, which communication shall advise such real-estate salesman that his license has been delivered or mailed to the Commission. A copy of such communication to the real-estate salesman shall accompany the license when mailed or delivered to the Commission. It shall be unlawful for any real-estate salesman to perform any of the acts contemplated by this act, either directly or indirectly, under authority of said license from and after 3 days following such delivery or mailing of the said license by said broker to the Commission.

There shall be no additional fee for the reissuance of a salesman's license necessitated by the change of employers, nor shall such change work a revocation or require a renewal of the salesman's bond.

SUSPENSION OR REVOCATION OF LICENSE FOR CAUSES ENUMERATED

SEC. 8. The Commission may, upon its own motion, and shall, upon the verified complaint in writing of any person, provided such complaint or such complaint together with evidence, documentary or otherwise, presented in connection therewith, make out a prima-facie case, investigate the conduct of any real-estate broker or real-estate salesman, or any person who shall assume to act in either such capacity within the District of Columbia, and shall have the power to suspend or to revoke any license issued under the provisions of this act, at any time where the licensee has by false or fraudulent representation obtained a license; or where the licensee, in performing or attempting to perform any of the acts mentioned herein, has—

(a) Made any substantial misrepresentation;

(b) Made any false promises of a character likely to influence, persuade, or induce;

(c) Pursued a continued and flagrant course of misrepresentation, or making of false promises through agents or salesmen, or advertising or otherwise;

(d) Acted for more than one party in a transaction without the knowledge of all parties for whom he acts;

(e) Accepted a commission or valuable consideration as a real-estate salesman for the performance of any of the acts specified in this act from any person, except an employer who is a licensed real-estate broker;

(f) Represented or attempted to represent a real-estate broker other than the employer without the express knowledge and consent of the employer;

(g) Failed, within a reasonable time, to account for or to remit any money, valuable documents, or other property coming into his possession which belong to others;

(h) Demonstrated such unworthiness or incompetency to act as a real-estate broker or salesman as to endanger the interests of the public;

(i) Paid or offered to pay a commission or valuable consideration to any person for acts or services in violation of this act, with knowledge of such violation or where reasonable diligence has not been exercised to acquire such knowledge;

(j) Been guilty of any other conduct, whether of the same or a different character from that hereinbefore specified, which constitutes fraudulent or dishonest dealing;

(k) Using any other trade name or insignia of membership in any real-estate organization of which the licensee is not a member;

(l) Disregarding or violating any provisions of this act;

(m) Guaranteeing, or having authorized or permitted any broker or salesman to guarantee, future profits which may result from the resale of real property;

(n) Placing a sign on any property offering it for sale or for rent or offering it for sale or rent without the written consent of the owner or his authorized agent;

(o) Soliciting, selling, or offering for sale real property by offering free lots, or conducting lotteries, or contests, or offering prizes for the purpose of influencing a purchaser or prospective purchaser of real property; or

(p) Failing to restore the bond to its original amount after a recovery on the bond as provided in section 5.

PROVISION FOR HEARING BEFORE APPLICATION IS REFUSED OR LICENSE SUSPENDED OR REVOKED

SEC. 9. The Commission shall, before denying an application for license, or before suspending or revoking any license, set the matter down for a public hearing, and at least 10 days, prior to the date set for the hearing it shall notify the applicant or licensee in writing of any charges made and shall afford the applicant or licensee an opportunity to be heard in person or by counsel in reference thereto. Such written notice may be served by delivery of same personally to the applicant or licensee or by mailing same by registered mail to the last-known business address of such applicant or licensee. If said applicant or licensee be a salesman, the Commission shall also notify the broker employing him, or whose employ he is about to enter, by mailing notice by registered mail to the broker's last-known address. The hearing on such charges shall be at such time and place as the Commission shall prescribe. The Commission shall have the power to issue subpenas or take testimony of any person by deposition in the same manner as prescribed by law in judicial procedure in the District Court of the United States for the District of Columbia in civil cases. It shall also have the power to require the production of books, records, papers, and documents by subpena or otherwise. Any party to any hearing before the Commission shall have the right to the attendance of witnesses in his behalf at such hearing upon making request therefor to the Commission and designating the person or persons sought to be subpenaed. If the Commission shall determine that any applicant is not qualified to receive a license, a license shall not be granted to said applicant; and if the Commission shall determine that any licensee is guilty of a violation of any of the provisions of this act, his or its licenses shall be suspended or revoked. All evidence before and findings of fact made by the Commission and questions of law involved in any final decision or determination of the Commission shall be subject to review by the District Court of the United States for the District of Columbia upon a writ of certiorari, mandamus, appeal, or by any other method permissible under the rules and practices of said court or the laws of the District of Columbia, and the said court may make such further orders with respect thereto as justice may require: Provided, however, That application is made by the aggrieved party to the court within 30 days after any determination by the Commission or within 60 days after formal request shall be made upon it for action. Such application shall operate as a stay of any action or finding of the Commission revoking or suspending a license, and until final decision by the District Court of the United States for the District of Columbia such licensee shall have the right to continue in business.

An appeal may be taken from the judgment of the said court on any such appeal on the same terms and conditions as an appeal is taken in civil actions.

Any party to the proceedings desiring it shall be furnished with a copy of such stenographic notes, upon the payment to the Commission of such reasonable fee as it shall, by general rule or regulation, prescribe.

NONRESIDENT BROKERS AND SALESMEN

SEC. 10. A nonresident of the District of Columbia may become a real-estate broker or a real-estate salesman in the District of Columbia by conforming to all of the conditions of this act, except that the application of such person for a license need not be accompanied by the recommendation of real-estate owners in the District of Columbia prescribed in paragraph 2 of section 5 of this act, but in lieu thereof the Commission shall require the filing of like recommendations by similarly qualified real-estate owners of property in the State, Territory, or county of such applicant's residence.

(2) The Commission may recognize, in lieu of the recommendation and statements otherwise required by this act to accompany an application for a license, the valid and existing license issued to a nonresident to act as a real-estate broker or salesman by any State having a law for the licensing of such brokers and salesmen similar to this act, upon payment of the license fee prescribed by this act and the filing by the applicant with the Commission of a duly authenticated copy of applicant's license issued by such State: Provided, however, That every nonresident applicant shall file an irrevocable consent that suits and actions may be commenced against such applicant in the proper courts of the District of Columbia by the service of any process or pleadings authorized by the laws of the United States applying to the District of Columbia on the secretary of the Commission, said consent stipulating and agreeing that such service of such process or pleadings on said secretary shall be taken and held in all courts to be as valid and binding as if due or personal service had been made upon said applicant in the District of Columbia. Said instrument containing such consent shall be duly acknowledged and, if made by a corporation, shall be authenticated by the seal thereof. All such applications, except from individuals, shall be accompanied by a duly certified copy of the resolution of the proper officers or managing board, authorizing the proper officer to execute the same. In case any process or pleadings mentioned in the act are served upon the secretary of the Commission, it shall be by duplicate copies, one of which shall be filed in the office of the Commission and the other immediately forwarded by registered mail to the residence address given by the applicant against which said process or pleadings are directed: And provided further, That every nonresident of the District of Columbia shall file a bond in form and contents the same as is required of applicants under section 5 of this act.

POWER TO OBTAIN EVIDENCE

SEC. 11. Each member of the Commission and its duly authorized representatives may administer oaths to witnesses.

In case of the refusal of any person to comply with any subpena issued hereunder or to testify to any matter regarding which he may lawfully be interrogated, the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, or any judge thereof, on application of any member of the Commission, shall issue an order requiring such person to comply with such subpena and to testify or either, and any failure to obey such order of the court may be punished by the court as a contempt thereof.

OTHERS EXEMPT

SEC. 12. It shall not be necessary for any trustee or auctioneer acting under authority of a power of sale in a mortgage, deed of trust, or similar instrument securing the payment of a bona-fide debt nor any bank, trust company, building and loan association, or any land-mortgage or farm-loan association, organized under the laws of the United States, when engaged in the transaction of business within the scope of its corporate powers and provided by law, to obtain a license under this act.

PUBLICATION OF LIST OF LICENSEES

SEC. 13. The Commission shall publish at least annually a list of the names and addresses of all licensees licensed by it under the provisions of this act and of all persons whose license has been suspended or revoked within 1 year, together with a succinct report of its work during the year. Such list shall be mailed by the Commission to any person in the District of Columbia upon request.

FRAUDULENT TRANSFERS OR LOANS

SEC. 14. It shall be unlawful for any person, firm, association, partnership, or corporation to enter into or become a party to any contract, agreement, or understanding, or in any manner whatsoever to consider, combine, conspire, or act with another or others, (a) to execute a deed conveying real property in the District of Columbia that is not a bona-fide sale but is instead a simulated sale of such property executed for the purpose and with the intent of misleading others as to the value of such property, and which in fact does so mislead and/or defraud others, to their detriment; or (b) to execute a mortgage or deed of trust upon real property situated in the District of Columbia that does not in fact represent security for a bona-fide indebtedness, but which is in reality a simulated transaction, executed for the purpose and with the intent of misleading or deceiving others as to the value of the property and which does mislead, deceive, or defraud others to their detriment.

CONVICTION OF CRIME

SEC. 15. Where during the term of any license issued by the Commission the licensee shall be convicted in a court of competent jurisdiction in the District of Columbia or any State (including Federal courts) of forgery, embezzlement, obtaining money under false pretenses, extortion, criminal conspiracy to defraud, or other like offense or offenses and a duly certified or exemplified copy of the record in such proceedings shall be filed with the Commission, the Commission shall revoke forthwith the license by it theretofore issued to the licensee so convicted.

In the event that any licensee shall be indicted in the District of Columbia or any State or Territory (including Federal courts) for forgery, embezzlement, obtaining money under false pretenses, extortion, criminal conspiracy to defraud, or like offense or offenses, and a certified copy of the indictment be filed with the Commission, or other proper evidence thereof be to it given, the Commission shall have authority, in its discretion, to suspend the license issued to such licensee pending trial upon such indictment.

No license shall be issued by the Commission to any person known by it to have been, within 5 years theretofore, convicted of forgery, embezzlement, obtaining money under false pretenses, extortion, criminal conspiracy to defraud, or other like offense or offenses, or to any copartnership of which such person is a member, or to any association or corporation of which said person is an officer, director, or employee, or in which as a stockholder such person has or exercises a controlling interest either directly or indirectly. In the event of the revocation or suspension of the license issued to any member of a copartnership, or to any officer of an association or corporation, the license issued to such copartnership, association, or corporation, shall be revoked by the commission, unless, within a time fixed by the commission, where a copartnership, the connection therewith of the member whose license has been revoked shall be severed and his interest in the copartnership and his share in its activities brought to an end, or where an association or corporation, the offending officer shall be discharged and shall have no further participation in its activity.

PENALTIES

SEC. 16. Any person or corporation violating any provision of this act shall upon conviction thereof, if a person, be punished by a fine of not more than $500, or by imprisonment for a term not to exceed 6 months, or by both such fine and imprisonment, in the discretion of the court; and, if a corporation, be punished by a fine of not more than $1,000. Any officer, director, employee, or agent of a corporation, or member, employee, or agent of a firm, partnership, copartnership, or association, who shall personally participate in or be accessory to any violation of this act by such firm, partnership, copartnership, association, or corporation, shall be subject to the penalties herein prescribed for individuals.

This act shall not be construed to release any person, partnership, association, or corporation from civil liability or criminal prosecution under the laws applying to the District of Columbia.

All prosecutions for violation of this act shall be begun in the police court of the District of Columbia in the name of the District of Columbia and under the direction and charge of the corporation counsel of the District of Columbia. The corporation counsel of the District of Columbia and his assistants shall also be counsel for the Commission in all suits to which it may be a party, and shall advise the Commission and at its request attend any and all hearings which it may hold in the performance of its duties hereunder.

SAVING CLAUSE

SEC. 17. If any section, subsection, sentence, clause, phrase, or requirement of this act is, for any reason, held to be unconstitutional or invalid, such decision shall not affect the validity of the remaining portions thereof. The Congress of the United States hereby declares that it would have passed this act, and each section, subsection, sentence, clause, phrase, and requirement thereof irrespective of the fact that any one or more sections, subsections, sentences, clauses, phrases, or requirements be declared unconstitutional or invalid.

REPEALING CLAUSE

SEC. 18. All laws or parts of laws in conflict with this act be, and the same are hereby, repealed.

SEC. 19. This act, except as otherwise provided herein, shall take effect on and after 90 days from the date of its enactment.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 15, line 21, strike out "$25", and insert "$50."
Page 16, line 4, strike out "$5" and insert "$10."
Page 25, line 18, strike out "Supreme Court of the District of Columbia" and insert "District Court of the United States for the District of Columbia."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

The title was amended to read as follows: "A bill to define, regulate, and license real-estate brokers, business-chance brokers, and real-estate salesmen; to create a real-estate commission in the District of Columbia; to protect the public against fraud in real-estate transactions; and for other purposes."

TAXICAB LIABILITY

Mr. PALMISANO. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 7084) to provide that all cabs for hire in the District of Columbia be compelled to carry insurance for the protection of passengers, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. PALMISANO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill may be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maryland?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Public Utilities Commission of the District of Columbia is hereby directed to require any and all corporations, companies, associations, joint-stock companies or associations, partnerships, and persons, their lessees, trustees, or receivers, appointed by any court whatsoever, operating, controlling, managing, or renting any passenger motor vehicles for hire in the District of Columbia, except as to operations licensed under paragraph 31 (b) of the act approved July 1, 1932, known as the "License Act", and except such common carriers as have been expressly exempted from the jurisdiction of the Commission, to file with the Commission for each motor vehicle to be operated a bond or bonds, policy or policies, of liability insurance in a solvent and responsible surety or insurance company authorized to do business in the District of Columbia, conditioned for the payment to any person of any judgment recovered against such corporations, companies, associations, joint-stock companies or associations, partnerships, and persons, their lessees, trustees, or receivers, appointed by any court whatsoever, or renters of their cabs, for death or for injury to any person or injury to any property, or both, caused in the operation, maintenance, use, or by reason of the defective construction of such motor cabs or other vehicles. Any such bond or undertaking or policy of liability insurance shall be in such form and on such terms or conditions as the Commission may direct. Provided, That such bond or policy may limit the liability of the surety or insurer on any one judgment to $5,000 for bodily injuries or death and $1,000 for damage to or destruction of property, and all judgments recovered upon claims arising out of the same subject of action to $10,000 for bodily injuries or death and $1,000 for damages to or destruction of property, to be apportioned ratably among the judgment creditors according to the amount of their respective judgments. Any such policy of liability insurance shall be issued only by such insurance companies as may have been authorized to do business in the District of Columbia, and any such bond or undertaking shall be secured by a corporate surety approved by the Insurance Commissioner of the District of Columbia. The Insurance Commissioner of the District of Columbia shall be empowered to make all rules and regulations relating to the writing of taxicab insurance and shall be empowered to govern the rates to be charged on such insurance. No such bond or policy of insurance may be canceled or terminated unless not less than 20 days prior to such cancelation or termination notice of intention so to do has been filed in writing with the Commission. It shall be unlawful to operate any vehicle subject to the provisions of this paragraph unless such vehicle shall be covered by an approved bond or policy of liability insurance as provided herein. The Public Utilities Commission shall have the power to make all reasonable rules and regulations which, in its opinion, are necessary to make effective the purposes of this section.

Any violation of this section or of the regulations lawfully promulgated thereunder shall be deemed a misdemeanor and upon conviction shall be punishable by a fine of not more than $300 or by imprisonment for not more than 90 days.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 3, line 6, strike out "Insurance Commissioner" and insert "Superintendent of Insurance."
Page 3, line 7, strike out "Insurance Commissioner" and insert "Superintendent of Insurance."
Page 3, line 9, after the word "all", insert the word "reasonable."
Page 3, line 11, after the word "the", insert "maximum."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word, in order to secure some information on these amendments. This bill will eventually cost the taxicab drivers quite a sum of money. How much on each and every machine or taxicab?

Mr. PALMISANO. The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. NICHOLS] can answer that question.

Mr. NICHOLS. If they do it by insurance policies it will probably cost from $20 to $30 a month. However, the Public Utilities Commission has authority to increase the rates. I have been in communication with them, and they anticipate authorizing an increase in rate of probably 5 cents a zone in order to take care of this insurance.

Mr. SABATH. That is what I have in mind. I feel these men, at the present rates, cannot afford to pay this additional $30 or $40 a month.

Mr. NICHOLS. They will be taken care of.

Mr. SABATH. They should be permitted to receive additional compensation, we will say, of 5 cents per zone.

Mr. FORD of California. The gentleman realizes if the rate is raised from 20 cents to 25 cents they will lose 20 to 30 percent of their business.

Mr. NICHOLS. I may say, as far as this bill is concerned, every civic organization in the District of Columbia, some 50 in number, has endorsed the bill, including the Board of Trade. Every taxicab company in the District of Columbia has endorsed the bill in principle. Two of them want to do it by a little different method than as provided in this bill. The taxicab drivers themselves, I may say to the gentleman from California, want this protection.

Mr. FORD of California. I may say to the gentleman from Oklahoma I have talked to 50 taxi drivers, and not one of them wants it.

Mr. NICHOLS. All right.

Mr. THOMPSON of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NICHOLS. Yes.

Mr. THOMPSON of Illinois. Is there any provision in this bill with reference to cabs having to have a certificate or a sticker or something indicating that they have liability insurance or a bond posted to cover liability for injuries? I did not notice such a provision in a quick reading of the bill.

Mr. NICHOLS. No; there is not. I do not think that is necessary, because before the drivers can operate they must have insurance. If the gentleman would suggest that it should be necessary for the drivers to carry something to indicate that they were insured, I would be perfectly agreeable to such an amendment.

Mr. THOMPSON of Illinois. I may say to the gentleman we have a similar law in Illinois. Every 30 days the taxicab drivers must get new certificates in order to serve notice on the public that their liability policies are still in effect and have not been canceled for one reason or another, principally nonpayment of premiums.

Mr. NICHOLS. As far as the nonpayment of premiums is concerned, we have a peculiar provision in this bill which most cities do not have. We provide only 5 days' notice shall be required for the cancelation of a policy. The requirement is 20 to 30 days in most places.

I may say to the gentleman I think this is a very good bill in its present form, but if the gentleman thinks it is necessary for drivers to carry a certificate showing they are carrying insurance, of course, I should be perfectly agreeable to such an amendment.

Mr. THOMPSON of Illinois. I have no intention, of course, of offering an amendment to that effect.

Mr. NICHOLS. I think we can suggest it in the Senate, where such an amendment may be inserted.

Mr. THOMPSON of Illinois. Probably the Public Utilities Commission could require that by regulation.

Mr. NICHOLS. Yes; they could do it by regulation.

Mr. THOMPSON of Illinois. Or the insurance commissioner of the District of Columbia.

Mr. NICHOLS. As a matter of fact, this bill gives them the authority to make regulations.

Mr. THOMPSON of Illinois. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. TAYLOR of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NICHOLS. Yes.

Mr. TAYLOR of South Carolina. Have the taxi drivers who are favoring this bill predicated their approval on the fact that they have been virtually promised an increase in charges?

Mr. NICHOLS. No.

Mr. TAYLOR of South Carolina. Would they favor it were they not of the opinion they would get an increase?

Mr. NICHOLS. I may say to the gentleman, I doubt that anybody thinks that with the low rate prevailing in the District of Columbia at this time drivers can afford to carry this insurance unless they have about a 5-cent increase.

Mr. TAYLOR of South Carolina. Who revokes this insurance? Does the insurance company have the right to say it will or will not issue an insurance policy to any given driver?

Mr. NICHOLS. Oh, yes; we could not compel insurance companies to write insurance.

Mr. TAYLOR of South Carolina. That is the point.

Mr. NICHOLS. There is no way you could legislate to do that.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. By that provision, then, you place it within the power of the insurance company to say who shall be the taxi drivers of the District of Columbia?

Mr. NICHOLS. Oh, absolutely not.

Mr. TAYLOR of South Carolina. Certainly, if the driver cannot get an insurance policy, he is off the run.

Mr. NICHOLS. I may say to the gentleman, probably very little of this insurance will be carried by the insurance companies we know as the old-line companies.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The SPEAKER. The question is on the committee amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: Page 3, line 15, after the word "Commission", insert "unless cancelation is for nonpayment of premiums, in which event 5 days' notice as above provided shall be given."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: Page 4, line 5, after the word "days", insert "and/or cancelation of license.

"This act shall become effective 60 days after final passage."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. NICHOLS: Page 2, line 5, after the word "insurance", insert "or certificate of insurance in lieu thereof."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Speaker, I offer a further amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. NICHOLS: Page 3, line 13, strike out "or terminated."

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Speaker, I think this amendment should be explained.

The bill provides that certain notice should be given before policies were canceled or terminated. Of course, the words "or terminated" are superfluous, because the term of the policy itself would fix the term of the policy. This simply strikes out "or terminated."

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. NICHOLS].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SCHULTE. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SCHULTE: Page 3, line 21, strike out the comma, insert a period, and add a new paragraph to read as follows:

"Any owner of a public vehicle required hereby to file a bond or policy of insurance may, in lieu thereof:

"(a) Deposit with any individual or corporation approved by the Public Utilities Commission, in trust for the payment of any judgment recovered against such owner, as provided in this act, either $5,000 in cash, or negotiate collateral of the value, to be determined by said Utilities Commission, of $5,000, and additions to such collateral deposit may be ordered by said Utilities Commission if, in the judgment of said Commission, additional collateral is necessary to maintain said deposit as of the value of $5,000.

"(b) File with the Public Utilities Commission a blanket bond, or a blanket policy of liability insurance, in an amount to be approved by said Commission, but not to exceed $75,000, conditioned as required by this act, and covering all vehicles lawfully displaying the trade name or identifying design of any individual, association, company, or corporation.

"(c) Create and maintain a sinking fund in such amount as the Public Utilities Commission may require, but not in excess of $50,000, and deposit the same, in trust, for the payment of any judgment recovered against such owner, as provided in this act, with such person, official, or corporation as said Commission shall designate: Provided, That should any such owner elect to comply with the provisions of paragraphs (a), (b), or (c) of this section, such owner shall first file with the Public Utilities Commission an admission of liability, in conformity with the principle of respondeat superior for the tortious acts of the driver or drivers of such vehicle or vehicles aforesaid as shall be driven with the trade name or identifying design of such owner.

"Any cash or collateral deposit and/or any sinking fund herein provided for shall be exempt from attachment or levy for any obligation or liability of the depositor thereof, save as herein provided.

"Within the meaning of this paragraph, the word "owner" shall include any corporation, company, association, joint-stock company or association, partnership or person, and the lessees, trustees or receivers appointed by any court whatsoever, permitting his, their, or its trade name and/or identifying design to be displayed upon vehicles governed by this act."

An additional paragraph to read:

"This act shall take effect 60 days after passage."

The SPEAKER. The Chair will call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that the amendment has probably been offered at the wrong line of the bill.

Mr. SCHULTE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment may be inserted at the proper point in the bill, which is line 24.

The SPEAKER. The Chair also calls attention to the fact that probably the last line of the amendment should be stricken because of the committee amendment that has already been adopted.

Mr. SCHULTE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the last line may be stricken from the amendment.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the modification of the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Modify the amendment to apply to page 3, line 24, and strike out the additional paragraph which reads:
"This act shall take effect 60 days after passage."

Mr. SCHULTE. Mr. Speaker, as the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. NICHOLS] has stated, there is no old line insurance company that will accept the insurance of any taxicab, irrespective of who may be operating it, with the result that the taxicab operators in the District of Columbia and practically all over the United States are at the mercy of some mutual insurance company.

In the past 7 years or since 1929, we have had over 200 mutual insurance companies close their doors and fail to pay off their indebtedness.

The amendment which I have offered allows the taxicab fleets to place a cash bond in the hands of the Public Utility Commission and maintain the bond at all times.

The statement has been made that this insurance will increase the fares 5 cents. It will not; it will increase the fares 10 cents, and I doubt if they can carry it even then. While we all want to be protected and we all want insurance, we are placing it at a height now where they are not going to be able to get it at a price which they can pay. The ordinary taxicab will have to pay around $325 a year. Where can they get the money except from their fares, and with a 20-cent fare this would be impossible. The taxicab operators will tell you they must have 30 cents for the first zone and 40 cents for the next zone, and so on. There must be an increase in spite of what anyone may say to the contrary.

The men who are driving the cabs in the city are making a net profit of around $3 a day. They are very fortunate if they make a profit of $20 a week. The thing I am trying to do is to allow these men to file for group insurance, so that what little premium there may be, they will receive the benefit of it instead of going to some mutual insurance company. I have suggested they put up the amount of $75,000, and that they maintain this at all times.

I do hope the House will accept the amendment.

Mr. THOMPSON of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SCHULTE. I yield.

Mr. THOMPSON of Illinois. Is the purpose of the gentleman's amendment to require that these cab drivers put up cash for their own insurance?

Mr. SCHULTE. The amendment pertains to the fleet operations we have in the District of Columbia, where there are organizations or associations or things of that kind, so they can form their own insurance companies instead of going to some mutual outfit and giving them a profit of seven or eight or ten thousand dollars in premiums.

Mr. THOMPSON of Illinois. Would not that discriminate against the operator who has just one cab?

Mr. SCHULTE. No.

Mr. THOMPSON of Illinois. You are going to require the putting up of $75,000 by an outfit that operates a fleet of several hundred cars, and this would certainly operate to the detriment of the man with one or two cabs.

Mr. SCHULTE. Is not the same thing true with respect to the streetcar companies? Do they not carry their own insurance?

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SCHULTE. I yield.

Mr. NICHOLS. I take it the gentleman intended to change the words to "seventy-five thousand dollars" as well as the figures to "$75,000."

Mr. SCHULTE. Yes.

Mr. NICHOLS. Did not the gentleman also intend to change the amount in paragraph (c) to $75,000?

Mr. SCHULTE. Yes; and I will accept such an amendment.

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to the amendment for the moment.

The amendment provides in paragraph (a) that $5,000, or negotiable collateral of that value, can be put up by an individual or a corporation rather than taking out insurance.

This portion of the amendment I cannot agree to and would strenuously oppose. I am hopeful the gentleman from Indiana will ask that the first paragraph of his amendment be withdrawn. If he does this, it would be perfectly agreeable, so far as I am concerned, to accept the balance of his amendment, if it is also corrected to provide that in lieu of insurance a bond of $75,000 be put up with the Public Utilities Commission and that this bond be maintained at such figure in lieu of insurance to protect the public against liability caused by these operators.

If the gentleman will withdraw the first paragraph of the amendment and then ask that where the words and figures $50,000 appear that this be changed to $75,000, I shall agree to the amendment.

Mr. SCHULTE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that paragraph (a) may be withdrawn, and where the figures "$50,000" appear that there be inserted in lieu thereof the figures "$75,000."

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent to modify his amendment by striking out "$50,000" and inserting in lieu thereof "$75,000." Is there objection?

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. The gentleman means that whenever the word "fifty" appears in the amendment that also should be changed to the word "seventy-five."

Mr. SCHULTE. Yes.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the amendment will be agreed to.

Mr. EBERHARTER. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. It is very difficult for us to follow the reading of the amendment and understand what is going on. I would like to know whether or not the unanimous-consent request would deprive an individual operator of the right to put up $5,000 instead of an insurance policy.

Mr. SCHULTE. Yes; it would.

Mr. EBERHARTER. What is the objection to allowing an individual operator to put up $5,000 cash instead of an insurance policy?

Mr. SCHULTE. There is nothing to stop it.

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Speaker, so far as I am concerned, I have no objection to that provision as an amendment. The amendment did not do that. It went further and permitted corporations to put up $5,000 in lieu of an insurance policy.

Mr. EBERHARTER. As I understand it, if the unanimous-consent request of the gentleman from Indiana is granted, the individual operator must have an insurance policy.

Mr. NICHOLS. That is correct.

Mr. EBERHARTER. That does not give a square deal to the individual operator.

Mr. NICHOLS. Practically the situation is this: Any individual taxicab operator can put up $5,000 cash in lieu of an insurance policy is in a position so financially responsible that he would not have any difficulty in getting an insurance policy.

Mr. EBERHARTER. I do not think that is quite true. Any individual operators who perhaps are not financially able to put up $5,000 may be able to get someone else to put it up for them. Many times the operator has a difficult time in getting an insurance policy, and that would mean that the operator would not be permitted to follow his vocation.

Mr. NICHOLS. We have scratched our heads over this thing in hearings for several days. Our entire interest was to protect the interest of the public and the small independent operator. This bill in its present form, without the proposed amendment, will give the independent operator every protection. Certainly I had nothing in mind to lay anything in the way of the independent operator.

Mr. EBERHARTER. Why not leave in the bill the provision that the independent operator may make a deposit of $5,000? What is the objection to that?

Mr. NICHOLS. As far as I am concerned if the gentleman wants to suggest such an amendment, that in lieu of such an insurance the individual operator could put up $5,000 and maintain $5,000, I have no objection to it.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NICHOLS. Yes.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. How many independent operators are there in the District?

Mr. NICHOLS. A great number.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Does the gentleman think that 10 percent of the independent operators could put up $5,000 cash?

Mr. NICHOLS. No.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Then that would eliminate them.

Mr. NICHOLS. Under the provisions of the bill they can take out insurance.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. But they would have to pay a large premium.

Mr. NICHOLS. The testimony before the committee was that these insurance premiums run about a dollar a day, which would be approximately $365 a year, or about $30 a month, and the testimony also was to the effect that the average taxi driver in the District of Columbia makes about 20 calls a day, and that if you increase the zone rate 5 cents a zone, you would give him additional revenue enough to pay the premium.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Did the gentleman's committee take into consideration the idea of making all owners or drivers of vehicles in the District take out insurance?

Mr. NICHOLS. Absolutely; and I say to the gentleman that is a fine idea; but let me say to the gentleman that the people who operate automobiles for hire owe a greater duty to the public than the individual owner of a vehicle who operates it for his own pleasure.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the modification of the amendment?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks in the interest of a full understanding the Clerk should now report the amendment as modified.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SCHULTE: Following the word "section", page 3, line 24, add a new paragraph, to read:

"Any owner of a public vehicle required hereby to file a bond or policy of insurance may, in lieu thereof:

"(a) File with the Public Utilities Commission a blanket bond, or a blanket policy of liability insurance, in an amount to be approved by said Commission, but not to exceed $75,000, conditioned as required by this act, and covering all vehicles lawfully displaying the trade name or identifying design of any individual, association, company, or corporation.

"(b) Create and maintain a sinking fund in such amount as the Public Utilities Commission may require, but not in excess of $75,000, and deposit the same, in trust, for payment of any judgment recovered against such owner, as provided in this act, with such person, official, or corporation as said Commission shall designate: Provided, That should any such owner elect to comply with the provisions of paragraphs (a) or (b) of this section, such owner shall first file with the Public Utilities Commission an admission of liability, in conformity with the principle of respondeat superior for the tortious acts of the driver or drivers of such vehicle or vehicles aforesaid as shall be driven with the trade name or identifying design of such owner.

"Any cash or collateral deposit and/or any sinking fund herein provided for shall be exempt from attachment or levy for any obligation or liability of the depositor thereof, save as herein provided.

"Within the meaning of this paragraph, the word 'owner' shall include any corporation, company, association, joint stock company or association, partnership or person, and the lessees, trustees, or receivers appointed by any court whatsoever, permitting his, their, or its trade name and/or identifying design to be displayed upon vehicles governed by this act."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. NICHOLS) there were ayes 41 and noes 21.

So the bill was passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

INTEREST RATE ON CERTAIN FEDERAL LAND-BANK LOANS—VETO MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES (H. DOC. NO. 290)

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following veto message from the President of the United States, which was read by the Clerk:

To the House of Representatives:

I return herewith, without my approval, H. R. 6763, entitled "An act to extend for 1 additional year the 3½-percent interest rate on certain Federal land-bank loans, to provide a 4-percent interest rate on such loans for the period July 1, 1938, to June 30, 1939, and to provide for a 4-percent interest rate on Land Bank Commissioner's loans for a period of 2 years."

Section 1 of the bill extends for 2 additional years the policy originally adopted as an emergency measure in 1933 under which borrowers from the Federal land banks are allowed to pay interest on their loans at rates lower than those provided in their mortgage contracts.

Section 2 of the bill broadens the field of loans on which interest reductions are granted by providing that for a period of 2 years interest may be paid at the reduced rate of 4 percent on loans made by the Land Bank Commissioner.

SECTION 1. FEDERAL LAND-BANK LOANS

At present, through the sale of bonds to the investing public, new loans are being made by Federal land banks at the lowest rate that has ever been made available to farmers generally in this country, namely, 4 percent per annum. A decrease in farm-mortgage interest rates has been brought about through the refinancing operations of the Federal land banks and the Land Bank Commissioner. The average rate of interest on the private loans refinanced by the Federal land banks in 1933 and subsequent years has been 6.3 percent. Consequently, those farmers who refinanced their private loans in 1933 and 1934 by converting them into 5-percent Federal land-bank loans cut their annual interest charges more than 20 percent, while those who have refinanced at the present 4-percent rate have obtained a permanent reduction in excess of 40 percent. I believe, therefore, that there is no justification for continued Government subsidy of Federal land-bank interest rates below the unprecedentedly low rate these banks are now offering farmer-borrowers on a business basis.

Furthermore, the ability of farmers to pay interest at the rates provided for in their mortgages with the Federal land banks has been very substantially improved, due to an increase of more than 100 percent in the level of farm prices since the emergency period of 1932–33. In December 1936 the index of farm prices as reported by the Department of Agriculture stood at 126, as compared with 55 for the month of March 1933, and an average of 100 for the pre-war period August 1909 to July 1914. The gross farm income as estimated by the Department of Agriculture also rose from $5,337,000,000 in 1932 to $9,530,000,000 in 1936.

As an illustration of the lightening of the interest burden during the past 4 years through improvements in farm prices and the refinancing of farm debt, the following instance may be cited: The quantity of farm products required to meet the annual interest charge on a 6.3-percent private loan refinanced as a 5-percent Federal land bank loan in 1933 is now only 63 percent of the quantity required during the 5 pre-war years 1910 to 1914. The greatly increased debt-paying capacity indicated in the foregoing figures is borne out by the record of actual payments on Federal land bank loans. Approximately 85 percent of all loans of the Federal land banks were in good standing at the end of 1936, as opposed to approximately 50 percent delinquency when the emergency legislation was first passed.

The reduction of the rates of interest on Federal land bank loans to 3½ percent for the fiscal year 1938, and to 4 percent for the fiscal year 1939, as required by the bill for loans made through national farm loan associations, would, it is estimated, necessitate payments from the Treasury in the amount of approximately $31,700,000 for the former year and $21,200,000 for the latter, a total of $52,900,000. The effect of such an arrangement is that part of the individual borrower's interest is paid for him by the United States. In other words, it constitutes a gift to individual borrowers from the Federal Treasury.

As indicated by me in my letter of June 8, 1937, addressed to the committees of Congress then considering this legislation, the whole question involves the rate of interest charged by Government agencies and relates not only to farm loans but also to moneys lent by the Home Owners' Loan Corporation, the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, the Public Works Administration, and other agencies.

The foregoing considerations have led me to the conclusion that further reductions in the interest rates payable on Federal land bank loans are not justified.

SECTION 2. LAND BANK COMMISSIONER LOANS

The farm loans made by the Land Bank Commissioner on behalf of the Federal Farm Mortgage Corporation bear an interest rate of 5 percent per annum. In view of the circumstances under which these loans are made, it cannot reasonably be said that a 5-percent rate of interest is excessive. Comparison with Federal land bank loans may serve to illustrate this point. A majority of the loans made by the Land Bank Commissioner are secured by second mortgages. Federal land bank loans may only be granted on first-mortgage security. A Land Bank Commissioner loan may be made for an amount which, taking into account any prior liens, equals 75 percent of the value of the property, including both land and buildings. A Federal land bank loan is restricted by law to a sum not exceeding 50 percent of the value of the land and 20 percent of the value of the improvements. Land Bank Commisisoner loans are frequently granted upon farms which, because of some physical or economic hazard, would not qualify as security for a Federal land bank loan. Finally, Land Bank Commissioner loans lack the element of cooperative responsibility through stock ownership by borrowers of their national farm loan associations upon which the Federal land bank system is built. In view of the added factors of risk present in the average Land Bank Commissioner loan, I feel that the 5-percent interest rate charged on these loans compares favorably with the present 4-percent rate of the Federal land banks. I have been unable to find any system in which second-mortgage loans have been made available to farmers generally on a basis as low as the present 5-percent Land Bank Commissioner loan rate.

The contemplated reduction in interest rates on Commissioner loans from 5 percent to 4 percent under the bill would reduce the annual income of the Federal Farm Mortgage Corporation, which owns these loans, by an amount of approximately $8,350,000. No provision is made for a corresponding reimbursement of this sum by the Treasury to the Corporation. Losses suffered by the Federal Farm Mortgage Corporation ultimately fall upon the United States as the sole holder of the Corporation's capital stock. More than this, the payment of principal and interest on all bonds issued by the Corporation is guaranteed by the United States.

Any reduction in the interest rate on Commissioner loans will place the Federal Farm Mortgage Corporation in such a position that there is a definite possibility that it may not be able to meet its obligations from its own income.

The passage of this bill was not contemplated in the preparation of the Budget for the fiscal year 1938. As the Congress is well aware, I am definitely seeking the balancing of that Budget. To this end, I have called upon the heads of all Government departments, establishments, and agencies to set up reserves of not less than 10 percent of all funds available for the fiscal year 1938, except such funds as are not susceptible to such treatment. Approval by me of the bill under consideration, involving as it does an additional draft upon the Treasury in excess of $30,000,000 during the fiscal year 1938, would be totally inconsistent with my purpose to bring about a balancing of the Budget for that year.

For all of these reasons I am constrained to withhold my approval of the bill H. R. 6763.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, June 9, 1937.

The SPEAKER. The objections of the President will be entered at large upon the Journal, and the message and bill will be printed as a House document.

The question is, Will the House, on reconsideration, agree to pass the bill, the objections of the President to the contrary notwithstanding?

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that action on the message and on the motion be postponed until tomorrow, without prejudice.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. JONES. Yes; I yield.

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman inform us what he intends to do, whether we will have a direct vote on it or whether the gentleman intends to ask that it be referred to the committee?

Mr. JONES. We are having a committee meeting in the morning, and I would prefer to talk the matter over with my committee before I make final decision in that matter.

Mr. SNELL. But as I understand the gentleman's request, that it go over until tomorrow without prejudice, the same condition will exist tomorrow as exists now?

Mr. JONES. That is correct. The matter will be in exactly the same status tomorrow if consent is granted.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. JONES]?

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. JONES. Is it in order to move that it go over until tomorrow without prejudice?

The SPEAKER. A motion to postpone consideration until tomorrow is in order.

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. JONES] has the floor. Does the gentleman from Texas yield for a parliamentary inquiry?

Mr. JONES. I yield, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. LAMBERTSON. It is my understanding that nothing is in order but the vote. That is the regular order.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman submit a parliamentary inquiry? If so, will the gentleman please state it?

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Is that not correct?

The SPEAKER. Is what correct?

Mr. LAMBERTSON. That nothing can intervene but the vote?

The SPEAKER. No. That is not the rule. The Chair will state to the gentleman, in reply to his inquiry, referring to page 278 of Cannon's Procedure in the House of Representatives, a motion to refer to a day certain is in order.

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. JONES]?

There was no objection.

FARM-TENANCY BILL

Mr. JONES, from the Committee on Agriculture, submitted a conference report on the bill (H. R. 7562, Rept. No. 1198), to encourage and promote the ownership of farm homes and to make the possession of such homes more secure, to provide for the general welfare of the United States, to provide additional credit facilities for agricultural development, and for other purposes, for printing in the RECORD.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA LEGISLATION

LIMITING TAXICABS IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

Mr. PALMISANO. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 6697) to authorize and empower the Public Utilities Commission of the District of Columbia to limit the number of public vehicles to be licensed and operated as taxicabs in the District of Columbia, and I ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maryland?

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York and Mr. DIRKSEN objected.

The SPEAKER. This bill is on the Union Calendar.

Mr. PALMISANO. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 6697; and pending that I ask unanimous consent that the debate be limited to 1 hour.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maryland moves that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 6697, and pending that asks unanimous consent that general debate on the bill be limited to 1 hour, to be confined to the bill, and to be equally divided between himself and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN].

Mr. FORD of California. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will not the gentleman make the time for general debate an hour and a half? This is a very important bill.

Mr. PALMISANO. Mr. Speaker, I modify my request accordingly and ask that general debate be limited to one hour and a half, to be confined to the bill, and to be equally divided between myself and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN].

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maryland?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Maryland.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. O'MALLEY) there were—ayes 85, noes 9.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground there is not a quorum present.

The SPEAKER. Evidently there is no quorum present. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 249, nays 71, not voting 111, as follows:

Mr. ANDREWS, Mr. CARTWRIGHT, Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH, and Mr. REED of New York changed their vote from "nay" to "yea."

Mr. HOOK changed his vote from "yea" to "nay."

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The doors were opened.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 6697) to authorize and empower the Public Utilities Commission of the District of Columbia to limit the number of public vehicles to be licensed and operated as taxicabs in the District of Columbia, with Mr. STEAGALL in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

By unanimous consent, the first reading of the bill was dispensed with.

Mr. PALMISANO. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. RANDOLPH].

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the action of the Members by their vote, just announced, in allowing this bill, H. R. 6697, to come before the Committee this afternoon for consideration. I am ever considerate of my colleagues in the consideration of proposed legislation. Certainly, in allowing this measure to come before the House this afternoon we are proceeding in an orderly fashion. It must be remembered, as I know the majority by the vote that has just been recorded do remember and understand well, that this is District of Columbia day. The measures upon the calendar, four in number, for consideration this afternoon, are brought here as a result of subcommittee, and later committee, action based upon hearings, and in some instances hearings over a long period of time.

In the consideration of the pending measure I want to be very clearly understood at the outset. I should like to remind the House that, as many Members are aware, a great many times on previous occasions similar legislation has been before the House. I have no desire to weaken my argument for a single moment, but I have not come to it as yet. On all of those occasions, however, similar measures looking toward possible limitation of the number of taxicabs operating in the District of Columbia have been defeated. You are aware of that just as I am aware of it. So in the Seventy-fifth Congress, by action of the District Committee chairman, a subcommittee of which I had the responsibility to serve as chairman, was appointed to consider very carefully the possibilities of once again bringing before this House legislation looking toward the possible limitation of taxicabs in Washington, D. C. We had hearings which we believe were exhaustive, and that is the reason that I, as one member of the Committee on the District of Columbia, thank the Members of the House who voted to allow at least the consideration of this measure.

I should like now to direct my attention to the pending legislation and to the provisions which you will desire to get very clearly in your own minds, as we go along in the consideration of the measure.

We find that as of June 7, 1937, there were operating in the District of Columbia 4,757 taxicabs. In grouping these cabs we find that the independents, that is, the individually owned and operated cabs upon the streets of Washington, D. C., number 605. We find that 19 associations, both white and colored, were operating cabs in the District of Columbia.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANDOLPH. I yield.

Mr. REED of New York. Has the gentleman covered the question of insurance? Do they carry insurance?

Mr. RANDOLPH. No; there is no insurance of cabs in Washington, but the House passed earlier this afternoon a bill making the carrying of liability insurance a part of the law in the District of Columbia.

Nineteen of these associations, colored and white, operating in the District of Columbia have on the streets a total number of 3,938 cabs. The third group operating cabs in the District of Columbia comes under the heading of company as against independent or associations of drivers. We found 214 cabs in the category of company-owned and operated. This makes a grand total, as I have already said, of 4,757 cabs as of June 7.

Understand it is not the cab alone which we consider today in the bill before us. We should also remember that the 4,757 cabs have 5,493 drivers, or approximately 700 more drivers than cabs operating in the District of Columbia.

Going back to 1928, may I remind the committee there were but 783 cabs operating in the District of Columbia. In 1930 there were but 1,387 cabs operating in the District of Columbia.

Mr. GREEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANDOLPH. I yield to the gentleman from Florida.

Mr. GREEN. What was the charge when there were a thousand cabs in the District to go from here to the Treasury Department, for instance?

Mr. RANDOLPH. The rate was higher.

Mr. GREEN. Yes. It was about three times as much.

Mr. RANDOLPH. May I say to the gentleman from Florida I hope consideration of the pending measure will not be based upon any Member of the House desiring to raise or lower the rate for riding in the cabs of the District of Columbia. We did not bring the legislation here with that thought in my mind. When consideration of this measure is completed, I hope the gentlemen will agree with me the fare for riding in any zone has nothing whatever to do with the pending measure.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANDOLPH. I yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Why should not that be a very vital thing as to what the public will have to pay, as well as the service rendered by these cabs?

Mr. RANDOLPH. I may say to the gentleman from Oklahoma, it is a very vital thing, and I have no argument with him about that. Personally, I believe in the District of Columbia the rate should be raised 5 cents a zone. Perhaps the gentleman does not agree with me, and I assume from his question he does not agree with me; but in the consideration of the pending legislation I do not want to discuss that matter. I may say, however, that if we have a limitation of taxicabs in the District of Columbia under the provisions of this bill it will not necessarily follow there will be an increase for riding in the vehicles.

Mr. BEVERLY M. VINCENT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANDOLPH. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. BEVERLY M. VINCENT. If we reduce the number of cabs in the city, will that not put men out of work?

Mr. RANDOLPH. I do not feel that way. I will bring that up, if the gentleman will allow me to proceed a moment.

To continue, with the number of cabs operated in Washington, D. C., in 1933 there were 4,000 cabs operating in the District. From 1933 to 1937 there was an increase of 1,757 cabs in a period of 4 years. Back in 1928, to go further back, there were only 3,373 drivers operating cabs in the District of Columbia. Now there are almost 5,500 drivers.

Let us look at this picture for a moment, and I would like the attention of all my colleagues of the committee as I discuss this proposition. Washington has practically twice the number of cabs as the aggregate in Pittsburgh, in which city there are but 247 cabs; in Chicago, in which city there are 1,500 cabs; and in Philadelphia, where there are 728 cabs, a total in those three cities of 2,475, as against 4,757 cabs in Washington.

Mr. SNYDER of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANDOLPH. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. SNYDER of Pennsylvania. Since noon I went outside and stopped six taxicabs and asked the drivers whether or not they were satisfied with the taxicab situation as it exists at the present time. They all informed me they were satisfied.

Mr. RANDOLPH. I may say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that I know, of course, his observation is true because he is a truthful man; but in the committee hearings we found that the drivers were unanimously in favor of the provisions of the pending legislation.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. PALMISANO. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 5 additional minutes.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Chairman, I want to be courteous to all my colleagues in yielding for questions.

Mr. GRAY of Indiana. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANDOLPH. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. GRAY of Indiana. Is there not a necessity for a greater number of taxicabs in the city of Washington, the Nation's Capital, than in these other cities to which reference has been made?

Mr. RANDOLPH. I agree with the gentleman. This is a tourist city. We recognize that fact.

Mr. O'CONNELL of Rhode Island. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANDOLPH. I yield to the gentleman from Rhode Island.

Mr. O'CONNELL of Rhode Island. Last Wednesday afternoon I had occasion to go to the ball game and I hailed about 50 taxis before I could get one to take me. Can the gentleman tell me why they were so busy?

Mr. RANDOLPH. Of course, there were thousands on thousands of persons who came here from one-fourth of the congressional districts in the United States to see that all-star game. I know there were, conservatively, over 150 from my district alone. I could not get tickets for all of them. I tried to get as many as I could.

Mr. O'CONNELL of Rhode Island. I could not get a taxicab to take me home.

Mr. RANDOLPH. I did not see the game. I gave my ticket to a constituent. He is the sheriff of one of the counties in my district and he would have felt very badly if he could not have received a ticket, since he is a real fan.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Are there too many taxicabs here?

Mr. RANDOLPH. I believe there are, or I would not be up here speaking for the pending legislation.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Would the gentleman like to see the same situation prevail here as in Pittsburgh with two-hundred-and-some-odd taxicabs.

Mr. RANDOLPH. No. But we want the Public Utilities Commission in Washington, D. C., to have the power to regulate in their discretion the number of cabs that operate in Washington, D. C. I may say to the gentleman that the District of Columbia is the only city in the country that a commission or some other agency does not have the power to regulate the number of cabs that may operate.

Mr. HOOK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANDOLPH. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan. You in Detroit have the power to regulate the number of cabs.

Mr. HOOK. Would not this bill allow the development of a price-fixing monopoly?

Mr. RANDOLPH. I believe we have pending amendments which would not allow a monopoly to exist in the District of Columbia.

Mr. LANZETTA. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANDOLPH. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. LANZETTA. Does not the gentleman think that placing a restriction in the bill at this time, especially when we have so many men out of work, would take away from some men an opportunity to earn some kind of a living?

Mr. RANDOLPH. I may say to the gentleman in connection with the opportunity for employment that our committee in its investigation discovered there are approximately 250, perhaps more, Government employees having good jobs in Washington, D. C., who go to their work, park their taxicabs in front of the building in which they work, go in, and then at the end of the day come out and get in their cabs and operate on the streets of Washington, D. C., in competition with men who are trying to earn a livelihood here.

Mr. GREEN. If the gentleman will permit, I think we should put in the bill a provision to eliminate those leeches.

Mr. RANDOLPH. We have it in the bill.

Mr. GREEN. That is all right, but we do not have to pass a bill which will do more harm than good in order to accomplish that purpose.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANDOLPH. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. SABATH. Years ago I introduced a bill prohibiting Government employees who are regularly employed from obtaining permits to operate taxicabs. I notice in this bill is a proviso reading as follows:

Provided further, That no new license shall be issued to any person who has regular, full-time employment.

This provision would still permit Government employees who now have permits to operate, and there are about 300 or 400 such persons, as I understand.

Mr. RANDOLPH. That is true to this extent. We are trying to allow the Public Utilities Commission to reduce the number of cabs, and of course that fact would be taken into consideration in taking such cabs off the streets of Washington, D. C.

Mr. SABATH. Should not an amendment be adopted providing that we should first prevent the drivers who are otherwise regularly employed from obtaining renewal of their licenses?

Mr. RANDOLPH. I think I should support such an amendment, I may say to the gentlemen.

Mr. SABATH. I have heard expressed by several Members who are very sincere and honest the fear that the last provision in the bill, regarding the sale of cabs by the present owners, may tend to bring about a monopoly.

Mr. RANDOLPH. I may say we will offer an amendment to limit the number of cabs in any one company, which we trust will take care of that situation.

Mr. SABATH. That will help the passage of the bill.

Mr. RANDOLPH. I thank the gentleman.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. PALMISANO. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from West Virginia.

Mr. RANDOLPH. I would like to yield to everyone who would like to ask questions, and I wonder if I may be allowed to proceed for 3 minutes without interruption, and then answer questions?

Mr. DUNN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANDOLPH. If the gentleman will allow me to continue for 3 minutes without interruption, I will answer questions in the remaining 2 minutes.

The limitation in cabs operating which is to be brought about in the District of Columbia is believed to be painless and fair to all existing holders of licenses, first, by voluntary retirement, second, by failing to renew licenses, and third, where the operator himself is found to be unfit to operate a common-carrier vehicle on the streets of this city.

In 1934 the Public Utilities Commission in its report to Congress asked that it be given discretionary right to limit the operation of cabs in the District of Columbia. The Commission said:

The Commission is likewise of the opinion that there should be a limitation in the number of taxicabs permitted to operate on the public highway. This view is entertained by many others, including a goodly portion of the industry itself. There should be a convenience and necessity rule. The equitable way of putting this into effect would be to permit all licensees to continue and deny others entrance into the field until the number is reduced. This is an adequate number to reasonably serve the public, giving due consideration to many transients and sightseers coming to the National Capital. Likewise, this number would be sufficient to prevent a monopoly and return to excessive rates which existed at the time of the advent of the flat-rate system. Such legislation would undoubtedly substantially relieve traffic conditions in the District of Columbia, and, in addition, materially better the drivers' conditions, both physically and financially.

In their report to Congress in 1935 the Commission asked the same right, saying:

The Commission is convinced that there should be a limitation upon the number of taxicabs permitted to operate within the District of Columbia. This view is held by many others, including a substantial portion of the industry itself. A convenience and necessity rule should be established, giving the Commission authority to fix limitations upon the number of taxicabs. A reduction to any limit that might be fixed could be effected equitably by permitting existing licensees to continue in business, but refusing to permit license assignments and new operators to enter the field. Any number determined upon should be sufficient to prevent a monopoly and a return to the scale of rates in effect prior to the advent of the flat or zone-rate system. A reduction in the number of taxicabs would undoubtedly afford some relief to traffic congestion and would inure to the physical and financial benefit of drivers.

And again in 1936 they asked that they be given this right in the District of Columbia.

We believe, from the standpoint of the driver, physically and financially, and from the standpoint of the traffic situation in the District of Columbia, that an improvement will follow the passage of this bill if it is enacted into law; and we believe also no monopoly will grow up in the District of Columbia as the result of the passage of this proposed legislation.

I want to be fair, and I yield first to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DUNN].

Mr. DUNN. Did I correctly understand the gentleman to say there are many Government employees who are operating cabs?

Mr. RANDOLPH. We believe there are between 250 and 300.

Mr. DUNN. Perhaps the reason these men are operating cabs is that the amount of money the Government pays them for the valuable services they render is not sufficient, and they are compelled to do this kind of work.

Mr. RANDOLPH. I cannot discuss that proposition.

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANDOLPH. I yield to a member of the committee, the gentleman from Maryland.

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland. Is it not true that the permits the Government employees must obtain to operate their taxicabs come from the Public Utilities Commission itself?

Mr. RANDOLPH. It cannot refuse to grant them at the present time.

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland. It does grant them.

Mr. SECREST. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANDOLPH. I yield.

Mr. SECREST. The gentleman has stated the number of cabs belonging to the associations or companies will be limited. I am wondering what limitation has been agreed upon.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Five hundred. Personally I would be ready to reduce that number, I may say to the gentleman.

Mr. SECREST. Understand the Diamond Cab Association has about 2,500 cabs. Would this automatically destroy their association?

Mr. RANDOLPH. I may say that the figure the gentleman referred to is not correct. It is 1,200.

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland. If the gentleman will yield to me further, as I understand, while that is an association the cabs are individually operated. The cab driver furnishes all the gasoline and pays all the expenses, and simply pays a certain amount per day to the so-called association.

Mr. RANDOLPH. In a general way, that is the picture.

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland. Is that not a fact, according to the testimony?

Mr. RANDOLPH. Yes; that is true.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANDOLPH. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Is there any provision in this bill which would prevent the Commission from doubling taxi fares within the next 12 months, if it so desired?

Mr. RANDOLPH. I will be pleased to have the gentleman offer such an amendment, and I shall support it.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I would be glad to offer such an amendment.

Mr. FORD of California. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANDOLPH. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. FORD of California. The gentleman has stated he is going to limit the associations to a certain number. What is to prevent such associations from getting together and creating a lovely bit of monopoly by interlocking and having it all in one crowd?

Mr. RANDOLPH. The Public Utilities Commission of the District of Columbia is composed of gentlemen who are fair and who desire to do everything possible to see that no monopoly exists in the District of Columbia. We believe that is the picture now, and we trust it will be true in the future.

Mr. FORD of California. Is not that possible because they may work out such a plan right under their noses?

Mr. RANDOLPH. Then I may say the legislation in that respect does not provide for any cure.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANDOLPH. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Are you not creating a monopoly for the present operators of the big taxicab companies who have such a large number of cabs; and if you provide a deadline, are they not going to get the benefit of the legislation to the detriment of the small, independent operator in the District of Columbia?

Mr. RANDOLPH. I may say to the gentleman from New York that we believe we would improve the bad situation as it exists today.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. O'CONNOR].

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Mr. Chairman, I hardly knew of the existence of this bill until this morning; but it is so contrary to what I believe is a fundamental principle in American life that I am compelled to oppose it.

I believe the last thing we should ever do is to say to any citizen, at any time, present or future, that he or she cannot engage in any business, occupation, or profession he or she may see fit to enter. This was one of the fundamental defects in the administration of N. R. A. I was, and still am, heartily in favor of the fundamental principles of N. R. A., but in its administration our citizens were told: "There are enough people in the bootblacking business, there are enough people in the shoestring business, there are enough people in the sand and gravel business, and we will not let anybody else go into that business."

Suppose you lawyers, just before you were going to be admitted to the bar, were faced with the situation where in your own State they passed a law that no more lawyers should be admitted to practice. Who is there, whether it is a utility commission or the Government itself, State or Federal, who can say to one of our citizens that he cannot enter a business because it is overcrowded? Is it not the answer that if a person is so senseless as to enter a business which is overcrowded competition will take care of the matter?

I cannot see the right of a commission in the District of Columbia, I cannot see the right of the District of Columbia, or the right of the Federal Government to say to a man who wants to go into the taxicab business, "You shall not go into that field; there are too many in it." Whether he makes a living in the business or not is his concern.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. I yield.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Is it not true that in the gentleman's city of New York there is regulation of the number of taxicabs?

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. I am so informed; but I do not endorse it at all, and I have some suspicion of the motives of the people who put it over.

Mr. RANDOLPH. I hope the gentleman does not apply that here.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. I am talking about New York and not about this bill or the District of Columbia.

Mr. RANDOLPH. I know the gentleman is honest in his opposition.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Now, you talk about a painless method of reduction of the number of taxicabs——

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. I yield.

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland. I may say that we have a law in Maryland almost exactly like the pending bill, which gives the public service commission the right to regulate the number of taxicabs, and for a number of years it has been impossible for an individual to obtain a taxicab license in Baltimore. The result has been we have a high rate there, and not only that but the service there is probably the worst of any city of comparable size in the United States.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. That is a shameless situation from an American standpoint.

It has been said here today that by a painless method, as these licenses expire, no new ones will be issued, but what about the new fellows who want to go into the taxicab business?

I sympathize with the taxicab operators in the District. I realize they have never received a proper fare. For years I have been sympathetic with their demands for a proper fare. They do not get it here. They do not get a fare comparable with fares paid in other cities. They carry you 6 miles for 30 cents, which surely does not even pay their cost of operation, but when anybody tells me there are too many taxicabs in the District of Columbia, I cannot verify or corroborate that fact by experience in the morning or when we come out of the Capitol in the afternoon at adjournment, and especially when it rains.

You cannot make proper comparisons between the District of Columbia and other large cities.

We have a floating, tourist, visiting population coming here every day which has no means of transportation. Our streetcars are mostly gone. We have no subways, no elevated trains, and for these visiting people practically the only transportation available is the taxicab, and that at a ridiculously low rate. So I do not agree with the statement that we have too many taxicabs.

Mr. GRAY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Yes.

Mr. GRAY of Pennsylvania. I agree with the gentleman's fundamental principle of American employment, and entering into industry or business, but what are you going to do in a situation such as we have in Washington, where a cab driver practically runs another car off the street? Many of them are really a public nuisance. I think there are so many here that they have become a public nuisance.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. I am not aware of that. I think the "public nuisance" in the District of Columbia consists in the thousands and thousands of cars owned by private individuals which are parked all day and all night in our streets and parks. [Applause.] If anybody wanted to enforce the parking law in the District, I could take the chief of police and within 2 hours find 2,000 violations within a block of the Commerce Building, and we know they do not and will not enforce the law. We know that Government employees drive their cars a mile or 2 miles in the morning, park them all day long, just to drive them back 1 or 2 miles in the evening. The maintenance of garages is discouraged. While garages can be obtained for $5 a month, yet everyone connected with the problem has advised these people to park these cars on the streets all day long, with millions of dollars of economic waste in depreciation of the cars. Will anybody tell me when they ever saw a decent, clean-looking car in the District of Columbia that did not come from out of town?

Mr. PALMISANO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Yes.

Mr. PALMISANO. I agree with the gentleman, so far as the parking law is concerned, but I would like the gentleman to tell the Members of Congress where these $5 garages may be obtained in the District of Columbia.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. I read in the papers that they can be, but certain people in the District discourage the building of garages and encourage the people to park their cars on the streets day and night, and in front of fire hydrants. I have seen the fire department go into a street packed solidly on both sides, so that the department could not get to a fire plug. Some day there will be a major catastrophe in the District of Columbia because of the laxity of the authorities in permitting this all-day and all-night parking.

Mr. PALMISANO. The gentlewoman from Indiana [Mrs. JENCKES] informs me that she would like to know where she could get one of these $5-a-month garages.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield, I shall be glad to answer the question. At 1451 Harvard Street there are three that now rent for $5 a month.

Mr. CRAWFORD. There are lots of them right back of the Office Building.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. And within three blocks of this Capitol they can be rented for $3 a month, and in front of them night and day you will find cars parked, blocking the highway.

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. Does the gentleman know of any town or city of over 2,000 people where they permit cars to be parked all day and night on the streets?

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Of course not. In New York we drag them to the pound, and it costs $10 every time to redeem them, for the hauler's charge.

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. That is what we do in Denver.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. And they should do it here.

Mr. MOSER of Pennsylvania. And in line with the gentleman's argument, would it not be well to recall that good democratic doctrine that competition is the life of trade?

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Absolutely; and once you start to stop anybody from going into any business, you stifle competition, something contrary to the interest of America.

In this bill is another item. You talk about preventing Government employees or other workers from driving a cab at night or in their spare time. What do you want to do? Do you want to stifle the ambitions of some people? I imagine a great many of us worked in our spare time at different times. Government employees do not get much money. Why should you, in principle, say to an ambitious, industrious Government employee that he shall not work in his spare time driving a taxicab? During this depression in New York we have had lawyers, we have had physicians driving taxicabs in order to make a living. We have had other people, working in businesses at small salaries, driving taxicabs.

This bill is fundamentally unsound for those two reasons, because it prevents a man going into the business or occupation of his choice, and it just stifles the ambition of industrious people who want to add to their meager Government salaries. I trust the bill will be defeated, if it is not withdrawn before its conclusion. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 10 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, when this bill is reduced to its essentials it is nothing more than a bill to empower the Public Utilities Commission of the District of Columbia to fix the number of cabs that that utilities commission feels is requisite to the transit needs of the town and then, by progressive steps, to diminish the number of cabs to that point. As the distinguished gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. RANDOLPH] has said, there are approximately 4,800 cabs in Washington.

I am informed that the Public Utilities Commission or someone else has either informally or formally intimated that 2,500 cabs would be sufficient for this city. If that is true, it will mean that 2,300 cabs will, sooner or later, be taken off the streets. If an existing holder of a taxicab license should die, that license would automatically be canceled and no other license would be issued as a replacement license. If a license were canceled for violation of the law, no replacement license would issue. So, by devious processes the number of cabs would ultimately be reduced to 2,500.

First of all, I am opposed to reducing the number of cabs and certainly I am opposed to reducing them according to the principle set out in this bill.

May I submit to the Members of this Committee that there is a taxicab association operating in the city of Washington at the present time that has, according to report, 2,000 cabs upon the streets? If the number is fixed at 2,500 it will mean that the largest taxicab company, if it does not permit one of its licenses to lapse, will have a substantial monopoly on the taxicab business in the city of Washington.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Will the gentleman yield for what I hope is a correction?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I think I know what the gentleman has in mind. Perhaps I disagree with him that the Diamond Taxicab Co. has only 1,500 cabs.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Thirteen hundred.

Mr. DIRKSEN. But they are the largest operators. Probably it is somewhere between 1,300 and 2,000; but the fact remains that they have the preponderant number of cabs in Washington, D. C., which means that for practical purposes they will have a monopoly when we get down to 2,500 cabs. That might not be so bad if we were not confronted with the kind of traction situation which we have in Washington at the present time. If the Members of this Committee do not know it, the Capital Transit Co. has filed two petitions to raise streetcar rates in this town. They have taken away the weekly passes on which you could ride for $1 and $1.25, and in addition thereto they are not only petitioning for an increase in rates but they are asking to continue the putting on of one-man cars. In a little while you will have a monopolistic situation in Washington where the transportation facilities will be controlled by the Capital Transit Co. and by one or two taxicab companies. That will be a fine spectacle when the public of Washington is made to depend upon that sort of a system, because I, for one, have little faith in the Public Utilities Commission of Washington, D. C.

I have sat as a member of a subcommittee conducting some hearings on this matter, because I have introduced two bills, one to stop them from putting on one-man cars, and the other to freeze the rate where it was some years ago when a merger took place between the two traction companies. All this matter has been constantly aired before the Public Utilities Commission. My own personal notion, without casting any reflections upon the gentlemen who constitute the Commission, is that they are constantly favoring the traction company; and that perhaps they are monopolistic minded. So you will precipitate a condition in this town, if this bill passes, where the transportation facilities will be lodged under the control and supervision of a few companies, and then you may very well anticipate that there is going to be an increase in rates. When we think of increases in rates we perhaps think of the 435 Members of this House who use taxicabs and streetcars. Increased rates as applied to legislators are a mere drop in the bucket as compared with the real issue involved. What about the other 700,000 people in Washington? What about the 127,000 Government employees who have to go back and forth to work on busses and streetcars and taxicabs, where the average level of pay is around $1,500 a year? They are the people who are really going to experience the burden that may be imposed upon them if we ever set up a monopoly, wittingly or unwittingly.

Now, what is the situation in Baltimore, the native city of the chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia? I understand they got a bill or an ordinance passed whereby a similar condition prevails to that contemplated in this bill. I am also informed that when a taxicab operator starts cruising up and down one of the downtown streets of Baltimore where there is located a streetcar line, he is likely to be arrested for being a vagrant, if you please, cruising there in competition with the streetcar line.

If we set up a monopoly how far are we going in that direction when the Public Utilities Commission, in my humble opinion, has not been doing its duty to the people in Washington, D. C.?

Mr. PALMISANO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield.

Mr. PALMISANO. I would like to ask the gentleman, referring to these Government employees who would be compelled to pay a higher rate: Are they the same Government employees to whom the gentleman from New York was referring who come down and park their machines in the street all day long?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I have no idea, but I think that the gentleman, out of his own universal experience, having been downtown at some time or other when people go to work, will realize how they crowd into the busses and streetcars like so many sardines. They are not the people who bring their machines to Washington. I have no doubt but what they are the preponderant element of the working people who are ultimately going to be penalized if this kind of bill goes through so that you set up a virtual transportation monopoly.

Mr. BEVERLY M. VINCENT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield.

Mr. BEVERLY M. VINCENT. If this bill goes through and the number of taxicabs are reduced from 4,700 to 2,500, there will necessarily, in my judgment, be an increase in fare. Will not that necessarily cause the streetcar company to raise its fares also?

Mr. DIRKSEN. The streetcar company is trying to do that right now. One of the most ghastly things this Congress ever did was to deny the appropriation to set up a people's counsel. Once upon a time Bill Roberts, one of the best two-fisted lawyers in Washington, was the people's counsel. Congress had to appropriate for that office through the appropriation provided for the Public Utilities Commission. Whether they made some representation to cut out that appropriation or not I do not know, but there is no people's counsel in Washington today. The result is that there is no advocate to come before the Commission and plead the cause of the people. I would not feel quite so suspicious about such a bill as this if the people had a representative there who might very well plead their cause; but they have not, and the reason they have not is because the Congress of the United States has been derelict in its duty in that respect, in making no provision for the office of people's counsel.

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield.

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland. Is it the gentleman's understanding that if this bill becomes effective and the Public Utilities Commission should fix the number of taxicabs at 3,000, then, if some individual or some small group of owners desired to obtain permits to operate taxicabs they would be unable to do so just as they are in the city of Baltimore today?

Mr. DIRKSEN. They will be unable to get original permits until the number gets to something below that fixed by the Commission as the requisite number for this town.

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland. Will it not lead to a trafficking in taxicab permits among different individuals? In other words, as in Baltimore, permits will be sold by one individual to another for exorbitant prices because new permits cannot be obtained.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Yes.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield.

Mr. LUCAS. Do I understand the gentleman from Illinois to say that a Democratic committee is championing a bill which will ultimately bring about a monopoly?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I will say in answer to my distinguished colleague from Illinois that the bill speaks for itself.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. If a company has, as the gentleman says, 1,300 or 1,400 cabs, and there is going to be a limit of 2,500 cabs, are they going to fail to renew their licenses?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Oh, no.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Would not that lead to a complete monopoly of the taxicab situation?

Mr. DIRKSEN. There is always that implication. The reduction will be brought about through death of operators or operators failing to renew their licenses, or if an operator violates the law his license may be taken away from him. We may see a situation of that kind grow up, where they will play ducks and drakes with the taxicab operators in the hope of diminishing the number of taxicabs. There is always that danger.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 5 additional minutes.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield.

Mr. RANDOLPH. If I may be permitted, in the gentleman's time, to supplement the answer which he gave to the gentleman from Illinois, I should like to say that the committee, I am certain, in bringing this proposal before the House, did not desire to vest a monopoly in the taxicab industry in Washington, D. C. Rather, we had hoped to take a first major step in the stabilization of that industry in Washington, D. C.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield.

Mr. BOILEAU. At the present time in the matter of cab associations are the licenses issued to individuals as members of the association, or are they issued to the association as such?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I think they are all issued to the individuals.

Mr. BOILEAU. The gentleman made a statement in the earlier part of his remarks that perhaps I misinterpreted. I understood him to say that the associations would be able to keep the total number of licenses issued to them intact. If the licenses are issued to individuals, would not the number be diminished?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Yes; when terminated.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Except if they were sold.

Mr. BOILEAU. Therefore, they would not be a fixed number for the association.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I do not doubt that; that may be true if they are issued to individuals, but that does not discount the fact that the associations will still maintain a major interest in the transportation facilities of Washington. A certain number may be canceled out, and I expect some will be canceled out, no doubt; but on the basis of what the Public Utilities Commission is going to fix they will still have the majority of the cabs upon the streets.

Mr. BOILEAU. The ultimate control as between individuals and associations depends largely on the mortality in the next few years?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Yes; and the force of the control of the association. The fact remains they have been here, they are here, and have managed to bargain for choice spots, and you are not going to break that kind of a hold in this man's town.

Mr. BOILEAU. Could the association get independents to come into the association after this bill is passed?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I expect they could, and I see no reason why they could not. So long as an independent has a license, there is nothing I know of in this bill or in any regulation or law that would prevent him from coming in.

Mr. BOILEAU. I do not think there is anything in the bill that prevents that.

Mr. DIRKSEN. If you have an outstanding association, it is easy to make these boys come in one at a time.

Mr. BOILEAU. One real effective association then could and probably would in the near future get all the cabs into the one association?

Mr. DIRKSEN. There is no question but what that will be the ultimate objective of this thing if a bill such as this goes through.

Mr. BOILEAU. That is very important.

Mr. DIRKSEN. That is aside from the law. That is a case of bargaining as between the association and the individual.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Is there any doubt in the gentleman's mind on this question of unfitness or a minor law violation? A powerfully big association would be able to exert much more influence to keep its license than one little independent who might be a student at night school driving a cab in the daytime?

Mr. DIRKSEN. No question about that.

Mr. MOSER of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. MOSER of Pennsylvania. The gentleman spent some time discussing the Public Utilities Commission and its members. Can the gentleman shed any light on how the members of the Public Utilities are chosen, the length of term, and so forth?

Mr. DIRKSEN. They are appointed.

Mr. MOSER of Pennsylvania. By what power?

Mr. DIRKSEN. They are appointed by the Commissioners and hold office for 3 years. We have had the same Commission for a long time. I do not want to be put in the position of disparaging the integrity of any of the gentlemen on that Commission. I do say, however, that they do not see eye to eye with the public in Washington in respect of public welfare. Mr. Clayton, who has been identified with citizens' associations in Washington for years, has time and time again gone down there at his own expense and pleaded the cause of the people, but he has received very scant comfort and sympathy from the gentlemen who sit on that Commission. If you ask me, it seems to me that the time may have arrived when we ought to have a new Commission in Washington. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 5 additional minutes.

There are only two ways in which you could justify a bill of this kind. The first would be that there is such a traffic hazard in Washington that we ought to cut down the number of cabs. I see hundreds of these cabs cruising around and perhaps they do aggravate the traffic situation. However, I do not believe it is particularly dangerous riding at 22 or 25 miles an hour in the downtown section. They can speed up when they get into the outlying sections because there is no particular danger there. There has not been a single showing made before this committee that there is an actual traffic danger as the result of 4,800 cabs in Washington, D. C.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield to the gentleman from West Virginia.

Mr. RANDOLPH. I am certain that the gentleman cannot make that statement upon good authority.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I do make it.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Because we had exhaustive subcommittee hearings, and at those hearings there was testimony which tended to make us believe there was an existing traffic hazard in Washington.

Mr. DIRKSEN. It is congestion, which is different from hazard.

Mr. RANDOLPH. I used the words "traffic hazard."

Mr. DIRKSEN. It is not a traffic hazard. It is a traffic congestion such as you find in all big cities of the country when the people are going to work or coming home. That is different from hazard. You will find congestion in New York, Chicago, Pittsburgh, and elsewhere. Where will you not find it with 25,000,000 automobiles and 3,250,000 motor trucks and busses in the country today? We have come to rely on the automobile as an instrumentality of transportation. You cannot get away from congestion. But there has been no proof of an existing hazard.

Mr. RANDOLPH. The gentleman is my very close friend and a distinguished Member of this body. I have the utmost respect for his judgment. He comes from the great State of Illinois, the metropolis of which is Chicago. In that city there are 1,500 cabs operating. Does the gentleman believe that is too small a number?

Mr. DIRKSEN. My friend misses an essential point. We have an elevated system in Chicago that gets the people back and forth. We have trains going out along the North Shore and South Shore to take care of the suburban traffic. We have busses.

Mr. RANDOLPH. What is the population of Chicago?

Mr. DIRKSEN. The Chicago Motor Coach Co. operates all over the city. We have an excellent streetcar system. The population of Chicago incidentally is about 3,300,000 people, but we do not experience that congestion because we have excellent transportation facilities which you have not here. Moreover, Chicagoans do not use cabs. Cabs are mainly used by transient visitors. Washington has a streetcar company and for the rest you have to depend on the cab. The busses, of course, are an auxiliary to the streetcar company. We get our people away out there. Secondly, there is a greater diffusion there than in Washington, D. C. Here you have zoning ordinances, for instance, that limits the height of buildings, that affects set-backs, and all that sort of thing, so your town spews out everywhere and that very fact adds to the congestion. But it is not a traffic hazard. We have to depend on taxicabs and on streetcars at the present time in Washington in order to get the people from their places of abode to their places of work.

Mr. RANDOLPH. I do not want to press my point too far, but may I ask the gentleman if it is not a fact that the percentage of ownership of cars in the District of Columbia by persons who live here is much higher than in other cities?

Mr. DIRKSEN. That is absolutely true, and it only adds to the congestion; but why throw the whole burden of reproach upon the taxicabs?

Mr. CRAWFORD. Does not the gentleman agree there is a very definite economic reason why that is true, and that is, there is practically a fixed salary here for everybody in the city, a condition which does not prevail in industrial cities?

Mr. DIRKSEN. That is true.

May I say a word about the unemployment suggestion made by some gentleman a little while ago? There is no question but what if you take 2,000 cabs off the streets you will have 2,000 spare drivers, who will have to find work elsewhere. If we are going to permit them to put on one-man streetcars in Washington, some of the motormen and conductors will have to be laid off and jobs will have to be found for them. Therefore, you are aggravating the unemployment problem in the Nation's Capital and you may have to put some of these folks on the relief rolls. I am not going to be a party to such a thing.

May I say I do not approve of the basic principle of this bill, whereby the Congress of the United States, by legislative fiat clothes an administrative body with authority to say to a man whether or not he can work, even if he drives a cab in his spare time. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself an additional 5 minutes.

Mr. GRAY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield.

Mr. GRAY of Pennsylvania. I do not know whether the gentleman believes we have an ideal taxicab situation in Washington, but I do not believe he does. May I point out to the gentleman several things of which he may possibly not be aware? These are things I know personally. I know of an instance where some people went by taxicab from the Union Station to the encampment of the Boy Scouts and it cost them 80 cents. They were friends of mine who happened to come to the city and told me about it. The other night this happened to me. While I was driving along the road a taxicab driver tooted his horn and scooted around in front of me and in front of another taxicab.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Those are just human weaknesses.

Mr. GRAY of Pennsylvania. You can go down the streets here and you will find them three and four abreast on many streets of the city.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I may say to the gentleman that if a man steps off the train and he looks like a greenhorn or a tenderfoot, and one of the boys takes him in tow, he can charge it up to experience, but that is the exception rather than the rule.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. LUCAS. Is it not a fact that Members of Congress have the reputation of being the worst drivers in Washington?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Yes.

Mr. LUCAS. Were any hearings held on this bill?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Yes; hearings were held, but the hearings were not printed.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Why were they not printed?

Mr. DIRKSEN. We were economizing, perhaps.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Will the gentleman tell us why on important bills like this the hearings are not printed?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I do not know that printing the hearings is always justified. After all, it costs money.

Mr. LUCAS. When did the gentleman first know this bill was coming up?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I knew it some days ago.

Let me take up one other item for the benefit of the Committee. When you say by all the force and impact of law to these men who drive cabs in their spare time that they cannot do so, you are implanting a dangerous principle in the statute law of this country. A long time ago I read a very celebrated speech entitled, "Margins." The speaker developed his speech by showing that, after all, people progress and get ahead in this world by living on the margin. The man who spends a few hours at night in college, by the incandescent rather than the traditional kerosene light, in putting in a few more licks on his law books or medical tomes or other books, is the chap who is likely to get ahead. A man who buys a piece of ground and raises some vegetables and works in his little garden after his regular work is done lives by the margin, and he goes on and on and gets somewhere in this world. The person who saves a few nickels and puts them away, and finally buys a home when he has saved enough to establish an equity, lives by the margin.

We have disseminated in this country a spendthrift philosophy which must be stopped, and the only one way to stop it is to inculcate in the minds of the people a better regard for thrift and for the philosophy of margins. Are you going to place the seal of disapproval upon this by writing something in a bill which says, "Well, if you have a job, the Government of the United States says you cannot work in your spare time"? I am sensible of the unemployment problem in this country and of all the aggravation and misery which goes along with it, but I would be the last to effectuate such a sinister principle in the laws of the United States of America.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. If the gentleman will notice the provision on page 2, line 21, he will find that just about the time when this bill would became law the big fellow could buy from the little fellow all his taxicabs, under either an oral or written agreement.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I am afraid so.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. In that way they will not only have a 60- or 70-percent monopoly, but they can have as much as a 100-percent monopoly.

Mr. DIRKSEN. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Am I correct, then, in the statement that the big fellow will eat up the little fellow?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I think the gentleman is right. I think it may be done under that provision.

Today the District Committee comes before this committee and submits its case. Here we have a taxicab-liability bill, a taxicab-limitation bill, a bill to regulate barbers, and a bill to regulate the sales of real estate.

Not so long ago we had up a bill to regulate the science of beauty culture or beautification, and as I think of all these measures and all the labors imposed upon the House District Committee and upon the Congress of the United States with respect to such bills, there has been a thought running through my mind for a long time, and I am a veteran on this committee because I have served on it for 5 years. The thought that has been running through my mind is that, perhaps, some day we are going to have to change or alter the form of government for the District of Columbia in the interest of efficiency, and I am wondering if it would not be a splendid idea to give some thought to the establishment of the position of city manager for Washington, D. C. Cincinnati got itself a very distinguished student of city government in the person of Clarence Dykstra and paid him $25,000; and what a masterly job he performed in putting that city on its feet, so valuable in fact that the University of Wisconsin has bid for his services and they pay him $15,000 a year.

Day after day and week after week as we deal with these municipal problems, I wonder if some day we are not going to have to get a city manager for Washington, D. C., in the interest of efficiency and in the interest of the protection of the people in the Nation's Capital. [Applause.]

Mr. PALMISANO. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 15 minutes.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PALMISANO. I yield to the gentleman from West Virginia.

Mr. RANDOLPH. If I may have the attention of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN], I did not want to interrupt the gentleman further, because he was kind to me in his remarks, but when the gentleman spoke of distrust of the members of the Public Utilities Commission of the District of Columbia and said they were appointed, as he believed, by the Commissioners, I want to correct the gentleman and state for his information and for the information of the House that the President of the United States makes the appointments.

Mr. DIRKSEN. And I want to say to the gentleman that when I used the word "distrust" I did not mean distrust of their motives, but the soundness of their conclusions.

Mr. RANDOLPH. The soundness of their appointment?

Mr. DIRKSEN. That is right.

Mr. PALMISANO. Mr. Chairman, I was very much interested in the remarks of the gentleman from New York [Mr. O'CONNOR] and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN]. They are opposed to this bill on the theory it is not democratic and that it may create a monopoly, at the same time admitting that in their own States they have such limitation with respect to taxicab operations.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. O'CONNOR] referred to monopoly of common carriers. This is true in every State and in every city of the Union with respect to transportation, whether it is by rail or bus or taxicab.

My friend the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN] referred to the traction company here. I want to state to the gentleman that, as a member of the committee when the traction companies were consolidating in the District, I opposed putting in that bill a provision which would permit them to operate taxicabs, because I wanted to protect the little individual taxicab operator in the District of Columbia, and I am for this bill for the same reason—not to create a monopoly.

Now, what do I propose to offer in my own individual amendment to this bill? I propose to prevent any company from obtaining a license that has more than 500 cabs. I am trying to protect the little fellow. If you do not permit this bill to go through with proper amendments, what will happen in view of the bill you just passed, compelling liability insurance without any limitation on monopolies? The day will come when the poor, individual taxicab driver who operates a car today will be wiped out and there will be a taxicab monopoly in the District of Columbia composed of one company and one company alone.

I understand it is not the intention of the Utility Commission to provide for 2,500, but they want to make the number 3,000. Then put in the bill that they may be permitted to have 3,000 cabs, put in the bill that there shall be no company or association with more than 500; but I do not propose that this shall affect anyone that has more than that now, but eliminate them by death, violation of law, or otherwise, and then you will have respectable taxicab drivers here, because they will have something to fight for and something to protect. They will then have a real, decent, and respectable job. The situation will not be like it is today. Talk to the individual taxicab driver now and he will tell you they are compelled to work 18 hours a day in order to make a living. I maintain this is unfair. If you wish to do so, put in this bill that they are not to be permitted to work more than 12 hours a day, or bring in a separate bill to that effect, and I will guarantee you that the individual taxicab drivers will eventually go out of business.

If you think 3,000 is not enough, make it 3,500. I am surprised at my colleague from Baltimore interjecting some remarks in reference to the city of Baltimore. I agree with him that there ought to be some change in Baltimore, a city of 800,000 population, with only a thousand cabs. I do not know whether my colleague did anything when he was in the State senate or not. There ought to be a change. All I want in this bill is to permit the taxicab driver to make a sufficient amount of money within reasonable hours to keep his family together. A limitation of 500 would be a safeguard against monopoly. If you want to amend this bill, amend it any way you want; but it is necessary that this bill be passed with proper amendment, whatever you think is necessary, in order to protect the individual taxicab driver, because the monopoly will eventually grab all of the cars, and under the insurance bill we passed this morning that will be the end of it. The little fellow cannot get along, he cannot pay, and the 250 or 300 Federal employees will go out of business under the insurance provision, because they are not going to operate a car 2 or 3 hours in the busiest time of the day in order to chisel in on the real, legitimate taxicab driver.

Some Members think that they are going to raise the taxicab fare. There may be a nickel rise, and, to my way of thinking, it is justifiable. If you know that you are insured in case of accident when you are in a taxicab, what is a nickel to any man? What do we have in Baltimore? We have insurance, and they have a meter, and we ride 3½ miles for a quarter of a dollar. Why could not the Utilities Commission here state that the first zone shall be 3½ miles? I think that is cheap enough.

If you want to protect the little fellow, the individual taxicab driver, keep the business from becoming a monopoly, then it is important that you pass this bill with the amendment that I shall offer, and if any Member of the House has any other amendment to suggest which will be to the advantage of the individual or the people, we will accept the amendment.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Is it not a fact that in the hearings upon this measure the drivers in Washington, whether they were working for an association, a company, or themselves, felt the need of such legislation.

Mr. PALMISANO. I have heard some gentlemen say on the floor that the taxicab drivers are opposed to this, and I venture to say that if we could adopt a policy and suspend this bill for 24 hours and get the taxicab drivers in the caucus room here in the old Office Building, 90 percent would say that they want this bill. That has been the result of my observation. This morning before the House convened there were 11 taxicab drivers in my office, and they brought to me a resolution which they said they had passed, in substance stating that they are opposed to insurance and opposed to this legislation. I said to them we had to have some legislation, and they said that they did not mean that they were opposed to all of it; and when I explained the bill to them they said that they were in sympathy with that and that they did want protection.

Mr. FORD of California. I adverted to the fact that I had talked to about 50 taxicab drivers in Washington, and I did not find a single one of them in favor of this legislation.

Mr. PALMISANO. My experience has been just the opposite, but I am willing to call a meeting of taxicab drivers, and the gentleman and I will pay the expense, and then we will question each individual, and whoever gets the minority end of it will foot the bill.

Mr. TAYLOR of South Carolina. Would it not be hard to find any taxicab driver against the bill, because it does not operate against him, but against the fellow who may hereafter drive? It does not affect a single taxicab driver in the city of Washington, because he gets his license extended ad infinitum, if he will only behave himself.

Mr. PALMISANO. And that is the thing the public wants. It wants him to behave himself, to be a good, law-abiding, careful driver.

Mr. TAYLOR of South Carolina. And there is nothing in this bill regulating that part of it.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 9 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. O'MALLEY].

Mr. O'MALLEY. Mr. Chairman, individually I love every member of the Committee on the District of Columbia. Collectively I sometimes have my doubts about some of the legislation they bring in. I think somewhere in the Committee room in which they hold their meetings is located some sort of a bug that keeps biting the Members and causes them to favor monopolies in the District. In the last 6 weeks they have brought in bills to license and regulate every conceivable kind of business that could be carried on in the District of Columbia. The only thing that they have overlooked is a bill to license the Members of Congress for the right to live here. They apparently have not gotten around to that yet, but I fear they may even get to that if not checked by the House in time.

Mr. RANDOLPH rose.

Mr. O'MALLEY. I will yield to the gentleman in a few minutes. Here is a bill that absolutely violates every principle of democratic freedom. It denies to all who may want to go into the taxicab business any opportunity to go into that business after a certain date. They say this will not create a monopoly.

It absolutely will create a monopoly. The Public Utilities Commission can make its own regulations under this bill. Some of the regulations are mentioned in the bill. One, they can revoke a license if a man is unfit or violates a law. The police department can take away his license right now if he violates the law, so they do not need that sort of regulation in this bill. There is scarcely a Member of Congress who has not got somebody from his district earning a little money driving a cab in this District. There are boys from my own district who are going to school in the daytime and picking up the money they need to live on driving a cab at night. Are we going to put those boys out of business, or the boys who come down here to go to school in the future? That is exactly what this bill will do. There are people who make $25 or $30 a week driving a taxicab here who, if under this bill, got one ticket for parking or any other minor law infraction in the discretion of the Public Utilities Commission, would have their licenses revoked, and they never could get them back again. If this Public Utilities Commission is so good that they can be entrusted with this discretionary authority, that is all right. I do not intend to disparage the Commission. The record speaks for itself. If they were any good, they would have reduced the electric-light rates in this District a long time ago. If they were any good, they would have reduced the gas cost in this District a long time ago. If they were any good, they would have ordered the junk streetcars that disgrace the Capital City off the streets long ago. If they were any good, they would have decided long ago against one-man cars and would not be carrying on prolonged hearings at the expense of the taxpayers.

I, as one Member of Congress, do not want to trust any commission with authority to say to any American citizen whether or not he could go into any business he wants to go into, and especially do I dislike entrusting this Commission with any more authority. Of course, if we want to set up a model government in the District of Columbia and we take this type of legislation as a sample of that model government, we are going to set up a Fascist state. We are going to have a government in the District of Columbia that will say to a man, if the principle in this bill is carried out, "You can be in this business and it is the only business you can be in, and you will have to stay in that business for life, because we will not license you to go into any other."

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'MALLEY. I yield.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Does the gentleman recall a few years back, when all the hotels in the District were in receivership and not making any money?

Mr. O'MALLEY. I do.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. There was no suggestion that they limit the number of hotels or say to anybody whether or not they could start a hotel.

Mr. O'MALLEY. I recall that very well, because I happen to be a member of the committee that investigated some of these hotels, and no such suggestion as that ever came from these gentlemen.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'MALLEY. I yield.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Is it not a fact that the gentleman, as a member of the party now in power, voted for the National Industrial Recovery Act?

Mr. O'MALLEY. I will say I voted against the continuance of N. R. A. I did not like it. It smelled of the rawest kind of fascism. It put more small men out of business who were entitled to be in business than anything our Democratic administration ever did. It put monopoly in the saddle for more than a year and a half. I would not vote to renew it afer I saw its monopolistic effect. This is just a part of the N. R. A. principle. Those who are in favor of N. R. A. will vote for this kind of a bill, but you go back to your small businessmen in your home town and ask them what they thought of N. R. A. They could not pass a bill like it again if they brought it up. This is part of the N. R. A. principle. It wants to put certain people into certain classifications and consign them there for all time. There are many men in this chamber who, if they were not allowed to work on the side when they went to school, would not be here today.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'MALLEY. I yield.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Will the gentleman refer to one amendment in this bill to prevent the Government employees making extra money? Has the gentleman heard anything about Members of Congress not making any extra money by making speeches?

Mr. O'MALLEY. Not a thing. I have not seen any bill come in here which will prevent a Member of Congress from practicing his profession as a lawyer while he is a Member. If we are going to start on these $1,440 clerks and keep them from making a little side income, we ought to have courage enough to start on ourselves. We ought not come here and deny these $1,440 clerks an opportunity to pick up $5 that will pay a hospital bill for a sick baby. This kind of legislation that comes from the Committee on the District of Columbia should not be allowed to take up the time of this House. They bring in some good bills, and we act on them, but when they bring in this sort of thing, which would create a monopoly and which only certain taxicab associations are in favor of, they are imposing upon the time of this House.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'MALLEY. Yes; I yield.

Mr. RANDOLPH. I will say that the committee is not imposing on the time of the House. That is not a fair statement of the gentleman.

Mr. O'MALLEY. I will say to the gentleman that is my personal opinion.

Mr. RANDOLPH. The gentleman voted against other measures that come from other committees.

Mr. O'MALLEY. It seems to me that a measure such as this, which benefits such a small group of people, ought to be laid aside in the last days of the session so we can take up more important measures pending in the gentleman's committee and on the calendars.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Chairman, I am certain the gentleman does not want to leave the impression that the committee is bringing in here anything that should not take the time of the House.

Mr. O'MALLEY. I do not want to leave any unfair impression, I assure my always courteous colleague from West Virginia. But I will say to the gentleman that the biggest agitators for this bill for the last number of years have been the officials and employees of a certain cab association whose ability at claim dodging and unfairness to their patrons discredits their sincerity and honesty in supporting anything for the public good.

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'MALLEY. I yield.

Mrs. NORTON. I think the gentleman is quite mistaken about that. I have been traveling in taxicabs in Washington for the past 12 years. I do not believe I ever rode in a taxicab, and I have been riding on an average of three trips a day, without asking the driver whether or not he made any kind of a living out of present conditions in the taxicab field in Washington. I cannot recall a single exception to the invariable reply that there were entirely too many taxicabs in Washington.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Mr. Chairman, I cannot yield further to the gentlewoman from New Jersey. Let me ask the gentlewoman if she ever heard of anybody who thought he was making money enough out of the job he had?

Mrs. NORTON. Oh, yes. I think the gentleman himself feels that he is making entirely too much on his job.

Mr. O'MALLEY. No; I will be frank with the gentlewoman. I do not think I could value my services as high as she does, especially to the District of Columbia; but I also do not think the gentlewoman ever heard a taxicab driver ever say they made enough, no matter what their weekly income might be.

Mr. TAYLOR of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'MALLEY. Yes.

Mr. TAYLOR of South Carolina. Does not the gentleman think that the taxicab drivers about whom the gentlewoman spoke knew that their passenger at the time she made inquiries was chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia, and that that had something to do with it?

Mr. O'MALLEY. It has been my unfailing experience that once you get into a taxicab and the driver even suspects that you are a Congressman you are lobbied from the time you get into the cab until you get out. You are either lobbied to get the driver a job in a Government department or you are lobbied to get a bill through Congress raising their rates or creating a monopoly—anything that certain companies may get a stranglehold on the business.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. PALMISANO. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentlewoman from New Jersey such time as she may desire.

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, this bill was sent to the committee by the Commissioners. It was drafted and sent to the committee in order to try, if possible, to bring about a better situation in the taxicab business in this city.

Mr. Chairman, I think everyone will concede that a man who works 16 hours a day in order to make a living of $4 a day is working entirely too long. Under present conditions in this city every single taxi driver to whom I have talked has told me that the average amount they clear is $3 a day. The Commissioners, hearing of these complaints, asked us to remedy the situation, and I introduced this bill by request. Since that time I have resigned from the committee and am not aware of exactly what took place in the consideration of the bill in the committee. But I do want the Members of the House to know that this bill was introduced in the interest of safety and in order to give the men who are driving taxicabs in this city an opportunity to make a decent living, which they cannot make under present conditions.

Another thing that seems to be not very clear is the fact that not one single man with a license for a taxicab in the District of Columbia at the present time will be relieved of that license. The only difference that this is going to make is in the future consideration of licenses. No new license will be issued until it is found absolutely necessary to do so. By this method there should be slow reduction in the number of taxicabs and permit those holding licenses at this time to continue and improve their business.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Mr. Chairman, will the gentlewoman yield?

Mrs. NORTON. I yield.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Suppose the present operator of a taxicab dies but that he has a grown son. Does the gentlewoman mean to say that the grown son cannot get a license to run that taxicab?

Mrs. NORTON. Oh, I think he can; yes.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. According to what the gentlewoman has just said he could not get a license, for she said that no more licenses would be issued until the number got below a certain fixed maximum.

Mrs. NORTON. That will be discretionary with the Public Utilities Commission.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. In the meantime what will they do with the taxicab, leave it out in the backyard for a playhouse?

Mrs. NORTON. The Public Utilities Commission ought to be able to decide whether or not that man should have a taxicab license.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. I do not understand that it is discretionary. There will be so many licenses. As they expire no new licenses will be issued in their places.

Mrs. NORTON. Unless the Public Utilities Commission chooses to do so.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. I am not content to leave it with people from Tennessee and sundry other places who may be on the Public Utilities Commission.

Mrs. NORTON. Whom is the gentleman willing to leave it to?

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. I would leave it to some real residents of the District of Columbia who know something about the needs of their own city.

Mrs. NORTON. Some important business prevented my being on the floor for all of the discussion on this bill, but as I came in a while ago I heard a discussion going on that I feel the House should know about. One member of the group said:

If we pass this bill today we are going to pay more money for our taxicabs.

I ask you if that is any reason for defeating this bill? I know that you Members of this House are too fair to defeat a bill because of any such ridiculous or selfish motives as that.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. If the lady heard my remarks she would have heard me say that taxicab drivers do not get enough in fees now. I have never believed they have, and I am for their getting a higher fee than they are receiving.

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland. Will the gentlewoman yield?

Mrs. NORTON. I yield to the gentleman from Maryland.

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland. There are 4,600 taxicab licenses in the District?

Mrs. NORTON. There are over 5,000 today.

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland. The number is going up all the time?

Mrs. NORTON. Every day. That is the reason for the introduction of this bill.

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland. Under this bill it is proposed to permit the Public Utilities Commission to reduce that number down to approximately 3,000.

Mrs. NORTON. There is no hard and fast rule.

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland. They can reduce the number as they please. The Public Utilities Commission may make it 2,000, 1,500, 1,000, or 700.

Mrs. NORTON. No. That is not my understanding of the bill.

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland. That is my understanding of the bill. As the gentleman from New York [Mr. O'CONNOR] stated, if a man is operating a taxicab and dies, and the limit is 3,000, the permit would not be issued to his son or anyone else in his family. That permit would automatically be canceled.

Mrs. NORTON. No. The bill defines what is adequate to serve the public necessity.

Mr. PALMISANO. Will the gentlewoman yield?

Mrs. NORTON. I yield to the gentleman from Maryland.

Mr. PALMISANO. As I stated before, the Public Utilities Commission can limit the number of taxicabs, whether it be 3,000 or 4,000. There should be a limit, and so far as transfer to an heir is concerned, that matter could be taken care of.

Mrs. NORTON. The present limit will remain as it is until the reduction is brought about by the taxi people's not renewing their licenses. No hardship will result to any taxicab driver if this bill is passed.

Mr. BOILEAU. Will the gentlewoman yield?

Mrs. NORTON. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. BOILEAU. The gentlewoman said that some Members might be opposing this bill because it would result in higher rates. Does not the lady agree that the opposite might more likely be true? With a fewer number of cabs on the street an argument for lower rates could be sustained much better, because they would have more jobs and would not be floating around so much.

Mrs. NORTON. Exactly.

Mr. BOILEAU. Does not the lady agree with me that the Public Utilities Commission has the authority to fix the rate so that reducing the number of cabs on the street would not necessarily mean an increase in or a change in the rates?

Mrs. NORTON. Of course not. I was simply stating a conversation I overheard, and I thought if it had any bearing on the feeling in the Committee today, the Committee should know what certain people have said in this connection.

Mr. BOILEAU. I think most of the Members who are opposing this bill would be very happy to see the rates increased considerably.

Mrs. NORTON. I think the rates should be increased.

Mr. BOILEAU. I agree with the lady.

Mrs. NORTON. But that has nothing to do with this bill.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Will the gentlewoman from New Jersey yield?

Mrs. NORTON. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Does not this bill entrust to the Public Utilities Commission the raising of rates by reducing the number of cabs when they already have the right to raise the rates?

Mrs. NORTON. The Public Utilities Commission has always had that right.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Why do they not exercise it?

Mrs. NORTON. That is their business. I am not telling the Committee what the Public Utilities should or should not do.

Mr. O'MALLEY. The gentlewoman from New Jersey wants the Congress to entrust to the Commission the right to reduce the number of cabs because the cab drivers are not paid enough. How can we entrust them with that when we cannot trust them to raise rates?

Mrs. NORTON. I want you to consider the bill on its merits and give the taxi drivers the same opportunity for making a living that exists in other cities, such as my own city and the gentleman's city, in all probability.

Mr. O'MALLEY. I heartily agree with the gentlewoman from New Jersey; but does not the gentlewoman think one of the best ways, and a better way, would be to bring in a bill compelling the Public Utilities Commission to raise the rates?

Mrs. NORTON. No. If I had thought so, I would not have introduced this bill. However, I shall be glad to support a bill for higher rates.

Mr. O'MALLEY. They are the ones in charge of the rates.

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland. Will the gentlewoman yield?

Mrs. NORTON. I yield to the gentleman from Maryland.

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland. Is it not true if this bill is passed there will be a reduction in the number of employees and many men will lose their jobs?

Mrs. NORTON. Not at all. This bill provides that no one's license shall be revoked. If the gentleman would just read the bill he would find this provision.

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland. How are they going to get a taxi to drive if there are no taxis available?

Mrs. NORTON. They have the taxicabs at the present time.

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland. But the number is automatically reduced because that is what this bill provides.

Mrs. NORTON. The number is only reduced as the men themselves drop their licenses, not otherwise. It is entirely voluntary.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Will the gentlewoman yield?

Mrs. NORTON. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. The gentlewoman has advanced as one reason for this bill an effort to help the taxi drivers make a decent living. That is the first time I ever heard that motive behind this bill. It has been advertised in the press that the sole reason for this bill is to remedy traffic conditions in the District of Columbia. It was stated there were too many taxicabs on the streets of Washington and there was a hazard to the traffic conditions. That has been the reason advanced so far. There was no consideration for these poor fellows who have not made a living and probably never will make a living under this bill unless the rates are increased.

Mrs. NORTON. Of course, I am not responsible for what the press in this city has to say about this bill or any other bill. I am simply telling the Members of the House the reason for the introduction of the bill. There is no doubt in my mind that with the elimination of a certain number of taxicabs it will be much safer so far as general traffic conditions of the city are concerned. That was one of the intentions in introducing the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Public Utilities Commission of the District of Columbia, in addition to the authority and powers vested in it by the act of Congress approved March 4, 1913, and amendments thereto, be, and said Commission is hereby, authorized and empowered to determine and fix the number of vehicles to be licensed and operated as taxicabs under the provisions of the license law of the District of Columbia, approved July 1, 1932 (ch. 366, 47 Stat. 550), which it finds to be adequate to serve the public necessity and convenience, and, in its discretion, to change the number from time to time, and, subject to the provisos of this act, no licenses in excess of the number from time to time so determined and fixed shall be issued: Provided, however, That to accomplish a reduction in such vehicles to the number so determined and fixed by the Public Utilities Commission no outstanding lawfully issued taxicab license or licenses shall be revoked or rescinded nor shall its or their renewal to the same licensee be denied: Provided further, That until such number is reached by voluntary surrender of license or licenses by the owner or owners thereof, or by failure to renew a license or licenses, or through forfeiture according to law of the right to hold or operate under such license or licenses by the licensee, or through any or all of said causes combined, no new license or licenses shall be issued nor shall any outstanding license or licenses be permitted to be sold, assigned, or transferred.

This act shall go into effect 30 days after its approval.

Mr. SCHULTE. Mr. Chairman, I offer a preferential motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. SCHULTE moves that the Committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House with the recommendation that the enacting clause be stricken out.

Mr. SCHULTE. Mr. Chairman, I do not desire to use any time in discussing the motion.

Mr. PALMISANO. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the motion.

Mr. Chairman, I think it is only fair to the Committee on the District of Columbia to consider this bill and the proper amendments which will be offered by the members of the committee. After all amendments have been offered and the bill has been reported back to the House, if the Members think this is not a proper bill, the thing to do then is not to recommit the bill, but vote it down and dispose of it. I hope Members will oppose this motion.

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. NICHOLS. In the event the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union voted to strike out the enacting clause, and then when the bill was reported back to the House the action of the Committee of the Whole was overridden and the enacting clause was put back into the bill, what would be the parliamentary situation?

The CHAIRMAN. The bill would then be returned to the Committee of the Whole for further consideration.

Mr. NICHOLS. For further consideration as the bill stands now?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is correct.

The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. SCHULTE] to strike out the enacting clause of the bill.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. RANDOLPH) there were—ayes 89, noes 29.

So the motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. STEAGALL, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 6697) to authorize and empower the Public Utilities Commission of the District of Columbia to limit the number of public vehicles to be licensed and operated as taxicabs in the District of Columbia, had directed him to report the same back to the House with the recommendation that the enacting clause be stricken out.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the recommendation of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union that the enacting clause be stricken.

The question was taken, and the enacting clause was stricken from the bill.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

EVA MARKOWITZ

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland submitted the following conference report and statement on the bill (H. R. 458) for the relief of Eva Markowitz:

CONFERENCE REPORT

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 458) for the relief of Eva Markowitz, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

Amendment numbered 1: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 1, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the sum "$2,500", and insert "$4,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 2: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 2, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the sum "$50", insert "$90"; and the Senate agree to the same.

AMBROSE J. KENNEDY,
ELMER J. RYAN,
FRANK CARLSON,
Managers on the part of the House.

J. W. BAILEY,
PRENTISS M. BROWN,
ARTHUR CAPPER,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 458) for the relief of Eva Markowitz submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon and recommended in the accompanying conference report:

The Senate amended this bill by reducing the amount from $5,000 to $2,500, such amount to be paid to the claimant and her three minor children in monthly installments of $50 each. At the conference a compromise amount of $4,000 was agreed upon, to be paid to the claimant and her three minor children in monthly installments of $90 each.

AMBROSE J. KENNEDY,
ELMER J. RYAN,
FRANK CARLSON,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the conference report.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maryland?

There was no objection.

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the statement may be read in lieu of the report.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maryland?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the statement.

The conference report was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

JOSEPH M. CLAGETT, JR.

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland submitted the following conference report and statement on the bill (H. R. 730) for the relief of Joseph M. Clagett, Jr.:

CONFERENCE REPORT

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two House on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 730) "An act for the relief of Joseph M. Claggett, Jr.", having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendment numbered 3.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 2, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 1: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 1, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the figure "$1,000" contained in the Senate amendment, insert "$1,500"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 4: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 4, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: Restore the language stricken out by the Senate amendment, and at the end thereof, on page 2, line 9, after the word "notwithstanding", insert a colon and the following proviso: "Provided further, That for the purpose of calculating the attorney fees allowed under this act the sum of $4,500 shall be taken as the maximum amount of the annuity under the provisions of this act"; and the Senate agree to the same.

AMBROSE J. KENNEDY,

Managers on the part of the House.

J. W. BAILEY,
ARTHUR CAPPER,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 730), for the relief of Joseph M. Claggett, Jr., submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon and recommended in the accompanying conference report.

The House passed this bill making a direct appropriation of the lump sum of $10,000 to the legal guardian of Joseph M. Claggett, Jr. The Senate amended the bill by making a direct appropriation of $1,000 and providing for the sum of $40 monthly to be paid until the boy becomes of age. The Senate also struck out the usual 10 percent attorney fee limitation clause and provided that no amount of the appropriation be allowed any attorney. At the conference, the House conferees receded from the disagreement to the Senate amendment providing for a lump-sum payment and monthly payments, but a compromise amount of $1,500 was agreed upon as the lump payment instead of $1,000. The Senate conferees receded from its amendment eliminating an attorney fee limitation clause, and the following language was agreed upon: Provided further, That for the purpose of calculating the attorney fees allowed under this act the sum of $4,500 shall be taken as the maximum amount of the annuity under the provisions of this act."

AMBROSE J. KENNEDY,
ELMER J. RYAN,
FRANK CARLSON,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the conference report on the bill (H. R. 730) for the relief of Joseph M. Clagett, Jr.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maryland?

There was no objection.

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the statement may be read in lieu of the report.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maryland?

There was no objection.

WALTER T. KARSHNER, KATHERINE KARSHNER, ANNE M. KARSHNER, AND MRS. JAMES E. M'SHANE

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland submitted the following conference report and statement on the bill (H. R. 1377) conferring jurisdiction upon the United States District Court for the Southern District of Ohio to hear, determine, and render judgment upon the claims of Walter T. Karshner, Katherine Karshner, Anne M. Karshner, and Mrs. James E. McShane:

CONFERENCE REPORT

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 1377) "An act conferring jurisdiction upon the United States District Court for the Southern District of Ohio to hear, determine, and render judgment upon the claims of Walter T. Karshner, Katherine Karshner, Anne M. Karshner, and Mrs. James E. McShane", having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: On page 1, line 5, of the Senate engrossed amendment, in lieu of the sum "$157.95", insert "$600"; in line 6 of said engrossed amendment, in lieu of the sum "$29.50", insert "$80"; in line 6 of said engrossed amendment, in lieu of the sum "$153.51", insert "$600"; and in line 7 of said amendment, in lieu of the sum "$139.50", insert "$300"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate to the title of the bill; and agree to the same.

AMBROSE J. KENNEDY,
ELMER J. RYAN,
FRANK CARLSON,
Managers on the part of the House.

J. W. BAILEY,
PRENTISS M. BROWN,
ARTHUR CAPPER,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 1377) conferring jurisdiction upon the United States District Court for the Southern District of Ohio to hear, determine, and render judgment upon the claims of Walter T. Karshner, Katherine Karshner, Anne M. Karshner, and Mrs. James E. McShane, submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon and recommended in the accompanying conference report:

The House passed this bill conferring jurisdiction upon the United States District Court for the Southern District of Ohio to hear, determine, and render judgment upon the claims of the several claimants, and limiting the amount of judgment to be rendered. The Senate amended the bill by making direct appropriations for actual expenses only, namely, $157.95, $29.50, $153.51, and $139.50, to be paid, respectively, to the claimants named, and amended the title of the bill to read "For the relief of Walter T. Karshner, Katherine Karshner, Anne M. Karshner, and Mrs. James E. McShane." At the conference the House conferees receded from the disagreement to making direct appropriations and amending the title, but compromise amounts as follows were agreed upon: $600, $80, $600, and $300, respectively.

AMBROSE J. KENNEDY,
ELMER J. RYAN,
FRANK CARLSON,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the conference report on the bill (H. R. 1377).

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maryland?

There was no objection.

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the statement may be read in lieu of the report.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maryland?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the statement.

The conference report was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

MR. AND MRS. DAVID STOPPEL

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland submitted the following conference report and statement on the bill (H. R. 2562) for the relief of Mr. and Mrs. David Stoppel:

CONFERENCE REPORT

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two House on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 2562) for the relief of Mr. and Mrs. David Stoppel, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendment.

AMBROSE J. KENNEDY,
ELMER J. RYAN,
FRANK CARLSON,
Managers on the part of the House.

J. W. BAILEY,
M. M. LOGAN,
ARTHUR CAPPER,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 2562) for the relief of Mr. and Mrs. David Stoppel submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon and recommended in the accompanying conference report.

The Senate amended this bill by inserting the clause "out of any money allocated by the President for the maintenance and operation of the Civilian Conservation Corps" after the amount. This was in error, as the accident involved was caused by a truck owned and operated by the Bureau of Reclamation, Department of the Interior, and this appropriation, of course, should not come out of the money used for the maintenance and operation of the Civilian Conservation Corps. At the conference the Senate conferees receded from their amendment.

AMBROSE J. KENNEDY,
ELMER J. RYAN,
FRANK CARLSON,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the conference report on the bill (H. R. 2562), for the relief of Mr. and Mrs. David Stoppel.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maryland?

There was no objection.

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the statement may be read in lieu of the report.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maryland?

NAVIGATION DAMS AND LOCKS ON THE MISSISSIPPI RIVER AND ITS TRIBUTARIES

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland submitted the following conference report and statement on the bill (H. R. 2565) to confer jurisdiction on the Court of Claims to hear, determine, and enter judgment upon the claims of contractors for excess costs incurred while constructing navigation dams and locks on the Mississippi River and its tributaries:

CONFERENCE REPORT

The committtee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 2565) to confer jurisdiction on the Court of Claims to hear, determine, and enter judgment upon the claims of contractors for excess costs incurred while constructing navigation dams and locks on the Mississippi River and its tributaries, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate and agree to the same.

ARTHUR CAPPER,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 2565) to confer jurisdiction on the Court of Claims to hear, determine, and enter judgment upon the claims of contractors for excess costs incurred while constructing navigation dams and locks on the Mississippi River and its tributaries, submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon and recommended in the accompanying conference report:

The Senate amended this bill by inserting the word "alleged" wherever any damage was referred to in the wording of the bill, the purpose being to make it necessary for the claimants thereunder to prove their damage in court and to make certain that the rights of defense are not taken away from the Government. At the conference the House conferees receded from their disagreement to the amendments and agreed to the same. As the bill now stands it is merely jurisdictional and there can be no interpretation as raising any presumption or conclusion of fact or law.

AMBROSE J. KENNEDY,
ELMER J. RYAN,
FRANK CARLSON,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the conference report on the bill H. R. 2565.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. DIRKSEN asked and was given permission to revise and extend his own remarks in the RECORD.

ACADEMY FOR AMERICAN SEAMEN

The SPEAKER. Under the previous order of the House, the gentleman from New York [Mr. DICKSTEIN] is recognized for 20 minutes.

(Mr. DICKSTEIN asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks in the RECORD.)

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, some time ago I advocated in this House a university for seamen for our merchant marine. I do not have to go into much history because we all know what has happened with respect to our merchant marine. We have practically no merchant marine, and I do not think we have proper safety on the seas.

In the last two disasters it was proven beyond question that the men who were manning the ship almost represented a league of nations. We have no American crews. We take them as they come from every country in order to fill our ships and man them.

As I said in opening my remarks, I have advocated for some months the establishment of an academy where American seamen would be trained for the purpose of going on our ships and insuring their safety of operation. Every other shipping country in the world, including the English, the Scandinavian, the French, has its own nationals manning its ships, and history will show that this form of procedure is much safer than ours.

As I understand it, the Maritime Exchange or Commission is going to build more ships, which will cost perhaps $300,000,000 or more. What is the use of building ships and what is the use of going on with an American merchant marine, if we have not proper facilities or proper manpower to take care of these ships? I predict that within a very short time the little merchant marine we have is going to be tied up. There is a strike about to break on our American ships. I refer to ships of the United States Lines, which we have been subsidizing with Government money.

There is now a fight between the International Seamen's Union of America and the National Maritime Union of America. They are now conducting an election to determine who shall be the official agent, insofar as the seamen on these boats are concerned. I am reliably informed that the Communist Party or certain groups that represent them are trying to dictate who shall be selected for seamen or for radio operators. As I understand it, they went so far as to ask that the American lines take off certain capable and competent radio operators and substitute people that the company did not know. The company did not know they were even capable of performing the work.

I should like to see that all of these matters are called to the attention of the Congress, because if we are going to spend millions of dollars to build up a merchant marine, we are then going to be confronted with the difficulty of selecting able-bodied seamen because we have no training schools. We have no standards with respect to qualifications. If a man has been on the seas for a number of years, he is considered more or less available to work, and, as I said a moment ago, we almost have a league of nations representing every nationality on our ships, and some of them are not qualified to man our ships.

Mr. Speaker, safety at sea is a most important matter for the American people. So far it has been definitely demonstrated that we have taken very little precautions in promoting safety at sea. I do not care whether you have a new apparatus or a new ship or a new device of any kind, unless you have men competent and capable of performing their duties, you will never have safety at sea.

It seems apparent that every other nation in the world is building up its merchant marine 100 percent, and we are about the last insofar as safety at sea and protection and proper manning are concerned, because we are making no effort whatever to find out who are going to be the radio operators or who are going to be the engineers or the men who will man the ships.

As I said a moment ago, it seems to me if we are going to spend millions of dollars to build up a merchant marine, we ought to provide for proper manning of our ships, and I propose a bill that will create a sort of Annapolis for able-bodied Americans so they may get proper and fair training for this vocation. There are thousands of Americans, able-bodied young men, who would like to take to the sea. I know they could qualify as well as any British or German or French seaman, but we have not given them an opportunity. We pick them up almost from the streets; and if they have had 2 or 3 years on a vessel, they become able-bodied seamen.

In 1934, I believe it was, when the Morro Castle disaster occurred, the committee that was then organized to investigate un-American activities had ascertained that of the number of men on the Morro Castle, 53 of them were aliens from various countries. They just got jobs on the boat; and when the fire started and the two boats were lowered from the Morro Castle, they were the first 53 on that boat to get ashore and "to the devil with the passengers."

It seems to me that if there were 53 trained, able-bodied Americans in such a disaster as that which occurred, they would never have left the ship, a regular furnace, women and children on board, to take to the small boats. They would never have deserted the passengers in that way. There was no sympathy in the hearts of those men who held themselves out as able-bodied seamen, from all shores, and it is high time that this Congress took some notice of the future of America. If we are to build a merchant marine, why not let us have the best that money will buy and the best men with proper training, so that when the boat leaves the shore it will be well equipped not only in machinery but in manpower, men with proper culture and care for the passengers aboard. I hope some day to present this bill to you, and I shall ask your support. I think it would be priceless if we would be able to say to the American people that we have built a fine lot of ships and that they are manned with a fine lot of able-bodied American sailors, who are competent and capable to protect human life.

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Yes.

Mr. LUDLOW. Has the gentleman taken up with Mr. Kennedy of the Maritime Commission the matters to which he has referred?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I have taken this matter up with Mr. Kennedy, and he feels the same as I do.

Mr. LUDLOW. I think we all regard him as a very competent man.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Kennedy feels as I do. There is now, in the little American marine that we have, a fight between the lefts and the rights. It is not a question of hours or wages; it is a question of control and power. I told him after giving him certain evidence that at the present time they are trying to undermine our entire merchant marine because of this fight between these two factions. If we are going to have a merchant marine and spend all these millions, the men who man them should be under the jurisdiction of the United States, and they should be given an opportunity to go to school and be properly trained for that purpose. Every country in the world has its own men, able-bodied seamen. I think this matter deserves very careful consideration of the Congress. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. DALY). Under special order of the House the gentleman from California [Mr. VOORHIS] is recognized for 20 minutes.

Mr. VOORHIS. Mr. Speaker, first of all I want to appeal as earnestly as I know how for the passage by this Congress of two measures which seem to me so essential that hardly anyone can logically oppose them. The first is a provision for the collection of facts concerning unemployment and relief. The House has passed the so-called relief bill. A billion and a half dollars has been appropriated for the purpose of putting to work a portion of our 10,000,000 unemployed people and for some relief for our hard-pressed rural people. In absolute terms this is a very large amount of money. In relationship to the needs of our people, a need not only for food and clothing, but a need for work and the feeling that one is doing a service for his Nation, it is probably inadequate, but however large or small it may be, it is obvious that the responsibility rests upon the Congress to see to it that the money is expended in the best possible way. Over and over again I have heard Members say, "We have written a blank check for the last time on relief." Over and over I have heard people complain, and I have done some myself, that we can no longer continue to deal with unemployment in a temporary way. Many of us have made the statement that we do not have the facts at hand on which to act. I believe this is obvious. At the next session of Congress, certainly, a permanent policy of Federal action on the unemployment question must be set forth. It is not enough that by merely taking judicious measures we may be able in time to solve this problem and get our people back to work in industry. After all, it is necessary that we remember that from day to day and week to week there are millions of people who are dependent upon Government projects or upon a dole from the State and county funds for bread and butter and beans. So we must have, it seems to me, a sound, continuing plan and machinery, and I think it must be just, one that takes into account not merely the preservation of physical life but also the preservation of those values of character and citizenship of which America has always been proud.

SOUND, PERMANENT UNEMPLOYMENT POLICY IMPOSSIBLE WITHOUT FACTS

Obviously we cannot develop that sound policy or pass sound judgment or good legislation without accurate knowledge about the facts regarding unemployment, work, and relief. To my mind, one of the very best things we could do would be to pass the two bills introduced by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FRIES], H. R. 7506 and H. R. 7507, which two bills provide for the taking of the decennial census in 1938 and thereafter for the taking of biennial censuses of unemployment and of the unemployed, in order that we may have continuously the facts regarding this most important matter. Other methods of doing this have likewise been suggested. It matters not to me the exact way in which it is done, but whatever is done about this matter, it has seemed to be absolutely essential that these facts be collected for the Congress, and that they be submitted to Congress, insofar as possible, to form a factual basis of what we do at the next session. The Senate, as it happens, has already acted. It has passed Senate Joint Resolution No. 68, which provides that the President shall, and I quote, appoint a nonpartisan commission to continue a national study of the whole problem of unemployment and relief and to make recommendations looking to a comprehensive, intelligent, and just policy for the future.

WE SHOULD PASS SENATE JOINT RESOLUTION 68

This joint resolution is now before the Labor Committee of the House. Not merely because I introduced its companion measure in the House, but more especially because a study of this kind is more necessary than almost anything I can think of to the future of America, I earnestly hope that our Labor Committee will act speedily and favorably, and that this measure will be brought before the House at the earliest possible moment and that it will be passed.

EMBARGO ON ARMAMENT NOW ESSENTIAL

The measure for which I want to make an appeal today has to do with the relationship of America to the rest of the nations of the world, the relationship of America to world peace, and the relationship of America to the armament race that is now going on. We have had introduced in this House more than one—I do not know exactly how many—joint resolutions providing an absolute embargo on the shipment of arms, ammunition, and implements of war out of this country to any nation at any time. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. O'MALLEY] and the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] and possibly other gentlemen have introduced this resolution. The reasons for the necessity of this kind of action at this time seem to me to be as follows:

In the first place, the shipment of war implements or ammunition out of the United States in the last 6 months ending in May 1937 were as great as the shipment of munitions out of this country in the entire 12 months previous to that time. In other words, the arms traffic has doubled in the last year and a half.

In the second place, this profitable traffic of the munition makers amounts to a stripping of the United States of its resources, in iron and coal particularly, for the purpose of arming foreign nations.

In the third place, we are thus permitting American dealers in munitions to supply arms to other nations which in future may well be turned on American men, so that our men will be killed by shells manufactured in our own country.

In the fourth place, by permitting this arms traffic we are accelerating the world armament race. If arms are sold to foreign governments, then the munition maker can come and camp on the doorstep of our own War Department to urge that America must, in turn, spend another billion or so on arms to keep up. When we have spent that to increase our armaments, then our munition makers can sell more arms to foreign nations. And so it goes.

In the fifth place, an absolute embargo is the only decent, fair policy. It means that America takes the position that she refuses to encourage war or war preparation. It means the stopping up of one of the most serious gaps in our neutrality legislation. Imagine, if you will, our attempting to stop this arms traffic after a war has started in Europe or Asia. It cannot be done. The traffic will grow and grow until it drags us into war, too, unless we stop it now.

In the sixth place, specifically, every one of us realizes that as a matter of plain, elemental human justice, the sale of munitions of war to Italy and Germany should stop at this time because of the fact that in effect they are belligerents in the Spanish conflict. We also realize, however, the very great difficulty which our State Department would have in declaring such an embargo and in the virtual impossibility of the State Department naming any two nations as belligerents, under the circumstances. It therefore becomes clear that the only way in which justice can be done in this case or a hundred others like it, the only way we can promote real national defense, the only way we can help check this mad armament race is to forbid any American shipper to ship any more implements to any nation at any time. The world will understand that.

LUDLOW AMENDMENT ALSO IMPORTANT

In order to back up this measure, may I make another appeal on behalf of the amendment introduced by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. LUDLOW] providing for a referendum before this Nation can enter another war except in case of armed invasion?

NO TIME FOR RECESS OR ADJOURNMENT

Mr. Speaker, I cannot feel that this is a time for us to take a recess or adjournment. Our country is in unusual need. Our duty is clear. Let us not recess, let us not adjourn until we have done something for those millions of old people of this Nation who expect some progress in the direction of old-age pensions.

Exhaustive hearings, I believe, have been held on the Wagner-Steagall housing bill. I believe there is very little opposition to that bill. I see no reason why we could not take a most important forward step by passing this bill. I think we may do something for American labor by hour-and-wage legislation and something for our farmers by a frontal attack on speculation and monopoly in the marketing of farm products; and then, as I said earlier in my speech today, it seems to me that we could at least provide that we should have the facts regarding unemployment and relief before the next session, and that we ought now to do something about the munitions traffic.

Every Member here knows that I have left many things out of this list, things that are necessary. I have omitted general tax revisions, and were I making my own preferred list of legislation I should probably put the bill of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PATMAN] to make the 12 Federal Reserve banks Government institutions near the very top. I am not so foolish as to think we can do everything at once, nor so foolish as to think that we can change the condition of people overnight. Much depends upon passing and perfecting social legislation in this Congress to maintain confidence and hope. Confidence and hope and trust are the bases of our business and national life. They are also the bases of steady progress. Our problem will not solve itself. Our people in the face of their need dare not rest, and neither should we.

In the few minutes remaining to me today I desire, Mr. Speaker, to make a few observations on the present labor situation.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield before he leaves that point?

Mr. VOORHIS. I yield.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Does the gentleman have the figures of what we were spending on armament in 1917, in 1927, and in 1937?

Mr. VOORHIS. I did not refer to that.

Mr. HOFFMAN. It was $586,000,000, in round numbers, in 1917; $584,000,000 in 1927; and $934,000,000 in 1937. Does the gentleman approve of that?

Mr. VOORHIS. I was speaking of the shipment of arms out of the United States.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Yes, I know; but I have just pointed out what we have spent on arms and armaments ourselves. Does the gentleman approve of that?

Mr. VOORHIS. I think we should make every effort to reduce it which is consistent with true national defense.

Before I proceed to the next chapter in my speech may I appeal to the House not to forget the two measures for which I have already made my appeal.

THE HISTORICAL REASON FOR LABOR ORGANIZATION

We live, I suppose, in what most of us consider to be one of the great periods of history; and by that same token it is one of the difficult periods of history. The story of the ages records one great thread running through human history. That thread is the struggle of the masses of men, the poor people of this world, to gain—yes, food; yes, clothing; yes, shelter—but more especially to gain a certain freedom whereby they might call their souls their own. Very early in his experience man discovered that that freedom could not be gained except as man apparently made sacrifices of it by entering into cooperation with others of his fellow men to gain a larger freedom than was possible on the basis of pure individualism. The cave man discovered that he could not have freedom from the fear of wild beasts except he cooperated with the members of his family or clan around the campfire.

In like manner every American citizen today knows that he cannot have freedom from the dangers of violence in ordinary life unless he cooperates with others in the maintenance of civil peace. There was a time when one or two fortunate generations were able to enjoy both freedom and a large degree of individualism. Those were the days of the free-land frontier. Those days are gone. With them has gone the chance for 99 percent of the American people to gain freedom and strength of spirit in any way except the old way of cooperation.

The ranchers of my own State of California recognized this and formed cooperative associations to gain freedom from the ruinous domination of the speculator in their fruit markets. Our Department of Agriculture has recognized it and tried in various ways to teach the farmers of all America the lesson of necessary cooperation.

Congress recognized, finally, that these same principles offered the only hope of freedom for all those millions of Americans whose very jobs and means of life depend today upon the use of tools and machinery belonging to other men.

In recognizing this the Congress said, in part, and I read from section 1 of the National Labor Relations Act—

> Experience has proved that protection by law of the right of employees to organize and bargain collectively safeguards commerce from injury, impairment, or interruption, and promotes the flow of commerce by removing certain recognized sources of industrial strife and unrest, by encouraging practices fundamental to the friendly adjustment of industrial disputes arising out of differences as to wages, hours, or other working conditions, and by restoring equality of bargaining power between employers and employees.

I am assuming that practically every Member of the House agrees with the basic idea of the Wagner Act—that we believe in the right of labor to organize and bargain collectively, and that we understand that the worker in seeking this right is merely carrying on the age-old struggle for freedom and the right to stand free and equal with his fellow men.

WHY THE C. I. O.?

Now, if we believe in organization and collective bargaining, then we must realize that it is most needed among the poorly paid and unskilled workers of our mass industries.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOORHIS. I yield for a question.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Admitting all that, does the gentleman believe that the purpose can be accomplished unless there are some restrictions on the right of labor to bargain? What I mean is this: There are certain things defined as unfair labor practices.

Mr. VOORHIS. Yes.

Mr. HOFFMAN. The gentleman understands to what I refer.

Mr. VOORHIS. I think I do.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Should there not be some restrictions on the other side?

Mr. VOORHIS. I will ask the gentleman to listen to my whole speech and I think his question will be answered.

As a matter of unquestionable fact the organization of these workers has been delayed in the United States for three or four decades. The reason it has been delayed is because until very recently we have not had industrial type unions in this country. Therefore, if, as we must, we realize that all America will be better off if the wages and conditions of our poorest paid workers are improved either by organization or by statute, or both, we cannot logically fail to recognize the basic importance of what the C. I. O. has done in bringing into the American scene the industrial type of union.

And further, no movement seeking to give a degree of freedom and independence to the poor has ever failed to arouse the spirited opposition of those who either fear or dislike the idea of human equality and true democracy. Every time an intensive organizing drive in any industry has taken place in America it has been condemned as a menace to the safety of the Nation and been branded as the work of Communists and enemies of all we hold dear.

Mr. RICH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOORHIS. Briefly.

Mr. RICH. Would the gentleman approve of the strikes that were conducted in the fruit sections of California, where the C. I. O. prohibited the farmers from harvesting their crops just recently and tons of fruit went to waste and spoiled?

Mr. VOORHIS. None of us desires to see anything go to waste. We do not desire to see humanity go to waste. The problem of agricultural labor is one of the most difficult problems we have for the reason that the farmer, unlike other producers, has no control over the price at which he sells his product. Neither is he able to keep his product indefinitely or until a better time. A strike to him may prove far more disastrous than to any other industry. I realize all of these problems. I realize also that the agricultural laborer faces a difficult problem of making a living and that we have a great human conflict that somehow must be adjusted with justice to all. When I get through with my speech I will try to answer other questions.

I have no fear whatsoever that several million American workmen will be lured by the siren song of communism. I have a fundamental faith in the good sense, the patriotism, and the desire for general justice of the American wage earners. To accuse the hundreds of thousands of members of the C. I. O. of communism is an old antilabor trick, but to my mind, at least, it is ridiculous.

A NEW AGE BEING BORN

An age is passing—the age of master and servant in industry. As the last representatives of that arrogant industrialism of an age that is gone, they will attempt to perpetuate it. But its passing is inevitable and necessary if democracy is to survive—a new age of free labor is struggling to be born. It will produce its conflicts and its labor pains, but born it must be, and our task is so to preside over events as to make the birth as painless as we can.

All of us desire to reach a condition where labor and capital and government as equal partners in American enterprise can and will cooperate together for the common welfare. Such a state of affairs is impossible until labor has gained its right to collective bargaining. Peace in industry can only be based upon even-handed justice and full recognition of human as well as property values.

AMERICAN LABOR KEEPS ITS CONTRACTS

But there is an encouraging side to the situation after all. For history proves that in every industry where labor has gained full organization and the recognition of its equal place, labor in turn has kept its agreements, industrial peace has been generally maintained, and the sense of responsibility of labor has been every bit as great as that of capital. We cannot find an example in our history where a major American labor union broke a contract.

But labor cannot keep agreements until labor has an agreement to keep. Labor cannot take responsibility until it is accorded a position where it can become responsible. I think the heads of the United States Steel Corporation wisely and patriotically recognized this fact. I think the heads of some other steel corporations have for reasons of their own chosen to disregard it.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. VOORHIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 3 additional minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

VIOLENCE TAKES PLACE IN UNORGANIZED FIELDS

Mr. VOORHIS. Mr. Speaker, on the other hand, this will of American people to stand as men on their own rights in industry cannot permanently be resisted. Lawlessness and chronic outbreaks of violence have taken place not in industries where labor is fully organized but in places like Harlan County, Ky., where the right of organization has been resisted by capital by all the means at its command, both fair and foul. And a peculiar thing has been that for every violent offense of labor there have been several such offenses by embattled industry. And for every man beaten up by labor, several from labor's ranks have actually been killed.

I do not attempt to justify the use of violence by labor for a single moment. But I do say, without fear of contradiction, that in this matter labor has been far more sinned against than sinning. And the reasons are not far to seek. First, may I remind you that had "Little Steel" done exactly what "Big Steel" did, there would have been no turmoil, no excitement, no accusations, no violence, no Chicago killings in the past few weeks. We have heard so much of how "Little Steel" thinks the C. I. O. "irresponsible" that we have forgotten the much larger fact that "Big Steel" considered it responsible enough to sign a contract with C. I. O. Second, every labor leader in America knows that violence—by whomever committed—will be blamed on his organization and will hurt its cause. Finally, every labor leader in America also knows that he must, as speedily as possible, establish the kind of strong union discipline which has marked the long-established unions of America for years.

A. F. OF L. AND C. I. O.—BOTH NEEDED

Unfortunately, American labor today finds its most serious problem not in the attacks made upon it from without but in the quarrel between the C. I. O. and the A. F. of L. within the ranks of labor. In the personal quarrels of individual men, whoever they may be, I have no interest. But I do have an interest in seeing both these great labor groups make their contributions to the welfare of the American labor movement and of the Nation generally. I neither hope nor believe that the A. F. of L., with its long record of service to the cause of American labor, will pass off the American labor scene. To suggest that the C. I. O. will do so is no longer even reasonable.

I have about abandoned hope that the A. F. of L. unions and the C. I. O. unions can be brought together into one single federation. I have not abandoned hope that a working agreement can be effected between the two organizations.

Such a resolution of this labor conflict is, indeed, one of the greatest needs of the American labor movement today. Not only will jurisdictional fights make for bad blood between rival labor groups: they go further to alienate public support from the whole labor movement than any other kind of labor struggle. It is most fervently to be hoped that wise leaders in both groups will see this and act accordingly.

THE FUTURE

But I do not believe that the great drama will necessarily come to a happy conclusion without sane, constructive leadership being exerted by us here in the National Congress.

The time may soon come, for example, when the National Labor Relations Act will require certain constructive amendments to enable the Board to bring about mediation proceedings and to act in broader fashion than it is able to do at present.

Our job is to see to it that no group—not capital, not labor, not vigilantes, not anyone—becomes bigger than the Government of the United States. I have not one bit of fear but that we can and will, and our President can and will, do this job. It does not mean, however, going out and shooting strikers. It means maintaining law and order in such manner that human life is saved and not destroyed. And it means working toward the day when industrial peace can be founded on industrial justice and when American labor will share responsibility for the successful operation of our industry. American labor will and must assume that share of responsibility, as it has already done in many long-organized industries, just as soon as labor's right to organization and collective bargaining has been recognized. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may proceed for 5 additional minutes in order to answer questions.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman desire an extension of his time?

Mr. VOORHIS. Not very much, but I will take it by unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOORHIS. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. HOFFMAN. While the gentleman was speaking, I asked him if he did not think that unfair practices by labor should be set up and defined. The gentleman said he would reply to that before he finished his speech. I listened, but I did not hear his reply.

Mr. VOORHIS. Of course, it seems to me we are in one of those difficult periods of adjustment during which inevitably there are mistakes made by everybody. I also pointed out, and I believe, that the forces of government necessarily must be supreme all the time.

Mr. HOFFMAN. I agree with the gentleman all along that line; but what I am getting at is, does the gentleman believe the Wagner Law should prescribe and set forth unfair labor practices on the part of labor?

Mr. VOORHIS. For instance, what?

Mr. HOFFMAN. Oh, well, we need not go into that.

Mr. VOORHIS. We would have to.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Does the gentleman assume there are no unfair practices followed by labor? For instance, let us take the sit-down strikes.

Mr. VOORHIS. I stated in my speech I did not try to say that labor had never made mistakes. I said in my opinion the offenses by labor were far less serious than those committed against labor.

Mr. HOFFMAN. The question I am asking is this: Does the gentleman not think the Wagner law, in order to carry out the purposes for which it was enacted, should prescribe unfair labor practices on the part of the unions?

Mr. VOORHIS. After all I believe that the real genius of the Wagner law arose from the fact that it was understood that labor is essentially and necessarily in this situation at a great disadvantage and still is for a variety of reasons I need not go into. The Wagner law was passed in order to attempt to protect labor which under the circumstances was the party in need of protection.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Assuming all that, does the gentleman contend that labor cannot be guilty of any unfair labor practice?

Mr. VOORHIS. I think you will find there are certain things that have happened which every labor leader in the country will feel perhaps were things that were detrimental not only to the laboring man but also to the movement and it may be that the time will come when those things must be included in that section.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Does the gentleman think the time is now here when we should include unfair practices by labor in the Wagner Labor Act?

Mr. VOORHIS. I do not think so, not until the time has come when unquestionably the right of labor to organize and bargain collectively has been recognized.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Does not the gentleman think that when the Wagner Labor Act provides, as it does, that labor, and labor alone, can call for an election, labor should call for an election in the Ford plant, for instance, before proceeding to pass out literature there?

Mr. VOORHIS. Of course, the matter of having an election in the Ford plant right now might turn out to be a good joke.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Why?

Mr. VOORHIS. Because I worked in the Ford plant, I may say to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. HOFFMAN. All right, now, why might it be a joke?

Mr. VOORHIS. I realize fully from my own experience the kind of influences brought to bear upon workers in that plant.

Mr. HOFFMAN. You mean the Ford men under the Wagner Act would not have the right to have a secret ballot?

Mr. VOORHIS. I think they might not. I think a labor organization at least has a right to have something to say about when the election is to be held. Further, I believe that when a Governor declares martial law it might be a wise thing to provide that when he does so an election shall be held by the National Labor Relations Board to determine the status of the strike.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Can the gentleman see any reason why an employer should not have the right to call an election?

Mr. VOORHIS. Yes; I can.

Mr. HOFFMAN. What is it? I am seeking information, that is all.

Mr. VOORHIS. I gave it to the gentleman. My reason is that I believe, as I stated a while ago, that the man who is utterly dependent upon the use of another man's machinery in order to make his living is necessarily under influences, sometimes subtle and sometimes very, very unsubtle, which impinge upon him and make it very difficult for him to exercize an independent judgment.

Further, it has always been true in every period when a difficult job had to be done that a small group of people necessarily had to take the lead. It never has been true that in a whole industry all the people suddenly rise up and say, "We want organization." That has never happened. It is always a little group which makes the start, and after the little group has established the organization, then the rest will follow along.

Mr. ALLEN of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOORHIS. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. ALLEN of Pennsylvania. Does not the gentleman think it is about time we should go behind the scenes and find the cause for these effects and instead of always focusing attention on labor and the reported abuses of labor, focus attention upon and emphasize the abuses of the industrialists and manufacturers in this whole affair?

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. ALLEN of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from California may proceed for 3 additional minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. ALLEN of Pennsylvania. Does not the gentleman believe it is about time for someone to rise up and explain to this House the abuses, the violations of law, and the violations of constitutional rights which have been perpetrated by some manufacturers of this country?

Mr. VOORHIS. Certainly. I think we should have all such things laid before us.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOORHIS. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. RICH. When the Wagner Labor Relations Act became law a year or so ago, the prime purpose, as was stated on the floor of the House, was to try to make adjustments between capital and labor.

Mr. VOORHIS. That is right.

Mr. RICH. Since that law has been in effect, in the last 7 months we have had over 2,400 strikes, more than we have ever had in the history of this Nation. What is the trouble?

Mr. VOORHIS. I can tell the gentleman the trouble, I believe. Let me cite the example of West Virginia. Before the N. R. A. law was passed in 1932 the largest number of miners who had ever been organized in West Virginia was approximately 50,000. After the N. R. A. law was passed, because the men felt they would be protected if they joined an organization the membership of the United Mine Workers in the State of West Virginia increased to over 200,000. I think that is one reason. Another reason is that in every period of rising prices in all the history of this Nation we have had strikes. The reason is obvious, that the cost of living increases.

Mr. RICH. However, the Wagner Act has failed in the fact it has permitted these strikes. I thought the act would result in settling strikes. No action is being taken by the Labor Relations Board in reference to settling strikes.

Mr. VOORHIS. I may say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that I suggested in my speech, in as brief a way as I could, that I believed the time would come, perhaps, when it would be wise to broaden the powers of the Board under the Wagner Act; and may I add that the history of railroad labor, of the miners, and other industries proves, I think that if, under the Wagner Act, organization and collective bargaining can be established, we can then expect labor to be a most important force making for industrial peace.

Mr. RICH. Does not the gentleman think that time is now here to broaden the Wagner Act?

Mr. VOORHIS. No; I stated I did not think so. I hope it may come soon.

Mr. COLDEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOORHIS. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. COLDEN. Is it not a fact that a great many employers ignore the Wagner Act and refuse to recognize the right of collective bargaining, and thus cause strikes?

Mr. VOORHIS. I thank the gentleman for his contribution. His statement is obviously true.

Mr. RICH rose.

Mr. VOORHIS. I shall not yield yet until I get through answering this important question of my colleague from California.

For many months the manufacturers were advised by lawyers that the Supreme Court would kill the Wagner Act, and then, even after it was the law of the land as passed by Congress, the Wagner Act was systematically disregarded throughout the country.

May I point out further that if we are going to insist upon strict obedience to the law, we must insist upon it from every single element of the population. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, on tomorrow, after the disposition of the veto message of the President and the probable consideration of the conference report on the farm-tenancy bill, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Claims may call up omnibus claims bills, beginning at no. 281 on the Private Calendar.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, and I shall not object, may I ask the majority leader a question? The gentleman spoke about a conference report on the farm-tenancy bill. Will the conference report on the Interior Department appropriation bill come up tomorrow?

Mr. RAYBURN. I stated on the floor in response to a question of the gentleman from New York, and I also told the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] privately, that the conference report on the Interior Department appropriation bill would not be taken up until Thursday.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman tell us what will be taken up after the omnibus claims bills are disposed of tomorrow?

Mr. RAYBURN. Nothing that I know of.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. BATES, for 5 days, on account of official business.

To Mr. CALDWELL, for 5 days, on account of official business.

To Mr. HILL of Alabama, indefinitely, on account of official business.

To Mr. LUECKE of Michigan (at the request of Mr. HOOK), indefinitely, on account of illness.

To Mr. MAAS, for 5 days, on account of official business.

To Mr. MOTT, for 5 days, on account of official business.

To Mr. MCFARLANE, for today, on account of illness in family.

To Mr. SCOTT, for 5 days, on account of official business.

To Mr. SUTPHIN, for 5 days, on account of official business.

SENATE ENROLLED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bills and a joint resolution of the Senate of the following titles:

S. 1048. An act for the relief of Alexander E. Kovner;

S. 1849. An act for the relief of the Goldenberg Furniture Co.; and

S. J. Res. 30. Joint resolution for the relief of William K. Richardson.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 19 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until tomorrow, Tuesday, July 13, 1937, at 12 o'clock noon.

SENATE

TUESDAY, JULY 13, 1937

(Legislative day of Tuesday, July 6, 1937)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

THE JOURNAL

On request of Mr. BARKLEY, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of the calendar day Monday, July 12, 1937, was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT

Messages in writing from the President of the United States, submitting nominations, were communicated to the Senate by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Megill, one of its clerks, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 455) for the relief of J. R. Collie and Eleanor Y. Collie.

The message also announced that the House had severally agreed to the reports of the committees of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the following bills of the House:

H. R. 458. An act for the relief of Eva Markowitz;

H. R. 730. An act for the relief of Joseph M. Clagett, Jr.; and

H. R. 1377. An act conferring jurisdiction upon the United States District Court for the Southern District of Ohio to hear, determine, and render judgment upon the claims of Walter T. Karshner, Katherine Karshner, Anne M. Karshner, and Mrs. James E. McShane.

The message further announced that the House had severally agreed to the reports of the committees of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to each of the following bills of the House:

H. R. 1945. An act for the relief of Venice La Prad;

H. R. 2332. An act for the relief of William Sulem;

H. R. 2562. An act for the relief of Mr. and Mrs. David Stoppel;

H. R. 2565. An act to confer jurisdiction on the Court of Claims to hear, determine, and enter judgment upon the claims of contractors for excess costs incurred while constructing navigation dams and locks on the Mississippi River and its tributaries; and

H. R. 3634. An act for the relief of Noah Spooner.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

H. R. 6563. An act to define, regulate, and license real-estate brokers, business-chance brokers, and real-estate salesmen; to create a Real Estate Commission in the District of Columbia; to protect the public against fraud in real-estate transactions; and for other purposes; and

H. R. 7084. An act to provide that all cabs for hire in the District of Columbia be compelled to carry insurance for the protection of passengers, and for other purposes.

ENROLLED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED

The message further announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the following enrolled bills and joint resolution, and they were signed by the President pro tempore:

S. 1048. An act for the relief of Alexander E. Kovner;

S. 1849. An act for the relief of the Goldenberg Furniture Co.; and

S. J. Res. 30. Joint resolution for the relief of William K. Richardson.

H. R. 7084. An act to provide that all cabs for hire in the District of Columbia be compelled to carry insurance for the protection of passengers, and for other purposes.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

The PRESIDENT pro tempore, as in executive session, laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States submitting sundry nominations (and withdrawing a nomination), which were referred to the appropriate committees.

(For nominations this day received and nomination withdrawn, see the end of Senate proceedings.)

REORGANIZATION OF FEDERAL JUDICIARY

The Senate resumed consideration of the bill (S. 1392) to reorganize the judicial branch of the Government.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY] to the amendment in the nature of a substitute.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY] has the floor.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. BAILEY. I do not yield if it is going to take me off the floor. If it were not for that, I should be very happy to yield.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator may yield for a question, or he may yield for the presentation of a privileged matter.

Mr. BLACK. I desire to ask the Senator a question. Will he yield to me to announce that as soon as possible after the Senate meets tomorrow I desire to obtain the floor to discuss the pending question? That was my object in asking the Senator to yield.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I am not prepared to say that yielding for the purpose of an announcement would be yielding to a question. I wish to be courteous; I think all Senators know I wish to be courteous; but I must protect the limited rights we have in this debate. I cannot yield for an announcement, because, if I did, the Chair would rule at once that the continuation of my remarks begun on yesterday would be a second speech. I may say to the Senator, notwithstanding I spoke at some length on yesterday and intend to speak at some length today, I do not flatter myself that I could exhaust this great subject. So I must reserve my time for a second speech.

Mr. President, when the Senate recessed yesterday afternoon I had reached a certain stage in my remarks, and I propose at this time to go forward from that stage. However, I do not think it will be considered inappropriate if I take a few moments to recapitulate the remarks which I made on yesterday, not because of any sense of their value but because they afford a background for what I intend to say today.

With a view to that recapitulation, I call attention first to the fact that at the outset I undertook to convey to those who heard me my sense of the high import of all that is involved in the pending legislation and in this discussion.

I undertook to say that the place of justice is a holy place. Those who deal with the means of justice in the life of our great Republic are dealing with holy things.

Then again I undertook to point out that we, being powerful, are dealing with the means of determining the limitations of our own powers. We have the strength of giants over the courts, but if we use that strength as giants and wield that power in our own behalf we fall under the condemnation of using it in a tyrannous way and, I greatly fear, of using it in a selfish way.

I undertook to say that our power over the judiciary is a power in trust, not for ourselves but for justice. We have the power to organize and the power to provide and the power to aid, but not the power to control. Least of all do we have the power to control with a view to the aggrandizement of our own power.

I undertook then to state the principle involved in the pending measure, and to show that the principle in the substitute is precisely the same principle as that of the original bill, which I take it we all agree has received not only the condemnation of the majority of the Committee on the Judiciary but in a very great measure—how far I would not undertake to say—has received the condemnation of the American people; otherwise the substitute would not be here.

I undertook to say what is the principle. The principle involved here, I stated, is the principle of giving to the political two-thirds of our Government—that is, to the executive and the legislative departments which are confessedly political in their character—a degree, I would be willing to say a very great degree, of control over the third department which is that of justice and which is not in any sense political.

From that point I proceeded to show that there is no difference in degree as between the original bill and the pending substitute; that whereas the original bill contemplates that we should so provide that our President might appoint and we confirm six Justices of the Supreme Court, thereby providing 60 percent of that Court satisfactory to the Congress, perhaps, and to the President, the pending substitute provides precisely the same thing. I do not believe I have to go over the figures, but it may be necessary and I shall do so.

We have but three Justices on the Supreme Bench who are considered satisfactory by Senators. They freely express themselves to that effect. We have now one vacancy. The pending substitute would provide for the appointment of one immediately and one next January, or the two within 6 months. Having one and providing two, we would have three. We have three satisfactory, as we say. That would make six. The total Court membership would be 10, and 6 is 60 percent of 10. Therefore, I say there is no difference in the degree of the control which is the objective of the proposed legislation.

I went on to say that this is no compromise and added that I would not be willing to compromise a principle anyhow. I flatly stated, and I am prepared to maintain, that the compromise of a principle is not a compromise. It is a surrender. It is a betrayal.

With those statements by way of preliminary I proceeded then to set forth my first contention as follows:

> We contend that the purpose and effect of the proposed legislation is to affirm and exert the power of the legislative and executive branches of the government of our Republic to control the judicial branch with the view to shaping judicial determination.

That was rather a bold statement, but I undertook to maintain it, though not by my opinion. I would not dare to entertain an opinion of that sort without overwhelming evidence and I submitted the evidence. I recited numerous quotations from the addresses of the President, one being from the message conveying the original bill to the Congress and the other being a quotation from his address to his party and its leaders on March 4 of this year, just 30 days after the presentation of the original bill to the Congress and when tremendous excitement was prevailing. These quotations I shall not now review, but if anyone has any doubt about their probative effect I should be very glad if he would go back and read that address of the President.

I digress to say that I read in one of the papers, a paper which I very greatly respect, that I had attacked the President. Of course, I have not attacked the President. I read to the Senate the language of the President. I did not undertake even to construe it. I leave that for all who read it and all who hear it. But when the President says repeatedly in a public address that the proposed legislation was put forward by himself in order to relieve doubt as to the constitutionality of undisclosed acts which he intends hereafter to introduce or to have introduced, I cannot avoid the conclusion—I think the President himself is bound by it and would not deny it—that the motive for the proposed legislation is not to aid the structure or the operations of the Court but to introduce into it members in addition to the three who are supposed to be acceptable and agreeable and whose dissenting opinions have been rather widely approved by those who advocate the legislation—to introduce into the Congress a bill giving him power to appoint three more of the same type—two more, and he has one vacancy to fill—why? Because, as he said, he wishes the way to be clear with respect to the constitutionality of those acts.

That is no attack upon the President. That is giving the President the benefit of his own statement, and I leave the probative effect of it to the Senate. But in supporting that argument I also quoted the Democratic platform; and I am going to dwell on that at this moment for a little while, because I think it is of very great importance in this debate.

Those of us who have opposed this legislation have contended at all times that the platform of our party did not contemplate in any way any legislation affecting the number or the character of the Justices on the Supreme Bench. We understood that we would propose legislation. If the legislation should be found to be unconstitutional, and we still thought it of real value, we would propose clarifying amendments. That was my understanding. I believe I will say here that I sat on the platform committee of our convention, and no one suggested that there was any other conception or any other purpose. I worked on this very plank, and there are Senators here who know that originally there was language in the plank which I had stricken out. There was a debate on it. I need not go into that, and I am a little afraid if I did I should be charged with betraying confidence; but I am going into this: That was our construction, but Senators advocating this bill are now saying that that plank contemplated this legislation. Well, if that is true, then they are bound by that interpretation, and this legislation does propose to enable the President to appoint Justices to the bench, as promised in the platform, according to them, and it is advocated by the President himself as being the means to relieve and to remove constitutional objections to proposed legislation.

There are the horns of a dilemma. If Senators take my view that the platform contemplated an amendment to the Constitution by way of clarifying amendments touching the powers of the Congress or the President, very well; then submit the articles amending the Constitution. That is one horn. But if you contend that the purpose of that platform, that the import of that platform, that what you meant by that platform, that what our party meant by that platform plank was that we would come here in response to the election, the platform being accepted by the people, and operate upon the Supreme Court with a view confessedly of affecting judicial determination, stick to that; and, either way you go, you are impaled upon one horn or the other of your dilemma; but you cannot go two or three ways about it.

I submitted that to the Senate as conclusive evidence that the purpose of this legislation was to enable the President to add members to the bench of the Supreme Court, not because the present members of the Court were old—oh, no—not because the dockets were congested—oh, no; because the evidence is that they are not congested—but because the opinions of the Court, as some have thought, were standing in the way of undisclosed legislation.

Senators who take the latter view must come into this debate confessed as to the motives and the purpose and the consequences of this legislation. Those who take our view are in the clear. We stand ready, in any matter of the power of the Congress or the power of the President in the Constitution, to submit amendments clarifying the Constitution or even enabling the Congress to exercise additional powers. We cannot do more. We know of no other way to change the Constitution.

So, Mr. President, having set forward those considerations, I proceeded to undertake to show that if that view of the legislation is maintained it is unconstitutional. If I used the word that suited my mind best, I should say it was anticonstitutional; and there is a difference. I mean to say that that sort of thing is opposed to the spirit of the Constitution and opposed to its meaning. I raised those considerations. Of course, I will not go into them now; and I added to that the consideration that, even conceding that the legislation is within the letter of the Constitution, the moral obligation stands in the way of the enactment of the legislation; and I added that there is a moral power, that there is a moral law underlying all law. It is the law of conscience; the law that flows in some unseen way between what we call the soul of man and his Maker. We answer to Him in those matters, and that is why the oath is imposed upon a Senator or other public officer. We not only ought to be faithful to the American people, but we ought to be faithful to the oaths of our office; and it is not without significance that we are required to take those oaths before God and upon His holy Evangel.

There, Mr. President, is the constitutional testimony to the supremacy of the moral law.

Then, having set forward those considerations, I undertook to set forward the next contention, which is as follows:

That to enact legislation having for its purpose the control of the judicial branch, with the objective of shaping judicial determinations, sets a precedent the consequences of which are plain and inevitable.

Among those consequences first I observed the destruction of the Constitution as an instrument on which the humblest individual may rely, and I undertook to show that the Constitution is the source of the sense of security in America. I shall not go further into that subject.

Under that head I treated first the consequences with respect to individuals. Then, Mr. President, toward the close of the evening I came to state the second consequence under that contention. I shall now restate it and then proceed to conclude my argument.

The second consequence, I said, would be to extinguish the constitutional limitations upon the powers of Congress and the President by means of legislation. If this legislation, having the avowed purpose which I have shown, should be passed, the consequence would be to extinguish the constitutional limitations upon the powers of Congress and the President.

Here we are today bound by certain limitations upon our power. Congress enjoys only such powers as are specifically granted in the Constitution, being definitely enumerated, and other powers that are implied in order to carry out and perform those powers. We have those powers and no more powers. The people and the States who constituted this Republic were more careful about that than they were about anything else in creating the great structure of our Government. The States never would have come in, the people never would have assented, but for the fact that there was laid before them a Constitution which not only guaranteed their rights but went so far in the guarantee that it specifically restrained and limited the power of the men who were to constitute the Government.

I can understand that. They and their fathers had suffered from absolute government. They had fled to these shores across the stormy Atlantic because of oppressions received from governments over which they had no control, from governments upon which there were no restraints. They and their fathers had lived and labored, had been imprisoned and suffered, and had died, because of the impositions of absolute power, because of the discriminations of aristocracy, and they determined that here should be a land where the government should be under the law. They knew that they were creating a mighty structure. They knew that one was far less than all. They knew what the combined power of all the States would mean, and they said in their hearts, "We will live in our little localities, we will take the risks of invasion and of destruction, but we will not create a government which can take our rights away from us. We will not go back to the European experience."

They knew what it was. William Penn served his time in jail. He knew what it was. Brewster had served his time jail. Go yonder in the President's room. I like to go there and see it. It is a glorious room. There are pictures of great figures there. One is of Washington, one is of Franklin. Over in the corner is the portrait of an old and bearded man in a dungeon. The Holy Bible is in his lap. His eyes are lifted to Heaven. That is Brewster. People knew what had happened to Brewster, and that portrait is in the President's room is a reminder to all who come there that when we created this Government the American people, the States and the people, determined that they would create a government which could not put a man like Brewster in chains. That is the meaning of the Constitution. That is the meaning of the independent judiciary.

Now, here we are with these powers. They tell us you and I can expand them by increasing the Court. The complaint in this case is against the limitation of the powers of the Government, as being in the Constitution, and declared by an independent Court. That is the gravaman of the offense here, and we all know it.

The President was told that he could not turn out Mr. Humphrey. He was told by a unanimous Court, I understand. The Court said Humphrey had constitutional rights to his office. Poor man, he died before they were vindicated. That was the first case. Then came the A. A. A. case, and the Court said, "Congress does not have the power; the States have the power." Then came the N. R. A. case. The Court said, "The Congress does not have the power." I do not think anyone disputes that now. We undertook to give our power away to a lot of people who had never taken an oath of office, who had never been elected by anybody, and did not have even the standing of an office. The Court said we could not abdicate. We undertook to regulate the chicken business in New York. The Court said we had not the power. The quarrel here was about the power of Congress, and the temptation here now, the effort here now, the motive here now, confessedly the motive, is to create a Court which will give us power which the Supreme Court has said we do not have.

Senators, you may take it if you wish; you at least may try to take it if you wish; but when you attempt to take it in this way, you know, and I know, we are trying to do, by adding Justices to the Court, what the Court has said the Constitution says we cannot do. If you want more power, do not get it from your contrivances. If you want more power, do not get it by legislation. If you want more power, there is only one source of power in America. Oh, hear me, Senators, there is only one source of power in America! We are not sovereign; the President is not sovereign; the Court is not sovereign. The source of power in America is the people of America.

If you want more power, go out to them and make it plain what you want. Let them determine. I do not want an absolute government in America; I do not want one by legislative process; but if the people of America are willing to vote for a constitutional amendment which will centralize all authority in the Congress, then they can do so and take the consequences; but we cannot impose those consequences upon them.

Mr. President, I am going to take up again a quotation from the President on this very point. I have before me now his address to the American people delivered on March 9, 1937, printed in the Appendix of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. This is what he said to the people over the radio:

It will take time—and plenty of time—to work out our remedies administratively even after legislation is passed.

He had legislation in mind—

To complete our program of protection in time, therefore, we cannot delay one moment in making certain that our National Government has power to carry through.

They did not have the power. The Court bill was pending. He was speaking on the Court bill, and he argued that the need was to make certain power in the National Government, President, and Congress. I quote again:

The courts, however, have cast doubts on the ability of the elected Congress to protect us against catastrophe by meeting squarely our modern social and economic conditions.

Granted. Give him credit for the highest impulse. I raise the question, does not that paragraph, "Courts have cast doubts on the ability of the elected Congress to protect us", disclose the purpose so to affect the Court by adding members to it, or inducing members thereon to leave it, that those doubts might be resolved?

He speaks of "the elected Congress." Senators, some of us were elected and all the Members of the House were elected in the last election; but being elected by the people does not give us power over the people. We are servants, under the Constitution. If there are doubts as to any legislation, and if it be agreed that the legislation is of the utmost benefit to the people, the way to resolve the doubts is not to seek to change the Court, but to seek to change the Constitution by the will of the people. They elected us, but they did not give us the power finally to interpret or to change the Constitution of the United States.

It was a great election; but hear me, we say the President won by 11,000,000 majority. If he had won by 40,000,000 majority, he would not have had any more power as President, under the Constitution, than if he had won by 10 majority. When the people elect us Senators and elect him President they elect us under the Constitution, and not over it; subject to the adjudications of the Court, and not to control those adjudications; subject to the interpretation of the Constitution by the final Court, and not subject to the interpretation of the Constitution by President or Senators. If we did not have it that way, the Constitution would not mean anything except whatever we chose to have it mean whenever we were elected.

Again the President said:

But the framers went further—

Here is the meat in the whole proposition. Here is the President's interpretation of the Constitution—

But the framers [of the Constitution] went further. Having in mind that in succeeding generations many other problems then undreamed of would become national problems, they gave to the Congress the ample, broad powers "to levy taxes * * * and provide for the common defense and general welfare of the United States."

There is not a constitutional lawyer in America who will so interpret the Constitution. Did they give the Congress power to provide for the general welfare? Let me read the Constitution:

The Congress shall have power to lay and collect taxes, duties, imposts and excises, to pay the debts, and provide for the common defense and general welfare of the United States.

But that is very far from having the power to legislate for the general welfare; and the only way the President could get that meaning into the Constitution was by striking out half the section and making the words "and provide for the common defense and general welfare of the United States" an independent clause, whereas it is in fact a dependent clause. We lay taxes to provide for the common defense; we lay taxes to provide for the general welfare; but we cannot legislate for the general welfare. That has been perfectly plain for nearly 150 years of our history. Story and Madison and Hamilton and Jefferson all agree on that. Here we come to a time when we receive a message from the President of the United States to the American people advocating this legislation. He believes, and doubtless he desires, that we shall have power to provide for the general welfare of the United States, and enact such laws as we may deem justified by whatever we conceive to be the general welfare.

Here me, Senators! If that is the power of the Congress, there is no reason to have any other powers stated in the whole Constitution. If you and I can resolve today that the general welfare of the United States demands this or demands that, and then pass legislation to enforce the demand, what other power do we want? That is the power of the all-central governments from which we revolted. That is the power under which our forefathers suffered. It does not mean just that we can provide for the general welfare. Oh, no! It means, if this is taken to be the expression of our powers, that we can resolve that anything we want to do is for the general welfare, and proceed to do it. No one is going to consent to that.

I flatter myself with the great hope that even if we should pass this legislation, the President of the United States could not find reputable men on the continent who would sit over yonder in the Court and say that the Congress has the unlimited general-welfare power.

Where is our welfare power? We have the power to levy taxes for the general welfare. The Court has recently held that that enables us also to spend money for the general welfare. I make no complaint about that. All the other "general welfare" in America is in the American States. It is the police power in the very vastest reaches of government. The police power reaches every individual in the United States. The police power touches every right of every individual in the United States. The police power is the greatest power a government can have. I say that if that is the purpose of the legislation, if that is what is in the President's mind—and we will have to agree that he said so to the American people on March 9—if that is what is in his mind, then if this bill passes you have set the precedent; you have proceeded to enable us to construct a Court which will hold that the Congress of the United States has absolute and unlimited power.

Are you going to do that? You say you do not mean to do that. Very well. Suppose we provide for the appointment of two Justices in the next 6 months, as this legislation contemplates, and suppose we undertake to exert that general-welfare and far-reaching police power. We take that power to ourselves. And suppose the Court holds that we have gone beyond our power. Then call your Congress together again; then have another message from the President; then let us get 10 additional Judges, and let the 10 Judges sit on the bench and declare that the general-welfare power does reside in the Congress, and that you and I can do anything we please to do in the name of the general welfare.

If at first you don't succeed,
Try, try again.

That, Mr. President, is the program. What does that mean to the States of America? What would that mean to my State of North Carolina? If we transfer to the Congress the general-welfare powers, if all power to provide for the general welfare is to be centralized in Congress, as the President here states he honestly believes the Constitution means, and he says it in advocating this legislation, then, so far as I can see, you had just as well wipe off the map the State of North Carolina, which was here before the Republic was here, which was one of the creators of the American Republic, and of whose long and glorious history I am infinitely proud. You will have the old absolutism. You will return to a centralized government. You will not be under law any more. You will be under the will of the Congress and the President, or, if not under the will of the Congress and the President, under the will of the first popular man who seizes the powers of this Government. He will do anything that he wishes to do and call it "general welfare", and you will have to accept it.

CONGRESS AND THE STATES

I do not wish to carry things too far, but if that is the power of the Congress, or if that is to be the power of the Congress, then you and I could pass an act declaring that it is to the general welfare of the people of the United States that all the people of North Carolina should move to South Carolina. That might help us. But let us put it the other way, because I think my argument will go better with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH]; that all the people in South Carolina would have to move to North Carolina.

Mr. SMITH. We would have a rebellion.

Mr. BAILEY. The Senator from South Carolina says we would have a rebellion. That would avail nothing. We had one once.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

Mr. BAILEY. I yield to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BORAH. Perhaps the Senator saw in the press dispatches of yesterday and today that in one of the countries of Europe where they have no courts, open and uncontrolled, millions of people were notified that they must move out of the country.

Mr. BAILEY. I thank the Senator from Idaho. The Senator simply corroborates me and shows that I am not exaggerating. I am showing Senators how far this power goes. Remember, Senators, these are the words of the father of this legislation—the President of the United States. This bill was not contrived by the Congress. We know that. This conception was not contrived by the Congress. Probably some of us did not feel quite so good about those decisions; most of us here knew that when we passed those acts they were of doubtful constitutionality. Some of us even rose up here on the floor and said so. But we did not propose this legislation, nor did it occur to us to do so. It came as a tremendous surprise to us, every one.

I see here an honored ex-Senator, Mr. Gore, noble and brave, who rose up here and said these acts were unconstitutional. Thank God for him! I have often said that with that vision of the soul, though the light of the sun is denied him, he has seen more than all.

Mr. President, we did not resent those decisions. We may have chafed under them. We accepted them. We undertook to get up other devices. When the A. A. A. went down we accepted the soil-conservation plan, and it seems to be working very well. When N. R. A. went down we all sang "Glory, hallelujah!" And the whole of America sang with us. We did not try to get a substitute for that.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BAILEY. I yield.

Mr. BURKE. Is the Senator familiar with the resolution for a constitutional amendment that was submitted at the second session of the Seventy-fourth Congress, reading as follows?—

> The Congress shall have power to pass all laws which in its judgment shall be necessary to provide for the general welfare of the people.

Mr. BAILEY. I am not familiar with that. We have had a good many resolutions presented to us. However, I am just saying that that is just precisely the doctrine which the President enunciated in advocating this legislation.

Mr. BURKE. And if the Senator will yield further, is it the Senator's opinion that if Congress is to have that power, the direct and proper way to provide it would be to submit an amendment to the people vesting it all in Congress?

Mr. BAILEY. I just now said so; and on that point I reiterate if we want more power than we have there is a way to get it. We cannot take power. It must be granted. The Congress is not the source of power in America. Oh, hear me, Senators, the Congress is not the source of power here. The American people are the source of power. They, and not we constitute the fountainhead of government. Let us remember that.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for one further question?

Mr. BAILEY. I yield.

Mr. BURKE. Is the Senator familiar with a book published last year by the present Secretary of Agriculture, Mr. Henry Wallace, entitled "Whose Constitution?", in which a number of chapters are devoted to the question of the general welfare, and in which, in particular, the learned author develops his idea that there probably should be set up in this country what he calls "a council on general welfare", with somewhat undefined powers, but very clear in its purpose to formulate and, regardless of any limitations in the Constitution, somehow to secure the adoption of whatever measures such a council might recommend as being in the interest of the general welfare of this country?

Mr. BAILEY. I will say to the Senator that I read the book. It convinced me of only one thing. Its title was, Whose Constitution? When I had finished I knew it was not Mr. Secretary Wallace's Constitution, for he did not know anything about it. [Laughter.] He had never met it; he had made no acquaintance with it, as I understood his book. But, of course, the purport of the question of the Senator from Nebraska is to notify the Senate and notify the American people that that sort of thing is going on here.

Mr. President, I was saying that this thing did not originate with us. We know too well that it did not. We know whence it came, but we do not know all the powers that are behind it.

I am saying that we cannot afford to commit sins even one by one or two by two. The sins you commit two by two you pay for one by one. You and I are trustees of our powers under the Constitution, trustees of the judiciary, trustees of the means of justice to a great and numerous people whose dearest interest is justice; you and I cannot tamper with the judiciary under any pretext or in any degree, and, least of all, when we are notified that the purpose of the proposed legislation is to bring about judicial determination concerning our power.

Think of a man who would aggrandize his own power by a legislative device, who would seek to do by legislation what the Constitution has said he shall not do, who would seek to gain by legislation power that the people through their Constitution have said he shall not have!

Mr. President, the historical background here ought not to be ignored. Do not think that our Government is just another government. Oh, no; there never was a government on the earth like this one, and it was made different on purpose. Sometimes we think it came in the fullness of time in the new land as the providence of God to all races. I think so. And the fathers of whom some of us now speak lightly, those men of the old "horse and buggy" days, which some of us hold in contempt, having wrought the Constitution and erected the structure of the Government, engraved a seal by way of testimony of the solemnity of the acts of the United States. Did you ever read that seal? On the obverse side are the familiar words "E pluribus unum"—one of many, one union of many States; and on the other side is language with which most of us are unfamiliar but which will be found on the dollar bill, "novus ordo seclorum"—a new order of the ages.

What was that order? They understood it was new. It was an order in which government should be under law. Presidents should be under law, Congress should be under law, and the law should be the people's law, in which the inalienable rights of men should be preserved by the power of the people in a constitution and a guardian, independent court. Let us not forget that.

The temptation of time is to forget. We have been happy. We think we can get along in almost any way now. We have been prosperous in the past and we are recovering that prosperity we say; but hear me; oh, hear me; in this moment of forgetfulness, in this moment of temptation to follow a great leader and to do things which we conceive to be noble things, let us not strike down the "new order of the ages" by which government was placed under law and the rights of the humblest were established forever in a fundamental law brought forth from the hearts of the great masses of mankind.

You can destroy it. There is always the temptation to do so. All governments have the centralizing tendency; all democracies wind up in dictatorships. I understand that. Men first get to esteem the government; they come then to depend upon the government. They begin to think that they can leave all their affairs to the government; they begin to draw benefits from the government. A Caesar, riding the streets of Rome in his imperial chariot, returning from his wars and scattering money hither and yon, is always popular and always powerful and always has his way. You and I, and the great masses of our fellow citizens, seeing now that there are benefits to be had from the Government, and that they themselves can get those benefits more easily than they might otherwise get them, say, "Give us government; let us do what the Government says; let us repose our rights, let us repose our wills in the Government." It is always the dictator, then the tyrant, then the jail, then the stake, then the dispersal, then revolution; and humanity has learned once again its bitterest lesson and returns to the righteousness which the fathers forsook and curses the day that those who misled them were born. God forbid that you and I should begin here in a little way—I think in a very big way, but call it a little way—a trend of circumstances which will undermine the "new order of the ages", government under law written by the people, restraints upon the powers of the governing class. Give them armies, give them navies, give them patronage, give them money, give them power, and let them distribute; but in the moment when they undertake to use the Army and the Navy or money or patronage or offices or honors or favors and distribute them in order to centralize the power within themselves, then comes the time when the representatives of the people, the men elected here, as the President says, must rise and stand in the breach and say, "Thus far and no farther." There is a Constitution; there are human rights; there is a Supreme Court. It is independent. And when we die it shall be independent. That is the way to prevent destruction.

Do not think, Mr. President and Senators, that what has happened elsewhere cannot happen here. We are human; we are hewn out of the rock of humanity. There is nothing special about us. The same centralizing force, the same temptations, the same weaknesses that have wrecked others may wreck us. I remind you that you and I are Senators at the present moment of the oldest of the republics. None of the others has survived even so much as a century and a half. All the others have fallen because men forgot and gave way to the temptations of the hour, and, in the name of doing good things, did the things that set the train of circumstances that brought wreck and ruin.

POLITICAL DOMINION OVER THE JUDICIARY

Mr. President, the other phase of this matter is that if we enact this proposed legislation, if we undertake to shape the Court in order to affect or mold its judicial determinations, you and I will have erected a political dominion over the sources of justice. We will have placed the political power above the power of the judiciary.

Can Senators realize that that means that we shall cast the system of justice into politics? The President reminds us that we are the duly elected Congress. There seems to be something of a suggestion in the fact that the people who elected us authorize us to deal with the Supreme Court and make it so it will hold that our acts are within our power, however far we may extend it. Not so! This Government was built on the basis that the Presidential office should be political; that the congressional offices of Senators and Representatives should be political; but there is a department of this Government which is not political, though if this bill should pass the judiciary of the United States will be political.

Let me tell Senators how it will work out. We will go into the next campaign with this bill passed and we will have to write a platform. We will not write a platform about policies either. The people will say, "If we elect you, how much power are you going to take?" If we enact this legislation the questions will not be political questions of policy from now on, but they will be political questions of power. I would expect myself as a candidate before the people of North Carolina to go to my party and say, "In God's name, when you write the platform, write that I do not intend to take away the powers of the people. I do not intend to usurp, I intend to observe the Constitution."

Mr. President, I hope no one thinks I have attacked the President. I have tried to give an exposition of his words relating to the general-welfare clause wholly by way of supporting my arguments. I was in the campaign last year. I was a supporter of the President. I supported him early. I was one of the first of the original 16 who met under the leadership of the then Senator from Tennessee, Hon. Cordell Hull. Former Senator Thomas J. Walsh, of glorious memory, was with us. We agreed to support the President. We fought the battle for him at Chicago. I was for Roosevelt before Chicago. Then we came to the Congress and I supported him most of the time. I think I supported about 80 or 90 percent of the legislation he sent here. I did not make any bones about it. When I ran again last year, I published in the papers of North Carolina a statement of the bills for which I voted and of the bills against which I voted, and said "That is my record. Do as you please. I make no apologies about it." I was for the renomination and reelection of the President.

We went to Philadelphia and renominated him. I made one of the seconding speeches at the request of the high command, and was glad to do it. Then I went into the campaign. I was upholding the banner of the President. I was upholding the banner of the party.

All over North Carolina I began to hear the undercurrent, "He means to be a dictator. He means to be a dictator. He means to be a dictator." I wondered about that. I did not feel that he did. I did not think it was fair. I did not think it was right. I made a speech in my home city on that very subject. What was my argument?

I said, "Oh no; he does not mean to be a dictator. If he had meant to be a dictator, he would have attacked the Supreme Court when those decisions came down. The decisions were disappointing. Doubtless they irritated him, and he made utterances which indicated he was irritated; but here we are. The decisions have been handed down from 10 months to a year and a half, and the Court is respected; the Constitution is respected. He has done nothing about them. Here is the platform. He says we are going to have more legislation, and if the Court holds against us we will amend the Constitution. You shall have the power to do it." I continued and said, "That is not the word of a dictator. That is not the attitude of a dictator."

Now let me go back to my home city of Raleigh and make that speech. I cannot do it. But I do not mean to say that the President intends to be a dictator. I do not think he does. I would not say it. I do not believe it. I could not believe it.

LET US BE JUST TO THE PRESIDENT

The President of the United States is actuated by great and human impulses. Let us be just to him. The President of the United States desires well for the people of North Carolina and of the United States. Let us be just about it. The President is not trying to aggrandize his power for the sake of power. I do not think that. The President wants all the power he can get in order to render the greatest service he can render. I agree to that.

Let me give you a little principle of action or thought. When we can think well or bad of any given set of circumstances, it is not only good but it is wise to think good. The man who goes through the world thinking ill at every opportunity he gets is not going to get anywhere. His hand is against every man.

I could pay the President a tribute. I think when he came here on the 4th of March 1933 he did a magnificent work. I think he gave the American people heart and hope and courage. I think he took hold of the banking situation and the currency and did one of the most remarkable things ever done in the history of this Republic. Then he came along with some great reform and humanitarian measures. I may have differed with him as to some of them. I voted heartily for most of them. I thought some were unconstitutional and some constitutional. I voted against those I thought unconstitutional, and I am not ashamed of it. I shall give account for it not to my people but to my Maker. One gives an account for his oath to his God.

I give the President credit for the great progress he has made. Presidents in power when the country is recovered get the credit. They have always gotten the credit. I would not deny him the credit that any other President ever had. But giving him credit for that, giving him credit for the highest impulses, giving him credit for the noblest objectives, let us remember that he could be carried away with his zeal. We can read his speeches and hear him cry, "Now! Now! Now!" We can see him paint a picture of distress and of the prospects of difficulty which he calls a crisis. We can see him actuated by impulses which carry him away by his zeal and high purposes from the moorings in which he should rest as President of the United States.

I would not say aught against him. He is a mortal man. I suppose the greatest temptation a man ever has is to do wrong in order that he may do good—the most insidious, the most destructive temptation. You and I have the same great impulses he has. Some Senators have legislation concerning the constitutionality of which they have doubts and concerning the constitutionality of which they would have no doubt if they could appoint a court; but they will not give way to those impulses. Nourish your legislation, sustain it, pass it. If the Court holds it unconstitutional, then go to the people and say, "Here is this good thing I wanted for you, but I did not have the power under your instrument. Now change your instrument and give me the power." But in God's name do not walk over a court, do not destroy the independence of the judiciary, in order to construe the Constitution to suit your convenience.

THE ROAD TO ABSOLUTISM

Mr. President, I conclude this phase of my remarks by saying that our contention is that once this purpose of controlling the Court in order to construe the Constitution or aggrandize our power has been accomplished, the road to utter centralization and absolutism would be clear. The state would be above the man. The totalitarian state would inevitably be the order in America. Congress could resolve that the general welfare meant that your rights and your interests should be destroyed for the sake of the whole. That is the totalitarian state.

Do you know what the leader of Italy says? He says the man is nothing, the state is everything. Do you know what America says? America says the people are everything, and the Government is their servant. There is the difference. Here are you and I on this side of the Atlantic and our British brothers on the other side making the last stand in a shaken world for the supremacy of the rights of men above the powers of states. Here we are. Shall we yield? Shall we give an inch? I think I can answer. We will not yield.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BAILEY. Yes; for a question, of course.

Mr. WHEELER. Yes. Let me ask the Senator this question: The same thing is true with reference to the philosophy of Hitler as with reference to the philosophy of Mussolini, and the same philosophy applies with reference to Stalin that applies to Hitler and Mussolini with reference to the states being superior to men.

Mr. BAILEY. And it would not become you or me to say that the motives and impulses of Stalin or Mussolini or Hitler are not good. I think they are. They mean well.

The answer to this that is sometimes given is that, after all, we have the ballot, and we can correct things; but I am telling you we cannot. The average man in America thinks that because we have elections, and he can vote, he can arrest the processes of the Government. He cannot do it. There are ways to control the ballot, and if you give a government with sufficient power you see all those ways employed.

Am I wrong about that? They have the ballot in Germany, but it is just too bad if you do not vote the right way. We know that. There is but one party in Germany. They have the ballot in Italy; but if you should make a mistake one day and vote the wrong way, and find yourself filled with castor oil in about 2 hours, you would have a great sense of your rights; would you not?

The power of the ballot! Governments without constitutions and courts can control ballots. They can control you.

I have another thing to say about that. The majority in America is under the Constitution and not over it. I am unwilling to trust myself without a Constitution to the will of the electorate. No other man can afford to do it. The will of the electorate is expressed under the Constitution and not over it until the amendment is submitted. Do I make that clear? You may have a thousand elections in America, and you may elect to the Congress the greatest gang of Socialists or Communists the world ever saw, and they may come down here with mandates and platforms, but they cannot do a blessed thing to this country so long as there is a Constitution, so long as there is a free Court, so long as we have the people's document. That is the protection in America against majorities. We rule by majority, but under a Constitution.

I hear persons say, "Oh, well, the people want it; why not let them have it?" I should like to have the people have anything they want. Of course I would. Every Senator would. I am not in the habit of proclaiming, though, any great ideas with a view to that sort of popularity. I can stand up before the people of North Carolina and tell them that I know very well they do not want anything except what the Constitution provides. They understand the meaning of the Constitution. They understand the meaning of judicial review. They understand the importance of independent courts. I have no trouble about that. Mass democracies breed dictators, and die; constitutional democracies only can survive.

Why the supreme court of my State, before this Union was formed, held an act unconstitutional, and 2 years after the Union was formed it held another act unconstitutional, and we respected the court. Nobody thought of changing it.

Today I may be in the majority. Tomorrow I may be in the minority; but, in the majority or in the minority, above my head rests the flag, and the flag is the symbol of the Constitution and the Republic. It makes no difference though the millions be arrayed against me; the Constitution and the independent court give and guarantee the preservation of my rights as a man against the millions. The people also are under the Constitution and elections are under the Constitution.

Mr. President, of course, I understand that the attack upon representative government has gone on everywhere.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BAILEY. I yield.

Mr. WALSH. The Senator has been speaking about what the people of North Carolina desire. I should like to inquire from him whether it is not true that the people of North Carolina, and of every other State in the Union, desire more than anything else the protection and preservation of civil and religious liberty, and whether it is not true that the surest guarantee man has yet discovered to preserve it is the Constitution of the United States and an independent judiciary.

Mr. BAILEY. Yes; I thank the Senator.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. BAILEY. I shall be very happy to yield.

Mr. PEPPER. Are the justices of the supreme court, the highest appellate court in the State of North Carolina, elected or are they appointed by the Governor?

Mr. BAILEY. The justices of the highest court in North Carolina are elected; but I do not think that affects the people's regard for the court. I think the justices are elected in most of the States.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President——

Mr. BAILEY. Let me answer the Senator from Florida, please. It would be a strange thing in North Carolina, and it would be repudiated by 99 percent of the people in the State, if a political party or legislature or platform undertook to tamper with or to instruct the supreme court, even in an election.

Now, hear me. Our members of the court are candidates for election.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President——

Mr. BAILEY. I am going to answer the Senator from Florida. They never attend political meetings. They never make a speech. They do their work. Nobody runs against them, as a matter of fact. They have little party contests, but nobody even challenges their judicial determinations in the election. All they are ever asked to do is to do their duty. They stay there as long as they live, just as the great Chief Justice Clark did, for 30 years.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from North Carolina further yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. BAILEY. I yield for a question.

Mr. PEPPER. In spite of the fact that the justices of the highest appellate court in the State of North Carolina are elected by the people, does religious and civil liberty still exist in North Carolina?

Mr. BAILEY. Absolutely; and religious and civil liberty will last in North Carolina, God helping us, until the last moment of recorded time, and until the last drop of the blood of free men has been shed in their defense.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BAILEY. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. I think all the States except three provide for the election of their highest judges.

Mr. BAILEY. This is a question, my friend?

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes. Does the Senator know any State in which the judges of the highest court are elected where the fact that they must submit themselves to the people has in any way interfered with their independence as judges after their election?

Mr. BAILEY. I should not be able to say. I will say that in North Carolina I know of no such thing; and I say further that the political party in North Carolina that undertook to touch with the suggestion of a suspicion the independence of our judiciary, notwithstanding all our great traditions, would be driven from power.

Mr. MALONEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. BAILEY. I shall be glad to yield.

Mr. MALONEY. Does not the Senator feel that his argument is strengthened by the questions which have just been asked concerning the selection of judges by the people?

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I believe the rule of law is that no man is a judge in his own cause. I will stick to the rule.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BAILEY. I yield.

Mr. WHEELER. Assuming that the people of the United States wanted to elect the judges of the Supreme Court of the United States and the other Federal judges, there would be only one way in which they could do it, and that would be by submitting an amendment to the Constitution; and if the people want it they can have it, can they not, through constitutional amendment?

Mr. BAILEY. Yes; they could have it, but I should very greatly regret it.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. BAILEY. I will yield, of course, to the Senator for a question; but before I yield I wish to say this: I am going to come to the meaning of the life tenure, and the history of it, and its significance. The life tenure is there for great historical reasons, and upon considerations of the utmost importance.

Now I yield to the Senator from Washington.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, are judges in North Carolina elected on a partisan ballot, or in a nonpartisan election?

Mr. BAILEY. The judges in North Carolina are elected on a partisan ballot, on the party ballot.

Mr. BONE. Will the Senator further yield?

Mr. BAILEY. Yes.

Mr. BONE. Does the Senator think that because a judge is selected by what then happens to be the dominant political party, he might shade his political views about questions in which his party is interested or involved?

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I do not think so. If I thought so concerning my State, I probably would be too much ashamed to say so; but I am just saying that it is not possibly true.

The Senator has suggested something to my mind that moves me very deeply. I have been a minister in the courts of North Carolina as an attorney. I have known the judges. I have pleaded my cases before the bar of those courts. Thank God, there is not a man in North Carolina, whether he be Republican or Democrat, who has been heard within my recollection to utter one word concerning the character, the honesty, and the capacity for justice of our courts. I walked in many a day with my clients doubtful of my cause, terribly in earnest, but it never occurred to me that I could be the victim of injustice in a court of my Commonwealth, and I do not think it occurs to anyone else.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. BAILEY. Certainly.

Mr. PEPPER. Does the Senator associate in his mind at all the two movements, one of which led to the direct election by the people of United States Senators, the other of which has led gradually to the election of the members of the highest courts of appeal in the several States of the Union?

Mr. BAILEY. I know something of those movements; yes. I do not think either of them has anything to do with the present case; but I am glad to have the Senator make the suggestion, and I hope someday he will tell me about it.

Parliaments have been dying throughout the world. That is a strange thing, strange in our modern times, that we should find the representative legislative bodies dying everywhere. The legislative body is dead in Germany, dead in Italy, dead in Turkey, dying in Japan, very deeply confused in France, living in England—strong and powerful in England—under attack in the United States.

We are fighting here, my fellow Senators, for the place of representative government in a representative constitutional democracy; and we all know it. What are the influences brought to bear on us? What are the attacks made? If we do not vote a certain way, there are threats of reprisals. We are told that we will have opposition, and the opposition will be induced from Washington. We are informed that our consciences will hurt us when we come down to ask for a favor. It is suggested that in the distribution of money for projects Senators who do not vote as they are told to vote will be made to pay a price.

On the other hand, we have the American people, not all of them, to be sure, but hundreds of thousands and millions of them, writing to us, "Do what the President says." I do not blame them for their attachment. I would not lessen their enthusiasm by anything I am saying to them. But a representative of the people has a duty of his own, a mind of his own, a function of his own. Above them all it is his duty to do right according to his judgment. It simply indicates the little tendency there is here, which may rise higher, may get lower, may return; but let us remember that we are here to exercise our judgments, to do our duty.

I will go further: When the President sends a bill to the Congress—and this is the first bill, I think, that was ever sent to the Congress by a President—I say to the Senate that he sends it here for our consideration, for the exercise of our judgment. When he sends a message to us, he sends it for our consideration. It is advice and recommendation, and it is not orders.

CONGRESS CAN DEFEND NOW

I do not know how far the attack on popular representation is going, but I have a remedy. We may wait too late, but if we act in time, it will not be too late. We have our remedy. The threat of reprisals invites self-defense. That cannot be avoided. If you tell me you are going to strike me, I either take the blow or put up my guard, that is all. We have a guard, and we can put it up.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BAILEY. Yes.

Mr. MINTON. Has the Senator from North Carolina been threatened with these consequences?

Mr. BAILEY. Not at all; I am not up for election next year.

Mr. MINTON. Has any Senator, to the Senator's knowledge, been threatened with these consequences?

Mr. BAILEY. Yes, indeed; and they have told me so.

Mr. MINTON. What Senators?

Mr. BAILEY. I shall not go into personalities. I will give the names privately, and the Senator can see them. They are not 75 feet from the Senator.

Mr. MINTON. Will the Senator tell us who it was who threatened the Senators?

Mr. BAILEY. I can do that, too.

Mr. MINTON. Who was it?

Mr. BAILEY. I am not going into personalities in the Senate. If the Senator wishes to know, Heaven knows I will give him the names, but I am not going to get this debate down on that level. We spent several days trying to get it up after the Senator had spoken. Now, let us keep it up.

Mr. MINTON. The Senator from North Carolina is a fine lawyer, and of course he knows that when one goes into court and makes an assertion such as that the Senator is now making, we are entitled at least to know——

Mr. BAILEY. I think the Senator would be entitled to know. I have told the Senator I would tell him the names. I am yielding, to be sure, for a question. But I think there are proprieties in the Senate. I think if I went into giving testimony, and there was testimony in rebuttal, and we had character witnesses, we would bring this Chamber down to a very low level. However, if the Senator wishes to do it, I must answer, as Nehemiah said to Sanballat:

I am doing a great work, so that I cannot come down

Now let me proceed. I am suggesting my remedy. I saw what the Postmaster General and our national chairman said today. He said there were not going to be any reprisals in Indiana. I am glad to hear it. That will at least relieve the mind of the senior Senator from Indiana [Mr. VAN NUYS]. I suggest that the junior Senator have a conference with him. But I do not want to go into that testimony; I am going the other way.

Congress controls the purse. Now hear me. If they undertake to control the disbursing of the public money, which we exact from the people, and which we appropriate, against any man here, I will join with him to enact legislation which will put the distribution of public funds beyond political control; and that will not be difficult, either.

The Senate still has the power of confirmation; it still has it, and we can write the power of confirmation into every act authorizing the appointment of public servants. I am speaking now of measures of self-defense for our representative democracy.

We can extend the civil service, and we can defeat the proposed legislation which would put the control of the civil service under the Executive; and I think it ought to be defeated.

We can rely upon the jealous self-respect of our constituents. You let one of these quasi-socialists who came here when our party got into power, who had never done a thing for the Democratic Party, had never known what it was to go out and battle for it, had never stood for it in an election, who could not have been elected delegate, constable, or coroner in the smallest community in America—let one of them come down to North Carolina and tell the North Carolina people what to do; and he will be told once and forever. I am not afraid about people interfering in my State. I challenge them to interfere. I will meet them at Philippi.

Mr. President, I wish now to make a little departure from my remarks, and to go into a little discussion of the arguments for the pending legislation. I am going to take up first the argument of the junior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. LOGAN].

I shall take up first the argument of the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. LOGAN]. The Senator's principal argument was that we were all seeing spooks. Mr. President, I could wish they had been spooks. It would be a great relief for me to know as I looked over in the direction of the Senator that it was, after all, a spook.

What is the answer to that? The Senator gave us his own answer in his own mental attitude when he said that the spirit and the letter of the law are one and the same. I could then understand that he would not believe anything until he saw it right in his hand. He is an intense realist. I do not criticize him for that. But Senators are capable of seeing purposes. They are capable of interpreting legislation. They are capable of reading the President's message and giving to it its obvious meaning; and if the Senator wishes to dismiss all that by saying that all that is just "spooks" in our minds, we simply cannot do anything about it. We will let him have his own judgment about that. But when he told me I was seeing spooks, I wish to say to him that I did not consider that a very overpowering argument.

He said Congress has the power in the letter of the Constitution, and that the letter and the spirit of the Constitution are the same. While this colloquy appears in the RECORD, I want to read it again. It is the colloquy between the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY] and the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. LOGAN]. In substance it is as follows:

Mr. O'MAHONEY. So any act of Congress in the letter of the Constitution would be in the spirit of the Constitution?

Mr. LOGAN. Yes.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Then, if Congress should refuse to appropriate for judges or for the President that would be within the spirit of the Constitution?

Mr. LOGAN. Absolutely; yes.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. So Congress could strike down the other two branches of the Government and that would be within the spirit of the Constitution?

Mr. LOGAN. Yes.

That ends the colloquy. There are times when silence is golden. I do not think the Senator from Kentucky could have meant that. I would defend him against his worst enemy if he said that the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. LOGAN] said it. But it is in the RECORD and it is in the argument. That is how far the advocates of the measure are reduced in order to sustain their course.

I dwell sometimes by the sea, and I see little boats spring leaks, and the occupants go to the pumps, and the pumps are not sufficient; and then they make all haste for shore, and the boats are either beached or sunk. Perhaps finally a boat is beached in the shallows. There it remains, a wreck, and the kindly waves come at last and wash it away. I think the little ship of the Senator's argument lies on the beach, and I hope the kindly waves will soon erase it from our sight.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BAILEY. I yield.

Mr. CLARK. Is the Senator willing to explain to the Senate what leads him to believe that this boat even reached the beach and did not sink in the deep water of the Senator's oratory?

Mr. BAILEY. I do not think that would quite carry out what I had in mind. If it had sunk beneath the waves, we would see it no more; but we do see it. Here it is in the RECORD. It is just on the beach; and we, as friends of his, hope the day will come when the kindly waves shall break up the poor wreck and wash it away, and none of us will remember.

The Senator from Kentucky made it quite clear that he desires a different court because the majority of the court is not agreed with the Senator. Is not that a good reason? But he said, "I had felt for some time there was something wrong with the Court. I had been feeling that. I had been reading these opinions. I could not agree with them." Now, that would be a country for you. That is a constitution. A Senator did not agree with the Court. There was something wrong with the Court—nothing wrong with the Senator.

Then he made that great appeal to the loyalty to the President, and he painted a picture which we ought never to forget. I thought he would break my heart. [Laughter in the galleries.] It was difficult to withhold my tears as he told us that "Cassius" WHEELER and "Brutus" O'MAHONEY [laughter in the galleries] had broken the President's heart. I know I felt as if I must in some way be a party to it, and it hurt my feelings very badly. I was moved to tears, but I had some thoughts that relieved me. I remembered Jefferson Island. [Laughter.] It was a merry picnic. I remembered Jefferson Island; and if that was a heartbroken picnic, then I should like to have that sort of picnic all the remainder of my life. We had a great time there.

We are not going to tell you about it. I am just going to tell you that as our President sat under the mulberry tree we could hear the laughter all over the premises. The island is some 56 acres in extent. I see a Member of the House sitting here smiling. I think he heard the laughter. That comforted me some more; but I took another thought about it. I was still bowed down with this idea of our "Cassius" and our "Brutus", of this broken heart. It did not sit well with me. I felt uncomfortable, notwithstanding our Jefferson Island and those happy reminiscences.

Then I went out to the ball game that afternoon—that very afternoon. When the band played, the flag went up. There he was, this man, in the very hour when Mark Antony—"Mark Antony" LOGAN, of Kentucky [laughter]—was moaning in the market place, moaning and would not be comforted—he was going merrily to the ball game, and he enjoyed it, and I enjoyed it, and I was comforted.

But what shall we do for our "Mark Antony"? There is no Cleopatra to console him. [Laughter.]

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HATCH in the chair). The Senator will suspend for a moment.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I am compelled to move the Chair to stop the expressions we have just heard coming from the galleries, but particularly to instruct those in charge of the galleries concerning the regulations of the Senate, in order that the speeches of Senators may not be interfered with by these unnecessary, and, I may add, these uncalled-for demonstrations.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will remind the occupants of the galleries that they are here as guests of the Senate. The rules of the Senate forbid any demonstration or noise whatever to be made in the galleries. The rules must be obeyed. The same rules apply, as the Chair understands, to the Senators on the floor.

The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY] has the floor.

Mr. BAILEY. And then, Mr. President, the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. GUFFEY] elevated himself to the moral heights of Jonathan Edwards, and preached to the Chief Justice of the United States a lofty sermon on politics. With the evangelistic fervor of Dwight Moody or Billy Sunday, he proclaimed the gospel of purity in the Court. We have a new mentor of the Supreme Court. Well, we need a proctor, and we have a man highly qualified for that position, I think. We ought to have somebody down there to keep the Court out of politics.

And what did the Senator from Pennsylvania have against the Court? The Court held the Guffey Coal Act unconstitutional. He did not like that a bit. The Court had disagreed with the distinguished junior Senator from Pennsylvania.

Now, what about the Guffey Coal Act? There was not a Justice on the bench who said the Guffey Coal Act was constitutional. It is said that the decision was by a divided Court. It was a divided decision on the phase as presented; but half the act was not passed on, and Mr. Justice Cardozo, in his dissenting opinion, specifically said that he was not passing upon that. He was not acquiescing, not consenting, either way; and because the Supreme Court of the United States differs with the junior Senator from Pennsylvania, we must reform the Court.

There is the new apostle of reform in America. Not a word did he say about the great Chief Justice; not a word about this honored man; not a word about a Chief Justice who has been Governor, who has been Secretary of State, who has been Associate Justice, who has been Chief Justice; not a word about the great man who led the progressive movement in the Commonwealth of New York; not a word about his exalted character; not a word about his learning; not a word about his long experience; not a word about his capacity.

The Chief Justice of the United States is not pleasing to the distinguished Senator from Pennsylvania; the Chief Justice does not reach up to the Senator's moral standard of a Justice of the Supreme Court.

And there is the junior Senator from Indiana [Mr. MINTON], who, as I gathered from his argument, held that the Supreme Court had never been right from John Marshall to this day; that it had always been wrong; that John Marshall was wrong and Taney was wrong and Waite was wrong.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BAILEY. Yes; for a question.

Mr. MINTON. I know the Senator wants to be accurate.

Mr. BAILEY. Yes.

Mr. MINTON. Will the Senator point to some place in the RECORD where I made the statement which he attributed to me?

Mr. BAILEY. Yes; I am coming to it right now.

Mr. MINTON. I do not think the Senator can do it.

Mr. BAILEY. The Senator relied on Munn against Illinois and the Minnesota Rate case.

Mr. MINTON. Will the Senator point where in my remarks I said a word about Munn against Illinois and the Minnesota Rate case?

Mr. BAILEY. I thought the Senator did.

Mr. MINTON. The Senator is entirely mistaken. He is just wrong. I challenge him now to look into the RECORD and point to it.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, may I venture to suggest and ask the Senator from North Carolina if he has not fallen into error? Was it not, possibly, the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. LOGAN] who cited those two cases?

Mr. BAILEY. As I recall, in the responses of the Senator from Indiana to questions, he complained of the court for changing its decision as between Munn against Illinois and the Minnesota Rate case. There was a modification with respect to the application of the commerce clause and the due process of law clause. Am I wrong about that?

Mr. MINTON. The Senator is entirely wrong if he said I cited it.

Mr. BAILEY. I do not desire to do the Senator an injustice on any point, and if I mistook what the Senator from Kentucky said in the colloquy for what the Senator from Indiana said, if I understood that my friend the junior Senator from Indiana was discussing those cases when, as a matter of fact, it was the Senator from Kentucky, that was a lapse for which I beg his pardon, and I withdraw the remark, and I am glad to make the correction.

I thought the Senator from Indiana mentioned the Adkins case, but probably that was also the Senator from Kentucky. At any rate, the Senator from Indiana did, as I specifically recall, undertake to read the mind of the Chief Justice in its operation upon the mind of the Associate Justice, Mr. Roberts.

Herein the Senator, with the acumen of a Sherlock Holmes, sees the Chief Justice seducing Mr. Justice Roberts and having him swing over this way and that way in the Court and in his judicial operations. He painted, not quite with the power of a Goethe but rather vigorously, a sort of picture of Mephistopheles Hughes seducing Faustus Roberts! I think I am sure about that. So I gathered from the Senator that he very heartily disagreed with the Court, and disagreeing, he wanted to alter it and get some more men on the Supreme Bench with whom he would agree.

Mr. President, let me say at this point that the Senate is not the judge of the Court; Senators are not the judges of Justices. We have here no power of review; we have our views on the Constitution; we have our views on our powers; but when the Court declares the Constitution we must accept the declaration; otherwise, we put ourselves above the Court. I fear, Mr. President, that when we assume to pass our judgment upon the Justices and their decisions, granting that we have a right to have differing views but no right to enforce them, that when we set ourselves up to be judges of the Court and of the Justices, we suffer a total and tragic loss of perspective.

Then I come finally in reply to these arguments to the argument of our leader, the senior Senator from Arkansas

[Mr. ROBINSON]. It was he who said that men will get old and men will hang on. Well, Mr. President, that is true; but I have never thought of that as a calamity or an affliction to the race. I have always thought there was a place in life, domestic and national, for the old men. Men do get old; the time comes to us all when "the keepers of the house shall tremble" and "the almont tree shall blossom", and we seem to take on the habiliments of men who are moving from this earthly city to a better and heavenly city. I have thought that that was a good thing. It is a great thing to have old men in the world. It is a great thing to have old men in the Senate.

We have been taught through the ages to honor gray hairs, and not without reason. The young man or the man in middle life, tempted by ambition, seduced by greed and selfishness, in love with life, surrounded with all the temptations of existence, has his place, but it is not the ultimate place of trust. The old man, with the shadows of this temporal world falling upon him and the light of another coming, knows that whatever may be here is not here for him and not here for long. To whom else shall I look for disinterestedness? To whom else shall I look for a clear head? To whom for the lessons of long life? To whom else shall I look when I do not want selfishness or worldliness or ambition to come between me and my cause?

So far from being a disqualification for judges, old age is its best qualification. It is in the breast of the man whom years have separated from the transient affairs of this life and all its temptations that justice may be had when it cannot be had from any other type of mortal man.

I will say for the Senator from Arkansas, who made that remark, that I could wish that he may never grow old; but my wish would be vain. I am hoping, however, that when he does grow old in public life there will not be those to complain of his years or to make them a pretext for his removal. Whether here or elsewhere, whatever place of honor he may occupy, should someone rise to make such an attack upon him, to touch him with disqualification on that account, if I shall be here he shall have one defender, and I will not remind him that when he was younger, notwithstanding he made the utterance, it did not occur to him that in the swift processes of the years for him also "the almond tree shall blossom."

What else did he say? He said that he thought that the Court had usurped legislative power; but he did not state it as a fact. He had the thought that the Court had trespassed upon legislative powers; but he did not make the accusation.

I want to bring this to a point. If there is evidence of that, the thing to do in a situation as grave as this is to bring it forward upon the evidence and not upon opinion. No man lives for whose opinion I have greater respect than I have for our senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON]. His opinion is important, but his opinion on that matter is not important enough to justify even him in undertaking to change the character or the number of the Court. Let him look at the facts. Let him show us where the trespass has been. If it has been anywhere it was in the N. R. A. or the A. A. A. or the T. V. A. or the Guffey Coal case or the Humphreys case.

There are the cases and they are the background of all this legislation. The decisions in those cases are the things which caused and provoked this situation. I challenge the Senator from Arkansas, and I do not hesitate to say to him as an accomplished legislator and a great debater that the burden of proof is upon him who asserts that proposition. He cannot ask Senators to support it upon the basis of opinion. Let him produce the facts.

I do not think the Court trespassed. I was sorry about some of the decisions because they were disappointments to many American people. I do not think the Court trespassed in the N. R. A. case. I do not think the Court trespassed in the Guffey Coal case. I thought the Court went just as far as the Court could go to sustain us in the T. V. A. case, saying we could build dams as much as we pleased across navigable rivers and we could sell power. I did not think the Court went beyond bounds in the A. A. A. case. The Court said the power to control agriculture was in the States. Was that new? Every Supreme Court, from the foundation of the Government to the present time, has had the same view.

I wish to make my point, and the point is perfectly clear, that if this proposed legislation is to be based upon that theory, the theory must not rest upon the opinion of the senior Senator from Arkansas. The evidence must be clear. The evidence must be produced. The evidence must be sufficient to convince the Senators who vote for the legislation if they are going to vote for it upon that basis.

I am placing the burden of proof upon the senior Senator from Arkansas and, of course, I have the right to do it. It is an affirmation upon his part. It may be the major premise upon which proponents of the bill depend for the passage of the proposed legislation. Very well. Let them come into the Chamber of the Senate, discuss the cases, and let us see what was said and what was done.

In the meantime the criticisms by Senators of the Justices of the Supreme Court challenge and invite comparison.

When Senators criticize an opinion of the Court they have a right to do it, and it is probably a good thing for them to do it. But when a Senator criticizes the Court he invites me to compare his knowledge, his experience, his disinterestedness, his capacity, his scholarship, his length of service, with theirs. It will not do for Senators just to walk around the Senate Chamber and say, "We enacted this legislation and the Court found it unconstitutional, so we will get rid of them. We do not agree with them."

Who are we that we should agree or disagree? I am not saying Senators are not capable, but I am saying that when I criticize an opinion of the Supreme Court I hope it will be said of me that I read the briefs, that I read the arguments, that I studied the legislation, that I studied the opinions, and that I reached my conclusion, and if I am sustained, I take it it will have to be said for me also that I am the equal of the Court.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. NEELY in the chair). Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Vermont?

Mr. BAILEY. I am glad to yield.

Mr. AUSTIN. Assuming that claim was well established—in other words, taking it in the light most favorable to the claimants—assuming that the Court had exercised a power of legislation, I ask the Senator if it is then the duty or even the privilege of the Senate of the United States to favor a bill which would add a sufficient number of judges to the bench whose economic predilections were in another direction, in order to have the Court legislate another way?

Mr. BAILEY. Oh, no. If the Court abuses its powers, if the Court is arbitrary, if the Court is willful, if the Court is corrupt, there is a remedy. The remedy is not to increase the Court. The remedy is not to add Justices agreeable to us. The remedy is to take from the Court the Justices who are unworthy of their office. No one is here saying that any of them is unworthy.

We are not judges of the judges! The Senate is not a court of review. There is here no judicial power.

Mr. President, I contend finally that the enactment of the proposed legislation under the circumstances, in view of the motive avowed, would compromise the independence of the judiciary, would tend to destroy public confidence in our system of justice. I should like to discuss that point, but I must be brief about it in the interest of my own energy and in the interest of the time of the Senate.

THE INDEPENDENCE OF THE JUDICIARY

I think many of our people understand the significance and the value of the independence of the judiciary. I have sometimes thought this controversy would be worth all it has cost and infinitely more in that it would impress upon millions in America the value of that independence. How did it originate? How did we come by it? It came very simply, just about 315 or 320 years ago. We all remember the story of James I, King of England, and Lord Chief Justice Coke and the other justices in the council. A case was pending before the justices which involved the King's prerogative. The King demanded of the court that the court should consult with the King and take advice from him before it reached a decision in any case concerning the prerogative of the King.

The lord chief justice was sent for. He was confronted with the then attorney general, the great Bacon, the meanest and the ablest of men. The King said, "My Lord Chief Justice, do you not consider that you and your court should advise with me before you pass judgments on matters involving my prerogative?" The Lord Chief Justice said, "No, Your Majesty. It is the duty of the court to find the law within the court."

The King said, "But, My Lord Chief Justice, I am a man of reason, and I am as capable of finding the right and the law as the judges are." The lord chief justice said, "No, Your Majesty; you have many accomplishments, you are a noble man, but you have not the training of a judge. You have not the long experience of a judge. These matters must be left to men in the cloister of the judiciary."

The King replied, "But you put me under the court, and that is high treason." The courageous lord chief justice replied, "No, Your Majesty," and he quoted the words of Bracton:

Rex non debet esse sub homine, sed sub Deo et lege, quia lex facit regem. The king is under no man, yet he is in subjection to God and to the law, for the law makes the king.

As a result, the king took charge of the court; he threw out the Lord Chief Justice. And what followed? Why, the darkest pages in modern English history—the star chamber, and the Bloody Jeffreys, and the prisons. Men like John Bunyan and William Penn and many another of whom the world was not worthy went their way to dungeons. Some were never to return.

And what followed? There are compensations. There followed at length the Cromwellian revolution, in which the people of England named a lord protector and threw out the King, and even beheaded him. What followed? Out of the resentment and revulsion against that process, and the impositions of king-controlled courts, there came the second bill—the Bill of Rights of Charles II, the Act of Settlement, the life tenure of judges, and the independence of the Judiciary.

And what more? Why, from all of England in the first half of the seventeenth century, from 1616 even to 1680, under those persecutions—religious persecutions, personal persecutions, persecutions for debt—men and women of England fled the land and across the Atlantic—Pilgrim and Puritan, cavalier and gentleman adventurer—over here to the New World.

Roger Williams, the Baptist, of the number, and Lord Calvert, the Catholic, more responsible for religious liberty and religious toleration than any other two men who ever lived, fled to this new land, fled from star chambers, fled from Bloody Jeffreys, flet from king-controlled courts, fled from persecution, fled to America, and fled for liberty, and they and others of like spirit made this Republic.

That is the rock out of which we are hewn. That is the rock on which the independence of the judiciary is founded. That is the rock out of which the living waters of the Constitution of the United States flow. They came. They established the independence of the judiciary here. They gave it to their Congress to keep, not to destroy.

God helping us, when we shall have finished here, it shall be said that our courts are independent; that justice is free in America; that its fountain is unpolluted; that hither may come our children after us, as our fathers came before us, secure in the sense that justice shall be done though the heavens fall.

Mr. President, our cause is holy. It is the holy cause of justice in the Republic. We will not yield. You are dealing with devoted men.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I desire to discuss the pending question; but before doing so I wish to make a privileged motion.

There is lying upon the desk of the Vice President the conference report on the appropriation bill providing for flood control and the civil activities of the War Department. I move the consideration of the conference report, which has heretofore been submitted by me.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Which conference report does the Senator desire to have considered?

Mr. COPELAND. The conference report on the bill making appropriations for civil functions of the War Department, which bill includes $100,000,000 for flood control. It is a privileged matter.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New York moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the conference report on House bill 7493.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, has the conference report been read?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It has been.

Mr. BARKLEY. Then, pending the motion of the Senator from New York, I ask unanimous consent that if the conference report is taken up for consideration, a vote shall be had upon it not later than the hour of 3:30 o'clock this afternoon.

Mr. McNARY. I object to that request.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that if the motion is agreed to, a final vote shall be had upon the conference report not later than the hour of 4:30 o'clock this afternoon.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. McNARY. I object to that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Oregon objects.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, the motion to take up the conference report is not debatable, as I understand.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is not debatable.

Mr. COPELAND. I withdraw the motion, because there would be no virtue in taking up the report unless we could have final action upon it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New York withdraws the motion.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. CLARK. Did I correctly understand the Chair to rule that a conference report is not debatable?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. A motion to take up a conference report is not debatable.

The Senator from New York is recognized.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, without rancor or intemperate language, it is my desire to discuss the pending business, the bill proposing to reorganize the judiciary.

Mr. GERRY. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If the Senator from New York yields for that purpose, he will have made one speech.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I am very much obliged to my colleague from Rhode Island; but I dare say Senators will be in and out of the Chamber a good many times before I shall have completed my remarks. Therefore, it may not be important to have a quorum called at this time; but I thank the Senator for his courtesy.

It may be a trite saying, but it is worthy of all acceptation, that the courts represent the cornerstone or the keystone of our liberties. Washington spoke of the judicial system as the "chief pillar" of our Government. One of the complaints against George III was that he had made judges dependent on his will alone for the tenure of their offices, for the amount and payment of their salaries. Whether by tradition, inheritance, or instinct, the fact is that thoughtful persons in all our history have looked upon the courts as the custodians of their liberties. They are in resentment when any effort is made to change the judicial system.

Personally, I feel very strongly on the subject. To my mind, every American has a vital interest in the conduct of the courts, high and low. One of the greatest problems of municipal administration is the guaranty of untrammeled, honest, intelligent, independent courts. The municipal courts, the police courts, the magistrate's courts, and certainly the criminal and civil courts, must be above reproach if the rights of the people are to be preserved. Good government rests upon the courts.

When the proposal for a change in the Federal judiciary was presented there was an immediate uprising on the part of millions of our citizens. Personally, I received more than 100,000 letters—think of it, Mr. President; more than 100,000 letters—from my own constituents, and am continuing to receive such letters, protesting against the plan to pack the Court. Not in all the years I have been in the Senate have I had such a volume of correspondence as I have received in connection with this proposal. The majority of these letters came from women, most of them living in humble homes. It is too common a thing for those who are advocating the reorganization of the Court to say that it is the "economic royalists" who are opposing the plan. I have no contact with the economic royalists and do not know what they are doing. But I do know that the protests I have had from my State come from persons and groups actuated by the highest and purest motives, patriotism and devotion to our country.

Sometimes good comes out of evil. That may well be the case in this instance, as I see it. Millions of our citizens of this generation have been aroused to declare loudly what they always believed, but never before had occasion to assert. They have had no previous need to think about what the Court really means to our citizenry. Just as we accept mother love without definite thought of how precious it is, we have basked in the sunshine of a court-protected land without formulating our feelings regarding it. But when the attack came there rose up a vast multitude of indignant and protesting men and women, each and every one demanding that the scheme be defeated at all costs. Usually well poised and quiet, all were instantly wrathful over an undreamed-of assault upon the citizens' first and last defense against exploitation and injustice.

I must assume, of course, that the Senator who advocates this plan is sincere, and that he is acting in harmony with a conscience as clear as mine could possibly be. But I must remind him that the first attack in every country where the existing order has been overthrown, whether in recent years or in historical times, started with an assault upon the courts. When James II sought to impose his will upon Parliament and upon the English people, he proposed to set aside the Test Act. This was the law which necessitated the taking of an oath of allegiance to English tradition, and was regarded by the King as inimical to his own plans. I shall speak of this later at greater length. It is enough now to say that the first thing James did was to dismiss four judges who refused to submit to him, and then appoint four of his own choosing. I do not say the pending Court proposal is founded on evil-mindedness, as it was in the case of King James. Regardless of intent, however, the scheme is exactly in accord with that undertaken 250 years ago. If this plan should succeed it would mean that our country would be at the mercy of the Congress, which in turn might well be subservient to the President.

Let us see if we can figure out what that would mean. While it may be considered unlikely, there might be elected a Congress which would pass laws prohibiting the organization of patriotic societies. It might be that the Knights of Columbus, the Christian and Hebrew associations, the colored organizations, and church societies, as we understand them and know them, would exist under penalty of the law.

There is nothing fantastic about this statement regarding religion. Do we not know of countries across the seas where such restrictions are placed upon the people? We regard to the privilege of worshiping God as a fundamental right. Do Senators know of a country, heretofore counted as civilized, where that right is denied? Of course they do.

I do not for a moment contend that those who advocate the Court reorganization have any such purpose in mind. But were a program such as the one we are resisting to succeed, it would lay the foundation for what a future dictator might seize upon as his chief reliance.

The United States Supreme Court has been the safeguard of the minorities in America. It has resisted every attempt to impose dictatorial demands upon the individual and group. It has sustained, against every effort to destroy this or that feature of it, the Bill of Rights, in which we glory, and which is the shield of our salvation.

For myself, I am unwilling that my children and grandchildren shall be forced to live in an America which is foreign to the customs and practices this generation has had handed down to it from the fathers of the Republic. I want them to live in the sort of world that has been good to me. I should feel that I had fallen short of my obligation and responsibility unless I should continue to maintain the stand I have taken.

Not since the War between the States have the American people been so stirred as they are today. The pending proposal regarded by its opponents as a scheme to "pack" the Court has excited the Nation. It is regarded as an attack upon America's magna carta, the Constitution.

The President, eager to complete his New Deal program for social reform, to achieve more liberal labor and agricultural laws, and an almost revolutionary reorganization of government, is unwilling to accept what he regards as too slow, the constitutional method of accomplishing his purpose. He seeks to add members to the Supreme Court; he does this, he says, in order that it "may function in accord with modern necessities."

A recent writer has said, "The Supreme Court of the United States is the supremest court in all the world." But it has fallen on evil days.

Several of its recent decisions were quite generally unpopular. No one can question that great disappointment and, in some quarters, bitter resentment, followed the verdicts of the Court. I should not be candid if I did not acknowledge my own chagrin over the invalidation of the minimum-wage law of my State.

When one feels that something he regarded as vital to human happiness, health, and economic well-being has been destroyed it is natural to be resentful and even bitingly critical of those who might be considered the agents of such destruction. To erect a long-desired building and to have pride in its completion is one thing; to awaken some morning to find the structure in ruins is quite another. The poignancy of the loss causes the owner to overlook the facts that bad judgment in the location of the building and insufficiency of its foundations and the defective timber in its framework were the real reasons for the disaster.

Changing the court to increase a ruler's power is a practice familiar to the students of history. This political maneuver does not necessarily take the form of adding numbers to an independent bench. Sometimes it is easier to accomplish a given end by subtracting from the membership of the court, or subtracting first and then adding.

James II of England, as I have said already, determined to gain ascendency by enlarging the army and making it subservient to his will by appointing officers who would be governed by his doctrines. He announced that he would grant commissions regardless of the Test Act, a law which necessitated the taking of an oath of allegiance to English tradition and regarded by the King as inimical to himself. The officers having been appointed, Parliament demanded the recall of the illegal commissions.

James determined to obtain from the judges what legally he could not get otherwise. To do this he remodeled the bench, dismissing four judges who refused to lend themselves to his scheme. These were replaced by complaisant substistitutes. By the high-handed procedure of packing the court he accomplished his purpose.

In these days we are hearing much of "reprisals" and what will happen to Senators and Representatives who oppose the White House. I have heard the subject discussed this morning on the floor of the Senate. But there is really nothing new about such threats. Things were the same in 1687; one official after another who refused to follow the King was dismissed. James was determined to have a compliant Parliament. His cry was: "I am King; I will be obeyed!" He called on the electors to choose such members as would bring to a successful end the policy he had begun.

It is comforting to know that the demands of James came to naught. In the words of John Richard Green, the Oxford historian:

> The jury had been packed; the judges were mere tools of the Crown; but judges and jury were alike overawed by the indignation of the people at large.

In the end James was forsaken by everybody. As a result of his own acts he lost the throne.

Mr. President, to attempt to bend the courts to the will of one man, no matter how great or well-beloved, will always be resisted by a free people. It makes no difference, either, whether the plans he has in mind are quite generally approved by the majority of citizens. In the present crisis there is no division of thought as to the importance of new laws to meet new conditions. This is my own view, and, in my opinion, it is the consensus of many in the Senate. But it is unthinkable that unconstitutional laws should be declared constitutional by ravishing the Court. That the high mortality of New Deal laws may have seemed to be the direct and deliberate action of an unfriendly Court was to the uninformed a natural conclusion. This belief was endorsed when from the White House came a sneer about the "horse-and-buggy age" of judicial action, and the "fireside" and other "chats" alluded to a long list of desired national improvements impliedly impossible because of the attitude of the judiciary.

The truth is that most of these laws were sloppily written by inexperienced officeholders and warranted the fate that overtook them in the Supreme Court.

Many of us loyal Democrats who supported the platform upon which we were elected to office voted against some of these laws. We voted against them in the exercise of our own conscientious convictions because we believed they either violated the Constitution of the land or violated the pledges in our party platforms.

Our attitude in the years since the great Democratic victory of 1932 has been duplicated by the New Deal administration. Indeed, the President of the United States has on one occasion, at least, boasted that he has often "voted for Republicans" for public office. Four years ago the New Deal administration secretly blessed and endowed what it named the "Recovery Party" in the municipal election in New York City. It was, indeed, the "Recovery Party"—the recovery for the radical element the political control of that great metropolitan city. It went into an unholy alliance with the Republicans of New York City to elect the man who is now the nominee of the Communists for mayor.

Let me say in passing, however, that I have only the highest personal respect and real affection for Mayor LaGuardia. I am not reflecting upon him. I am merely stating a historical truth.

What I say is intended to make clear that no honest-to-goodness Democrat, with a capital "D", has anything to fear as to party regularity if he opposes such features of the administration's program as run counter to his own conscientious beliefs. In the actions of the administration in the New York campaign there is full exculpation for what we on this side of the aisle may do with the Court-packing scheme.

It may not be amiss to say that all the indications point to a repetition of the blunder of 1933 in the New York election. Apparently the White House would rather have its pet mayor reelected than to help the Democrats to save New York City now, New York State next year, and the 47 electoral votes of New York for a Democratic President in 1940.

Why were so many of the New Deal laws held unconstitutional? The country may be uncertain, but we Members of Congress know why.

Heretofore it has been the practice of the Congress to prepare its own bills and legislative proposals. A group, including some of the brilliant lawyers of Congress, would spend days, weeks, and even months in perfecting a measure. We have able men in the office of the Legislative Counsel, employed by the Government for this purpose, who study and analyze and perfect proposed legislation. I doubt if any bill of importance ever failed to have such labor spent upon it. To my personal knowledge, one such bill had 2 years of study by experts.

What has been the procedure since March 4, 1933? Almost every bill of alleged or conceded importance has been fed into the legislative hopper by the administration. Congress has been told, in effect, "to sign on the dotted line." With infinitesimal debate, as compared with previous times, such bills have been enacted and sent to the White House.

Some day a statistical expert will study the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD to see the amount of time spent in debate upon the various bills studied by the Congress. He will, for example, take the first Frazier-Lemke farm bill and compare the space given to it with that given to the McNary-Haugen farm bill.

No wonder the Supreme Court could find no excuse for validating many of the acts of the past 5 years! I have no complaint to offer for the early months of this administration. The Nation was in a desperate plight then; time was the essence. We might and did make mistakes, but haste was essential, and error could be excused. But there is no such excuse now.

I asked a friend high up in administrative circles who wrote the judiciary reform bill. I thought I knew, but I desired to have his answer. The "juvenile mentalities", was his reply.

Not wise, experienced, informed persons were consulted and depended upon to advise in sincerity and truth. The "boys" of the administration, the "juvenile mentalities", did the work. As a matter of course, it was perhaps submitted to those in responsible positions, but not until the bill was completed, the last "t" crossed, and the last period placed.

What a commentary on legislation! Is that the way to prepare bills for the Congress to enact into law? Are Senators going to vote for a measure the original of which was concocted in the manner I have indicated, even if allegedly improved by a substitute prepared by Members of this body? Surely not, when it comes to be appreciated that the substitute is even worse than the original screed of the "juvenile mentalities."

As I have sat mute in my chair, I have wondered why the President has neglected to consult men in this Chamber. There are dozens in the House, too, who would gladly have helped him. Why has the White House not been the council place for men such as ROBINSON, KING, HARRISON, GEORGE, ASHURST, GLASS, WALSH, LEWIS, OVERTON, BURKE, BAILEY, LOGAN, great lawyers or economists. There are Republicans across the aisle, such as BORAH, JOHNSON, WHITE, MCNARY, AUSTIN, every one a student of the Constitution and of public affairs—not one of these honest, patriotic Americans would have rejected an invitation to assist in the formulation of needed legislation.

There is no partisanship when it comes to the national need. It was not seemly, in my judgment, to trust the formulation of laws to men spoken of by my friend as "juvenile mentalities", when there were able, qualified constitutional lawyers in this body, who, regardless of politics, would have gone at the invitation of the President to assist in the formulation of wise laws.

Why were they not asked? Why were unknown and untried men, able and studious and intelligent as they may be, handed the problem of what to do with a distressed country?

No wonder the Supreme Court, reluctantly and no doubt unhappily, was forced to declare certain measures unconstitutional. I read with understanding what Mr. Justice Brandeis said in rendering the opinion in the case involving the second Frazier-Lemke bill. He recited the imperfections of the original law. These imperfections necessitated the Court through him, a great liberal, to declare it unconstitutional, which it did by unanimous vote. It was restudied, and, when reintroduced, Congress went over the later bill carefully in its efforts to make it valid. When it reached the Court, that tribunal "after a full and free discussion, concluded that the bill enacted was free from the objectionable features which had been fatal to the original act."

But, in spite of this careful process on the part of the Congress, the Justices inquired whether the new act was perfect in phraseology, for example, in the section affecting the mortgagor's right to possession.

Even now—

Mr. Justice Brandeis said—it is lacking in clarity.

Let me quote:

* * * Since the act is not free from doubt * * * we are justified in seeking enlightenment from reports of congressional committees and explanations given on the floor of the House and Senate by those in charge of the measure.

He was convinced by this examination that, regardless of lack of clarity in draftsmanship, the intent of Congress was clearly set forth in such manner as to make the law constitutional. So the unanimous decision against the original act was turned into a unanimous approval of the later act.

Mr. President, when left to itself—and no one knows it better than does the present occupant of the chair (the President pro tempore in the chair)—the Congress does study carefully all phases of a bill, particularly with reference to its constitutionality. Too much legislation during the past 4 years has been forced upon the Congress with a plea for immediate enactment, unchanged in form. It is not astonishing that such bills, when enacted into law, have met judicial disapproval. It would have been far more astonishing had they been endorsed by the Court.

In words that the man in the street will understand, there has been too much "passing the buck" to the Supreme Court. The Justices cannot put into a law what was not written there; they cannot take from a law those features that make it unconstitutional. They must deal with it as it is presented to the Court.

The President may honestly think that his failure to obtain his whole program is the fault of the Court. With some knowledge of how his bills were prepared, and with considerable knowledge of how they were passed through Congress, candor compels me to say it is a matter of amazement to me that the constitutional mortality rate has not been higher.

It is not too late now to save the Democratic Party. Is it not worth saving? Jefferson and Jackson, Cleveland and Wilson strove to establish and preserve the democracy. They built something that those of us who love the Democratic Party wish to preserve.

Those ancestors of ours, forbears in the faith, would not be happy that the old name has been abandoned. Now the administration is not known as a Democratic administration; it is rarely if ever referred to by its chief figure as a Democratic administration. It is known of all men as the New Deal administration.

Are the four great Democrats I have mentioned relegated to oblivion? Are we no longer to point with pride to their administrations? What are they, and what are we here in Congress who have fought the battles of the Democracy? Are we put on notice that we are no longer members of the dominant party? Are we to be read out of existence or left to wander in the political desert? Just what is our place?

I recall the landslides of 1932 and later which swept the foundations from under the Republican Party and carried many Democrats from northern and western States into this body. There was rejoicing then. Rejoicing where? In the Democratic Party. We were wined and dined, invited everywhere as party heroes.

We stand here now, as then, devoted to the cause of the Democracy. We have not changed; those who have taken possession of our organization are the men who have changed. It has become heretical even to suggest that administration proposals may be unwise.

Does any man in his right mind imagine that to create a chasm in the middle of the dominant party is safe and sane politics? Is it imagined that those of us who claim by inheritance, right, and possession the privileges of being Democrats are going to lie down and die? Are we so few in number and our views so unworthy of attention that we can be disregarded?

Do not fool yourselves, my dear brethren; we, too, have our place in the sun. We shall be here when some of the coat-tail riders of yesterday have been forgotten.

The Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] stated cold truths when he spoke here on Friday. Let those who tremble and cringe at the mere mention of the lash bear in mind that thoughtful men and women in every State have marked you for political destruction. The "Indian sign" is on many a Senator who supports this bill.

If there be those here who prefer to be Democrats, let them stand up and declare the faith. Are you Democrats with the courage of Jackson and Cleveland, and the idealism of Jefferson and Wilson, or are you deaf and blind followers of what in the beginning was an administration of strength and noble purposes, but which is becoming so weighted with debt and promises that only God in His mercy can save it?

Let me warn the members of what was once a united and invincible party that disaster is not far ahead of us. Who is going to pay a debt of forty thousand million dollars? Who is going to provide the funds to continue giving 60 percent of the farmers of America an average of $165 per annum? Who is going to finance the care of a half-dozen million persons now on relief? Who is to end the increasingly complex war between labor groups on the one hand and between capital and labor on the other?

I wonder how many citizens of America, fine, upstanding citizens, in spite of the fact that they have no wealth and their names are not on the tax rolls, realize that they are taxed? When a rich man is taxed he does not go out to the apple orchard to the seventh row by the fourth tree and dig up a box of gold. When he is taxed he increases his rents, the cost of food, and the cost of other commodities. Is there any family in America that is not touched now by the rapidly increasing cost of living? I hold in my hand a very interesting article written by that great economist, John T. Flynn. It is headed "Small Income Taxpayers Found Facing New Levies." I read from the article, as follows:

"THEY SHOULD LEARN HOW TO SQUAWK", FLYNN WRITES, CITING $3,637,000,000 CONTRIBUTION TO FEDERAL INCOME VIA SALES AND MISCELLANEOUS IMPOSTS

The so-called little fellow who thinks he does not pay taxes and who enjoys the illusion that it is the big fellow who is being soaked may get some surprises out of the following facts:

Last year he, the little fellow mostly, paid $352,000,000 in sales taxes to the States alone. He paid $652,000,000 in gasoline taxes, which are sales taxes. He paid also $155,000,000 in liquor sales taxes, chiefly on beer.

That makes, all together, $1,159,000,000 he paid in sales taxes on these items. There are others, such as selective taxes on tobacco, levied in 17 States. In addition to that he paid around $2,000,000,000 in internal-revenue taxes and another $478,000,000 in processing taxes to the Federal Government—all of which are in reality sales taxes.

Here is a little total of $3,637,000,000, and the greater part of this—almost all of it—came out of the pockets of people of small or moderate incomes.

Of course, these figures do not include the taxes levied by municipalities.

Mr. President, how are we going to get away from these problems? Our national debt will soon be $40,000,000,000. I can recall when this country first had a billion-dollar Congress, and Speaker Reed said, "It is a billion-dollar country." The coming year it will be a billion-dollar-interest-paying country.

It is a matter of concern not alone to those who are accounted rich, but it is a matter of concern to every poor family in America. With reprisals and big sticks are we to be forced into a continuance of support of measures which are more and more indicative of their failure so far as solving these problems is concerned?

Mr. President, this is not time for a fight. This is not a time for party dissension. This is not a time for interparty dissension. This is a time when our country needs unity as it never did before.

Let no man boast of the future. It looks black to me; but what is worse, it looks black to millions of Americans, many of whom call and regard themselves as Democrats.

This is the time when the White House, with the aid of House leaders and such Senators as I have mentioned, should counsel together, not with the silly thought of reprisals but of new plans, new unity, new enthusiasm, and new courage. Mr. Roosevelt has it within his power at this very moment to reunite his followers and to reestablish the Democratic Party.

Doubtless someone else might better say these things, but in a sense the President of the United States is my constituent, as I have been happy to be his. Perhaps, as one New Yorker to another, as one immediate neighbor to another, it may not be amiss for me to speak from the heart. I should hesitate, even so, were it not for the fact that hundreds of New Yorkers, loyal Democrats, men and women, who are enthusiastic supporters of President Roosevelt, have urged me to speak in this way.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SHEPPARD in the chair). Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. LEWIS. May I at this time, in view of his statement that the President could do such and such to bring about harmony in certain directions, ask what the Senator would suggest? What does he think would be appropriate and possible to be done by the President?

Mr. COPELAND. I have already made suggestions, and I repeat them. I would suggest to the President that he call into council the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS], the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY], the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE], and other Senators from our side of the Chamber, the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON], the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MCNARY], and other Senators on the other side of the Chamber, and let them share the responsibility of formulating a plan for the relief of our country.

May I say to the President of the United States, my good friend——

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Arizona?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. ASHURST. If the President should see fit to call Senators into council for such a purpose, the list, no matter of whom composed, would be deficient, in my judgment, if it did not include the able senior Senator from New York. If the President should call upon him, what would be the Senator's advice and suggestion for our country's further and complete recovery? What would he do? What would he advise the President to do?

Mr. COPELAND. I would say to the President, "Drop the court proposal." [Laughter.] "Leave it to the Congress to formulate legislation."

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, will the Senator further yield?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. ASHURST. With all the Senator's humanitarian impulses and splendid service to humanity, he offers, with the silver of 60 years crowning his temples, the advice of negation. Negation never won a victory. Negation never succored a starving person. Negation never gave aid to anybody.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. President, I rise to a point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. The Senator from Arizona is distinctly out of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. He has desisted. The Senator from New York will proceed.

Mr. ASHURST. I apologize for being out of order. I realize a shock like that hurts, and that is the only way to avoid the force of it.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I am very much obliged to the Senator from Arizona for the question he has asked, but I insist that my colleagues here who have the ear of the President should urge upon him not to press too heavily upon the patience and good will and the readiness to serve of the very considerable group in this body who are Democrats in every sense of the word. The President still has it in his power to retain the friendship and respect of good Democrats who are on their way to being aggrieved in the spirit and permanently estranged from him.

I would, if I were in his place, place upon this body equal responsibility with himself in establishing a fiscal policy for the speedy solution of what otherwise may become an impossible problem. The President is not the legislative branch of the Government; it is for us to enact the laws. The President is not the judicial branch of the Government; it is for the judges to pass upon our acts. I beg the President to be the President, the leader of the great majority of American population. Most earnestly I beseech him to meet us half way in our endeavor to be useful public servants. If that is the doctrine of negation, I am mistaken in my convictions regarding it.

The Court proposal is an astonishing one. Indeed, to me it is astounding. Let us brush aside the specious argument that the courts are overworked and their calendars are in arrears, because that charge has been definitely disproved. The bald truth reveals that many of the proponents of the President's plan have proclaimed that the real purpose is to bend the will of the Court. By the scheme of adding from one to six judges at the pleasure of the President, the intent is to reorganize the Court so that laws already declared unconstitutional will be reconsidered and by fiat—by fiat, mind you—declared to be constitutional. No informed person disputes it.

When the protests against the decisions of the Court began to be formulated, one of the first criticisms related to the right of the Court to invalidate an act of Congress. Even in circles looked upon as authoritative it was claimed that no power can be found in the Constitution for setting aside the will of Congress and the President. Here, for example, is the concluding paragraph of a magazine article I recently read:

> It is clear, therefore, from the records of the Convention of 1787, that the founders of the United States Government refused in the Constitutional Convention to give to the judiciary the power to set aside acts passed by the National Legislature.

This statement is anything but true. If we are to go to the bottom of the question, however, we must locate the place in the scheme of government that the fathers assigned to the Supreme Court. To determine what the Constitution means, we must pry out from the records of the Convention their real intent. A century and a half having passed, how can reliable testimony as to the facts be adduced?

As I see it, the procedure must be as follows:

We must study the meager records of the Constitutional Convention, read the letters of those who participated, examine the decisions of the Court rendered while most or some of the delegates still lived, and analyze the Constitution itself.

While the Convention had been called to meet in Philadelphia on the 14th of May 1787, a quorum of States did not appear until the 25th. It was not until May 29 that consideration was given to the real purposes of the Convention. On that date Edmund Randolph, to quote the record, "opened the main business." After commenting on the difficulties of the national crisis and pointing out the lamentable weaknesses of the existing Federal system, he presented a series of resolutions, the remedy proposed by Virginia, in which State the idea of the Convention originated.

I think it is well for us to review our knowledge of the Constitution and the events of the Convention. It will be recalled that on May 29, 1787, Mr. Randolph presented what I have spoken of as the Virginia plan or resolutions. I find here two of these, the eighth and ninth, which relate to the subject in hand. Taking first the ninth, which, of course, is familiar to all Members of the Senate, we find that it reads as follows:

> Resolved, That a national judiciary be established to consist of one or more supreme tribunals, * * * to hold their offices during good behavior; and to receive punctually at stated times fixed compensation for their services, in which no increase or diminution shall be made so as to affect the persons actually in office at the time of such increase or diminution.

Many of the resolutions presented by Mr. Randolph suffered disaster, but this particular one came through practically unscathed. Almost no debate centered about it; and what we learn of the attitude of the delegates toward the judiciary really attaches to the discussions over another of the Virginia resolutions, no. 8, proposing a "council of revision."

In the debate over this question I have been quite surprised that so little has been said of this particular one of Randolph's resolutions. As a matter of fact, a great deal has been said which indicates a confusion of mind on the part of those who have quoted from the council of revision resolutions, indicating that the speakers thought what they said related to the provision for the Court itself. Of course, that is not the case.

Now, let me read resolution no. 8, because it needs to be read and studied, and the debate attached to it needs to be considered in order that we may have an accurate idea of what the delegates had in mind regarding this particular part of the Constitution.

The eighth of Randolph's resolutions reads as follows:

Resolved, That the Executive and a convenient number of the national judiciary ought to compose a council of revision with authority to examine every act of the National Legislature before it shall operate, and every act of a particular legislature before a negative thereon shall be final; and that the dissent of the said council shall amount to a rejection, unless the act of the National Legislature be again passed, or that of a particular legislature be again negatived by ——— of the members of each branch.

The number of members was not determined.

This plan, as will be seen, called for what might be called advisory opinions by the Supreme Court. It did not meet with favor; but, as a matter of fact, it did come in for much discussion and repeated debate.

From the very opening of the convention the delegates appear to have accepted the idea of one supreme and all-powerful judicial body, to be the expositor of the laws, and absolutely independent of the other branches of government. As I shall indicate, it was the deliberate intent of the founders, as I see it, to confer on the judiciary an efficient and complete check upon the executive and the legislative.

There has been much loose talk about the relationship of the judiciary to the other branches of the Government. As I view it, it never was intended that the executive or the legislative should have any check upon the judiciary. The purpose of the Court is to protect the people against the executive and against the legislative. The power of the Court is the power of public opinion. As has been said, the Supreme Court has neither purse nor sword. There have been few times when there was any lack of willingness on the part of the people to accept and abide by the Court decisions. As I view it, nothing could be more fatal to the welfare of the people than to have the Court in the slightest degree subservient to the views of the President or the Congress.

The founding fathers gave our judicial tribunal a unique position among the courts of the world. The Constitution safeguards the personnel and functions of the Court. The judges are nominated by the President. They must be confirmed by the Senate. The convention took the greatest care to make certain that the Court should be independent in every sense. Its members hold office during good behavior. If that means anything, it means that they are appointed for life. They cannot be gotten rid of except by impeachment for misconduct. Their salaries are not to be tampered with during their continuance in office. In every imaginable way the delegates to the convention sought to make the judiciary independent and safe against interference.

Mr. President, I hold in my hand a speech which will be of interest to the present occupant of the chair (Mr. SHEPPARD in the chair). It is an address delivered before the American Bar Association at Salt Lake City, Utah, on August 17, 1915. It is an address made by the Honorable Joseph W. Bailey, of Texas. Someone handed me the address this morning. I regret that I have not had time to read it all, but, naturally, I turned to the conclusion of the speech to find how Senator Bailey, of Texas, summed up the matter which he had presented in his rather lengthy address. This is what he said:

I do not underestimate the force of the argument against vesting in one department of the Government an authority to annul what another department has done; but I consent to that as the lesser of two evils. We must leave Congress the exclusive judge of its own powers, or else confide the right of final judgment on its acts to our courts; and whatever may be the objections to judicial control, they are infinitely less than the objections to legislative omnipotence. Since we must have a final judge, that power can be more safely confided to the Court than to the Congress, for it cannot be an invidious comparison to say that, in average ability, the Supreme Court of the United States is at least equal to the Congress of the United States; and, as the judges of that Court have devoted their lives to a diligent and uninterrupted study of the Constitution and laws of their country, they must know better how to judge between them. They are far removed from those political passions and prejudices which make the preservation of a free government the most stupendous task of all ages; they have no patronage with which to reward their followers, and no partisans to sustain them, right or wrong; they have no interest except in common with their countrymen, and no ambition except to leave behind them an honored name. Of all men in this world they have the least temptation to do wrong and the greatest incentive to do right. They are not infallible and they make their mistakes, but they make fewer mistakes than other men; and so long as they can guard the Constitution of this Republic, it will protect the lives, the liberty, and the property of the American people.

How could words be chosen better to express the dignity, the honesty, the integrity, and, so far as humanly possible, the infallibility of the courts?

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield for a question.

Mr. BONE. Because the matter has been so stressed in the debate, I should like to ask the Senator whether he thinks that in itself life tenure of office makes for a better government. The particular point, that life tenure of office in this Government makes for purity of motive, uprightness of character, rectitude, and decency in the discharge of the duties of office, has been stressed in the debate, and I wonder whether the Senator agrees with that philosophy.

Mr. COPELAND. I shall be glad to answer the question of the Senator, for I know he asks it in good faith.

Regarding judges, I assume that there was great eagerness on the part of the Constitutional Convention to make sure that they would be independent of all external forces. I am frank to say—and the Senator knows I would not wish to make any statement which was not frank—that if I had my way I would have an amendment to the Constitution placing a limitation on the ages of those on the bench.

Mr. BONE. What about the tenure of office of judges?

Mr. COPELAND. One reason why I am so excited, if I may use that word, or so earnest about the pending bill is that I have great fear regarding all of the courts of our country. It would be unwise for me, it would not be politic, to say the least, to be too specific. But I served as a member of the committee appointed by the Senate to study crime. Our late colleague, Senator Murphy, of Iowa, was a member of the committee, and the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] was and is a member of the committee.

In order to gain something worth while with a view to the recommendation of legislation, our committee held hearings in different sections of the country. We had two or three hearings in New York; we had hearings in Detroit, Chicago, and in Washington.

Mr. President, what impressed me, second in importance perhaps, to the conclusion which came to my mind was that America needs a very thorough fumigation of the courts. Of course, I am speaking largely of the criminal courts. I do not care what the court is, whether it is the Supreme Court of the United States or a magistrate's court or a police court, every court should be a free, independent court, made up of men of the highest integrity, men who are unapproachable, men whose honesty and decency are above question.

I have long thought about how courts ought to be constituted. I have not been so presumptuous as to consider how the Supreme Court of the United States should be organized, but I have been interested in the State and county and municipal courts, wondering how it can be possible to get men to hold up the hands of the police officers and other peace officers to make certain that even-handed justice is rendered in every case.

I am not keen about filling the prisons in our country with convicts, but I am keen that every man who goes into court, whether he be a rich man or a poor man, a beggar man or a thief, shall have attention and care and an even-handed administration of justice on the part of the court.

I think that all the great countries of the world have determined that life tenure, or at least a tenure which reaches into advanced age, is the best and safest plan upon which to proceed.

I was interested this morning in a colloquy on the floor of the Senate between the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY] and the Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER]. The Senator from Florida asked the Senator from North Carolina whether the members of the highest court in North Carolina were elected or appointed.

I do not know that it makes much difference. I remember sitting in a conference in Albany, N. Y. I am told that it is customary everywhere, immediately preceding a political convention, to have a few of the leaders in ponderous manner discuss what shall be the platform to be adopted by the convention and just how to balance the ticket in order to reach all elements. I do not need to enlarge upon that to the Senator from Washington. That is a virtue which reaches to the Pacific coast, as it flourishes also upon the Atlantic coast.

I believe the "game" of politics, I would say the "science" of politics, is practiced and applied about the same everywhere. I do not know how in the world I happened to get into the conference at Albany to which I have referred, because I probably know as little about practical politics as any man ever elected to the Congress of the United States. But I was there, and we got along very well with the resolutions, the platform arrangements. We had no especial difficulty deciding who should be nominated for Governor, and attorney general, and secretary of state, and so forth; and then we got down to the chief justice of the court of appeals—or, I should have said, we got up to the chief justice of the court of appeals. I have never spoken of it before, but I am glad to speak of it now. My friend, Hon. Alfred E. Smith, who was then Governor of the State, presided at this gathering of a dozen people. When it came to that office, the Governor said, "We can play all the politics we like regarding the rest of the ticket, but let us choose wisely here, because the Democratic Party of the State of New York can make no mistake, as it would make a mistake if it selected a judge for the highest court who was chosen merely because of his political influence. Here must be a man", the Governor said, "who is above reproach, and who will pass upon the law as we would wish God himself to pass upon our acts on the day of judgment." And out of that gathering came the selection of Mr. Justice Cardozo, now a member of the Supreme Court of the United States. Let it be said that Mr. Cardozo was chosen by unanimous vote of the group. Certain names were mentioned of men of great capacity and ability, no doubt, but for one reason or another they were rejected, and out of our conference came the name of Mr. Justice Cardozo. There is not a man in this body who will say that that was not a 100-percent selection.

I do not know that it makes any difference whether judges be chosen by election or by appointment. A man will not long survive public opinion if he does not do his duty upon the bench. So I think I may say to my friend from Washington [Mr. BONE], warm-hearted and good as he is, that I do not care how they are chosen, because in the last analysis they will be well selected.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, I hope I am not intruding on the Senator. I do not want to divert him from his argument. However, I have listened here patiently and with great interest to the argument that life tenure in this particular branch of government is not only highly desirable but has worked well, because it has removed judges from pressure that otherwise might have taken them from the straight and narrow path of rectitude. If there is any virtue in that theory of government, would it not apply with equal force, and even with greater force, to the Congress of the United States if its Members, 531 in number, were all appointed for life, so that they, in turn, might be removed from the pressure of groups of people who want special privileges and who, by legislation, have actually gotten special privileges? If there be virtue in the argument of life tenure—and I highly disagree with it and think it is bad, that it is antipathetic to everything that is American—but if there be virtue in it, why would it not be much better to apply it to Congress, which votes the money and has its fingers on the purse strings?

There are Senators here, and I have heard them in this body, inveigh against the profligate, even wanton, expenditures of Congress. This might be obviated if Members of Congress were appointed for life and could thereby be removed from election which comes every 2 years or every 6 years. Is there not something in that suggestion?

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator from New York yield, so that I may ask a question of the Senator from Washington?

Mr. COPELAND. Yes; the Senator may ask a question.

Mr. KING. Does the Senator from Washington understand that the question is now before the Senate for consideration as to whether we shall amend the Constitution of the United States and condemn the work of the fathers, and provide by this bill, or by some other bill, judges of the Supreme Court shall be elected by direct vote of the people?

Mr. COPELAND. Let me answer——

Mr. BONE. I did not understand the Senator's question.

Mr. COPELAND. Just a minute. I do not want to get trapped here. I see "a man upon the stair", and I do not want to take any chances as to what he may do to me.

Mr. President, I would not favor a life tenure even for Senators. The Senator from Washington [Mr. BONE] will recall that that matter was discussed in the convention, and, as a matter of fact, almost everything under high heaven was discussed in the convention. However, the question was considered as to whether or not it would be well that Senators be appointed for life, and the argument against it, as I recall, was that if a Senator were appointed for life he would leave the golden shores of California and come here to Washington, where he would buy himself a beautiful home, and he would settle down here for life. Then he would be out of touch with his constituents—out of touch with the people. Naturally the suggestion was rejected.

I know that pretty soon the Senator from Washington is going to say, "Well, if what the Senator says is all right as to the Congress, why is it not all right with reference to the judges?" and I am going to anticipate that by replying to it pretty soon. But I think the plan we have for the selection of Members of Congress is a very wise one. Theoretically it brings into the Senate older men, more conservative men, while in the House, fresh from the people every 2 years comes a great group of enthusiastic Members who bring the latest news from the front. I like that. I do not want Members of the Congress to live in the "horse and buggy" age. I want them to know all about the Bonneville Dam, and the advantages of electric power to be sent out to the truck-garden owners, or plantation owners—owners of farms or ranches, or whatever they are called in that section of the world. I want them to be men of that type. Certainly the Congress of the United States in a sense is a great university. There are no pupils in it. They are all professors.

Mr. KING. Pseudo professors.

Mr. COPELAND. They come here and they are all professors. I always like to sit at the feet of my friend the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD]. He tells us about the needs of the farmers, particularly the cotton farmers. Then I listen to my friend from Delaware [Mr. TOWNSEND], and he tells me about how to grow apples and how to market apples. So I might call the roll of the Senate to indicate the members of the faculty and their specialties.

The next question the Senator from Washington [Mr. BONE] asked me was, If all this is good doctrine, so far as the Congress is concerned, why is it not good doctrine so far as the Court is concerned? I do not think it is the duty of the Court to be very much excited about the Bonneville Dam or apple culture or cotton raising.

It is the duty of the Court, of the learned men upon the bench, to take the law which has been passed by the Congress and signed by the President, put it alongside the Constitution and determine whether or not, in form and substance, it fits the yardstick or is properly measured by the yardstick or is in proper measurement after the application of the yardstick.

The life of a judge upon the Supreme Court is not so strenuous, so trying as is the life of a legislator. Whenever I think about reprisals and what may happen to me because of my heresy, I am never much worried about it. I have a library that I love, both the room and its contents. I shall be glad to be retired to my library where I may, in my declining years, apply myself to studies which might come to my hand, and be known, perhaps, as "the Sage of Suffern."

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield again?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield for a question.

Mr. BONE. I will make my statement in the form of a question. If the fact that the courts are cloistered and have life tenure of office is a protection against yielding to bursts of passion and prejudice such as has been attributed to legislative bodies by the Senator from North Carolina and other Senators who have spoken on this bill, does not the same logic apply to a legislative body, and is there not just as much force in the logic that if life tenure were given to legislative bodies in this country they, in turn, would cloister themselves, and they, in turn, would refuse to yield to bursts of public passion? Is it not a fair assumption that the same logic would apply to the same human beings?

Mr. COPELAND. No; I think not.

(At this point Mr. Chaffee, one of the reading clerks of the House of Representatives, appeared at the door with a message from that body.)

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senator from New York yield before he answers the question while the Senate receives a message from the House of Representatives?

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. Does it require unanimous consent for the Senator from New York to yield to receive a message from the House of Representatives?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It does not.

Mr. CLARK. Then I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri objects. The Clerk of the House will present the message when the Senator from New York shall have yielded and the point of order has been settled.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, a further parliamentary inquiry. Does the Chair consider that constitutional processes of government can be stopped by the declination of any Member of the Senate to refuse a Senator having the floor permission to yield for the reception of a message from the House of Representatives or from the President of the United States?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair rules that a Senator does have to yield for that purpose.

Mr. CLARK. Then let me ask——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Let the Chair finish his statement. And that when that shall happen and the determination of this question the message from the House of Representatives may be received.

Mr. CLARK. But is it the present ruling of the Chair that it is necessary for a Senator to yield or that unanimous consent be given him to yield in order for the Senate to receive a message from the House of Representatives or the President of the United States? There have been so many remarkable rulings made during the last few days that I should like to have a definite ruling on every subject.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The message may be received at the desk. It can be presented and lie on the table. It cannot be considered while the Senator from New York holds the floor. The message will be received at the desk.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. If the Chair will allow me, how can a message be received at the desk unless it shall be presented to the Senate?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The message may be presented to the Senate for the purpose of being received at the desk and lie on the table for future action.

Mr. CLARK. Without the Senator from New York yielding?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without the Senator yielding.

Mr. CLARK. Or without unanimous consent?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It can be done without unanimous consent.

Mr. CLARK. Then, that is a reversal of the preceding ruling of the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reversal, if any, is that no objection may be taken to such procedure. The Chair may have misunderstood the position of the Senator from Missouri. He thought he was referring to action on the message.

Mr. CLARK. I make the point of order that it cannot be done except by unanimous consent, and if unanimous consent shall be requested from any quarter, I object to it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will submit that to the Senate, if the point of order is made.

Mr. CLARK. Pending that, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Undoubtedly the Senator cannot suggest the absence of a quorum without the consent of the Senator from New York.

Mr. CLARK. I should like to be heard on that, for it is a question of the highest constitutional privilege.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. CLARK. I was propounding a parliamentary inquiry, or thought I was, and I had not concluded it. Will the Chair hear me for just a moment on that subject?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will hear the Senator.

Mr. CLARK. To say that it is not a matter of absolute right, a matter of the highest privilege for a message to be presented to the Senate from the House of Representatives or the President of the United States which might involve the very life of the Republic without the Senator who has the floor yielding the floor, seems to be a remarkable proposition.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will read the rule.

Mr. CLARK. If the Chair will indulge me just a moment further——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will.

Mr. CLARK. To say that that point cannot be raised, and that the presence of a quorum, a mere majority of the Members of this body, cannot be ascertained as to whether or not the Senate will receive a message from the House of Representatives and proceed to its high constitutional duty of passing on a veto message from the President of the United States, seems to me to be setting a precedent which might, on some occasion, absolutely paralyze every activity of this Republic.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will rule on one question at a time. Rule XXVIII provides as follows:

> Messages from the President of the United States or from the House of Representatives may be received at any stage of the proceedings, except while the Senate is dividing, or while the Journal is being read, or while a question of order or a motion to adjourn is pending.

Under that rule, the Chair holds that the message from the House of Representatives may be received, but not acted upon while the Senator from New York holds the floor.

Mr. CLARK. In that connection, so that I may make the point of order later, may I also call the attention of the Chair to the provisions of section 7, clause 2, of article I of the Constitution of the United States which reads:

Every bill which shall have passed the House of Representatives and the Senate, shall, before it become a law, be presented to the President of the United States; if he approve he shall sign it, but if not he shall return it, with his objections to that House in which it shall have originated, who shall enter the objections at large on their Journal, and proceed to reconsider it—

Proceed to reconsider it—

If after such reconsideration two-thirds of that House shall agree to pass the bill, it shall be sent, together with the objections, to the other House, by which it shall likewise be reconsidered, and if approved by two-thirds of that House, it shall become a law. But in all such cases the votes of both Houses shall be determined by yeas and nays, and the names of the persons voting for and against the bill shall be entered on the Journal of each House respectively—

And so forth.

Mr. President, it is my contention that it is a matter of the highest constitutional privilege to have a message delivered to the Senate from either the House of Representatives or the President of the United States; that such message having been received, the provisions of the Constitution become absolute as to the order of business; that it is the right of any Member of the Senate to insist upon the reception of a message from the House of Representatives having to do with a veto message from the President of the United States, and, without intervening business, that it is the privilege of any Member of the Senate to move that the Senate, on reconsideration, agree to pass the bill, the objections of the President of the United States to the contrary notwithstanding. Therefore, Mr. President, I raise the point of order on the ground of the highest constitutional privilege.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair has ruled that the message from the House of Representatives may be received. The clerk from the House of Representatives will deliver the message.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

The message from the House of Representatives was delivered by Mr. Chaffee, and informed the Senate that the House of Representatives having proceeded to reconsider the bill (H. R. 6763) to extend for one additional year the 3½-percent interest rate on certain Federal land-bank loans, to provide a 4-percent interest rate on such loans for the period July 1, 1938, to June 30, 1939, and to provide for a 4-percent interest rate on Land Bank Commissioner's loans for a period of 2 years, returned by the President of the United States, with his objections, to the House of Representatives, in which it originated, it was:

Resolved, That the said bill pass, two-thirds of the House of Representatives agreeing to pass the same.

The message announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7562) to encourage and promote the ownership of farm homes and to make the possession of such homes more secure, to provide for the general welfare of the United States, to provide additional credit facilities for agricultural development, and for other purposes.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, I desire to make a motion of the highest constitutional privilege.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. CLARK. I desire to make a motion of the highest constitutional privilege, and I make the point of order that I have the right to make it notwithstanding the fact——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New York has the floor. Does the Senator yield?

Mr. COPELAND. I could not fail to respect a matter of highest constitutional privilege.

Mr. CLARK. I make the motion and ask for the ruling of the Chair.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New York takes his own chances on yielding the floor.

Mr. CLARK. I demand a ruling of the Chair.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. BARKLEY. In the absence of a yielding of the floor by the Senator from New York for that purpose, can any Senator take him off his feet without his consent even to make a privileged motion?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. He cannot do so, except where there is a special rule to that effect. There is a special rule with regard to messages from the President of the United States and the House of Representatives and conference reports. That rule has been read. No other motions exist of which the Chair has any knowledge which come within that range, and if the Chair is in error he would be glad to be enlightened.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. CLARK. I was claiming the attention of the Chair when the Senator from Kentucky interrupted. May I make the motion, and will the Chair rule on it?

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I make the point of order that in the absence of the consent of the Senator from New York no Senator can take him off his feet by making a motion, whether the motion be a matter of privilege or not.

Mr. CLARK. I have not had the opportunity of presenting my motion. I should like to present the motion.

Mr. BARKLEY. I make the point of order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from New York yield for the purpose stated?

Mr. COPELAND. I do not yield for any purpose that will hazard my occupancy of the floor. I prize this place so highly for the moment that I decline to yield.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. CLARK. My parliamentary inquiry is, without reference to the wishes of the Senator from New York about yielding the floor, does not any Senator have the right to move that the Senate proceed to reconsideration of the bill referred to in the message just received from the House of Representatives, and to pass it, notwithstanding the objections of the President of the United States?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The present occupant of the chair is of the opinion that when a veto message comes to the House of Representatives and the House of Representatives, by a two-thirds vote, passes the bill, notwithstanding the objections of the President, and it comes to the United States Senate, it comes in its original form subject to reconsideration by the Senate, and if two-thirds of the Senators present and voting vote to pass the bill, notwithstanding the objections of the President, it passes as would any other bill. If there is any rule that makes it such a privileged motion as to take the Senator from New York off the floor, the Chair is not familiar with it.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, a further parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. CLARK. What effect does the Chair give to the provisions of section 7, article I, of the Constitution, which I have just read? In other words, it is my contention, if the Chair will indulge me a moment, that if the provisions of the Constitution be insisted on and regarded, no business can intervene from the time of the reception of the message notifying the Senate officially of the action of the House until it shall be disposed of.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. One of the provisions of the Constitution which must be taken into consideration in connection with every other provision is that the Congress may make its own rules of procedure. The Senate has made a rule of procedure with regard to what are called veto messages, and that is that on motion, just as in the case of any other bill, the Senate shall proceed to the consideration of the bill which has been vetoed. Having proceeded again to its consideration, if two-thirds of the Senators present and voting vote for it, it passes notwithstanding the President's objections. There is no privileged question in the rules of the Senate in regard to it of which the present occupant of the chair has any knowledge except rule XIX—a Senator cannot take a Senator off the floor to make a motion under that rule without his consent. Any Senator can move to take up the message from the House when he obtains the floor in his own right.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, I do not wish to cause the Chair to rule several times unnecessarily, but I think this is such a very important matter that it is not improper to ask the Chair to indulge discussion of the question.

The Constitution says, not the rule of the House, not the rule of the Senate, but the Constitution itself says when the President shall have returned to the House in which it originated a bill which is vetoed, that House shall enter the objections at large on its Journal and "proceed" to reconsider the bill.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. COPELAND. I want to ask if this proceeding is all parliamentary.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator does not have to yield for this purpose, and if the point of order should be made that he has made two speeches, the Chair would rule that he had done so.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, I make the point of order that all business is out of order until the veto message of the President has been considered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. CLARK. If the Chair wishes to be arbitrary, he has that privilege.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. KING. Does the Chair wish to rule that when he entertains a motion such as has been suggested by the Senator from Missouri, and the Chair permits him to present that motion, the Senator who has the floor thereby loses the floor? That, it seems to me, would be invoking the rule against honesty and decency and against fair consideration of the business of the Senate.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Just a minute. The Chair has not held that the motion may not be made to proceed to the consideration of the bill or any other bill if the Senator from New York yields for that purpose, but if the Senator from New York yields for that purpose he yields the floor. The Chair understood the Senator from New York to say that he would yield only for a question.

Mr. COPELAND. That is true, and I do not yield for even that now. [Laughter.]

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Therefore, the Senator from New York has the floor and declines to yield.

Mr. COPELAND. Very well.

Mr. President, while these are very pleasant diversions, really for once in my life I have the ambition to make a connected speech. I do not wish to yield to anyone except as a matter of courtesy when a question is asked, but I must contend that my duty to myself and to the cause which I feel I represent demands that I must go forward with my remarks.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, a point of order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state the point of order.

Mr. DAVIS. There is disorder in the Chamber. I demand order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Senators will be in order.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I have yielded only for the purpose of answering questions. I cannot yield for any other purpose.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. WHEELER. A parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. COPELAND. May I yield for that purpose?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator may yield for that purpose, of course.

Mr. WHEELER. If a motion is made to recess and the Senator speaks after that, would that constitute two speeches?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It would.

Mr. WHEELER. Will the Chair state what the difference would be between a motion to take a recess, being counted as interrupting the Senator's speech and he not being charged with having made two speeches, and a motion which is a privileged motion to take up a particular measure?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair would hold that if the Senator, at the request of anyone, desires to discontinue his speech for the purpose of a recess, it will be only a suspension of all procedure during the recess if it is so understood. It will only suspend the speech.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. CLARK. Suppose the Senator from New York should yield for a motion for a recess, and, while he had yielded for a motion for a recess, suppose a preferential motion to adjourn should be made. What then would be the Chair's ruling?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That the Senator from New York had terminated his speech.

Mr. CLARK. If the Senator from New York has a right to yield for a motion for a recess, and, having yielded for a motion for a recess, if a preferential motion for an adjournment should be made—which still can be disposed of by the Senate itself, thank God, without reference to the wishes of the Senator from New York or the Chair—would the Chair hold that that would take the Senator from New York off his feet?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. In the Chair's opinion, there is no doubt at all that if the Senator, by unanimous consent, should yield for a motion for a recess, with the agreement that his speech was suspended, a motion to adjourn would not be permissible under such an agreement. Of course, a motion to adjourn does take precedence over a motion to recess; but unless that were done by unanimous consent the Senator would lose the floor.

Mr. CLARK. The Senator from New York, let us say, to use an illustration, having yielded the floor without the formality of a unanimous-consent agreement, and having lost control of the floor so far as preferential motions were concerned, if a preferential motion to adjourn should be made would not the Senator from New York be as much entitled to resume the floor as he would if a simple request for a lesser motion—namely, for a recess, were made?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. When a Senator asks and obtains unanimous consent, the unanimous-consent agreement changes all the rules of the Senate, as the Chair understands. If any Senator asks and obtains unanimous consent that a Senator yield for a motion for a recess, in that event no motion to adjourn could be made under the unanimous-consent agreement, because the Senator would yield only for the purpose of a recess and with the understanding his speech should be only suspended.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I ask the Senator from New York if he will yield to me to make a privileged motion?

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, may I yield to the Senator for a privileged motion without losing the floor?

Mr. CLARK. Be certain about it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It depends upon whether or not it actually is a privileged motion.

Mr. BARKLEY. Will the Senator from New York, assuming that he may do so without losing the floor, yield to me to move a recess?

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, I make the point of order that under the ruling which the Chair has just made the Senator from New York may not yield the floor.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I will go on with my speech.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, it has been held——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator declines to yield.

Mr. COPELAND. Yes; I decline to yield to anybody.

Just as we were discussing this matter I observed here a statement made by Mr. Brooks Adams that—

> To me this opinion, like Taney's opinion in the Charles River Bridge case, indicates that the tension had reached the breaking point, the Court yielding in all directions at once.

Of course, Mr. President, I cannot do that under the rules. I can yield only in one direction.

Mr. President, I was replying to the very earnest and serious question of the Senator from Washington [Mr. BONE]. If he happens to have in his library Dean Alfange's new book The Supreme Court and the National Will, he will find, at pages 222 et seq. a discussion along the line of the one we had relative to the tenure of office of judges. I am not going to take the time of the Senate to read it, but it is a very interesting discussion of the possibility of political bias on the part of judges. I quote the following:

> But, while the Supreme Court is free from blind partisanship, there can be no doubt that political conviction plays an important part in determining its decisions.

Even though these men are impartial, this writer thinks political considerations actuate them to some extent.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President——

Mr. COPELAND. I yield for a question only.

Mr. BONE. I shall not transgress the rule. If judges are moved at all by political considerations, does not the danger become very much greater by virtue of the fact that they are in office for life and can be removed only by the tedious process of impeachment?

Mr. COPELAND. No, Mr. President; I should not think so.

Mr. BONE. Is not the danger much greater to the Republic?

Mr. COPELAND. I should say that a man who had a stated tenure, particularly if it were to terminate at so youthful an age as 70, we will say, might, in the language of the street, continue to keep up his political fences, if that expression is intelligible to the Senator from Washington.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. BARKLEY. If the Senate should take a recess now, the Senator from New York, having the floor and not having finished his speech, would he automatically have the floor upon the reconvening of the Senate tomorrow?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. He would not. He would be recognized by the Chair, but he would not automatically have a right to the floor.

Mr. BARKLEY. It is the same thing. In other words, he would be entitled to the floor, having been taken from the floor temporarily by a recess.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. He would have to be taken from the floor.

Mr. BARKLEY. No. The recess would suspend the speech, and leave——

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, is the Senator from Kentucky making a parliamentary inquiry or stating a ruling?

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, am I within my rights in this discussion? I want to be fully so. I do not yield to anything except something which enables me to be sure that on the morrow I shall be entitled to go on with this very interesting speech. [Laughter.]

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair takes that as a parliamentary inquiry. The Chair knows of no way by which the Senator may preserve his right to continue unless and except by unanimous consent. If he yields by unanimous consent for a motion for a recess with the understanding that he shall have the floor tomorrow, his speech will be simply suspended.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, let me make a parliamentary inquiry.

When the Senate recessed on yesterday, the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY] was in the midst of an address. When the Senate resumed today, he was again recognized to conclude his address. If there is any doubt about the right of the Senator from New York to resume tomorrow, I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate concludes its labors today it recess until 12 o'clock noon tomorrow, and that the Senator from New York then have the privilege of the floor.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, if the various rulings which the Chair has made within the past half hour were pursued to their logical conclusion, if there be any logical conclusion, the Senator from New York would have lost the floor on three or four occasions.

Mr. COPELAND. I do not want to do that.

Mr. CLARK. Would the Senator from Kentucky be willing to have included in his request for unanimous consent, and would the Senator from New York be willing to agree that the request of the Senator from Kentucky for unanimous consent be made to include the understanding that this is the first and not the second or third speech of the Senator from New York?

Mr. BARKLEY. I am willing to include in my request that the speech the Senator from New York is now making be regarded as his first speech, and that when he resumes tomorrow under the unanimous-consent agreement it still shall be a continuation of his first speech.

Mr. CLARK. I have no objection.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. COPELAND. I will yield for that purpose if I am assured by the Chair that it is in harmony with his view.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. By unanimous consent, any and all rules may be changed. The Chair holds that if the request for unanimous consent should be agreed to, the speech of the Senator would only be suspended until the convening of the Senate tomorrow, and it would be the same speech that he is making today.

Mr. BANKHEAD and Mr. McNARY addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Alabama.

Mr. BANKHEAD. A parliamentary inquiry. A conference report has just reached the Senate from the House. I was chairman of the conference committee, and I desire to find how I can get in on this unanimous-consent program. [Laughter.] I want to get some action; and I call on the Chair to tell me how I can get action on the conference report.

Mr. COPELAND. I do not yield for anything. [Laughter.]

Mr. BANKHEAD. The Senator is not losing the floor; that is understood.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is unable to advise the Senator as to the kind of action he should take.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I ask that the unanimous-consent request be amended by including the proposition that I be permitted to call up the conference report tomorrow morning.

Mr. McNARY and Mr. BARKLEY addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Oregon.

Mr. McNARY. I shall object to all unanimous-consent agreements which have been proposed, if I am not too late.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator is not too late.

Mr. McNARY. The ruling of the Chair is not novel. He has stated the practice of the Senate from immemorial time and by immemorial usage that when a Senator has the floor and a recess is taken the Senator is recognized the next day and goes forward with his speech. It is not necessary to ask unanimous consent for that privilege. That was the privilege accorded to the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY] last night, and is one which has been accorded to a thousand Senators during my service in the Senate. I think that is what the present occupant of the Chair intended to say. It is not asking for any new privilege; and when the Senate takes a recess, if the Senator from New York has the floor, tomorrow, by right, he can be recognized. But, of course, he could not remain in his seat indefinitely and claim the floor. Upon his recognition, he can then proceed.

With that knowledge of the rule, and knowing it will be applied tomorrow, I object to the pending request, and I object to the request suggested by the Senator from Alabama.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair may state the Chair will undoubtedly recognize the Senator from New York if he rises tomorrow after a recess. However, the Chair will not pass on the point of order as to whether or not the remarks of the Senator tomorrow will be his second speech.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President——

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I do not yield to anyone. I wish to get along with my speech now. [Laughter.]

Mr. BANKHEAD. How long?

Mr. COPELAND. I think I have answered rather fully the questions asked me by the Senator from Washington.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, may we have order?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Let there be order in the Senate.

Mr. COPELAND. In order to make the answer complete I wish to quote a little from the book to which I have referred. On page 222 the author says:

> But while the Supreme Court is free from blind partisanship—

In that respect the same as the Senate, I assume—> there can be no doubt that political conviction plays an important part in determining its decisions. The great constitutional issues are, in the last analysis, political issues, and a body which contributes so decisively to their settlement cannot remain above the battle. "The judges who will be called upon to pass upon the validity of National and State legislation", says Brooks Adams, summarizing Jefferson's case against judicial review, "will be plunged in the most heated of controversies, and in those controversies they cannot fail to be influenced by the same passions and prejudices which sway other men."

Mr. President, I am on my feet very unwillingly, and I would gladly yield the floor if I could preserve my right to go on with my speech; but so long as I have the floor, and the Chair is so insistent on the rule being enforced, will he not be kind enough to see that the rule of decorum is preserved?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate will be in order.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. COPELAND. For what purpose?

Mr. BARKLEY. Will the Senator yield to me to make a motion to recess, with the understanding that he shall be entitled to the floor when we meet tomorrow?

Mr. COPELAND. Is the Senator putting the question in parliamentary language? If not, I cannot yield to him.

Mr. BARKLEY. There is an interrogation point at the end of it.

Mr. COPELAND. I can yield to a question, I assume.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair has said there are three motions only which take precedence: First, a motion to take up a message from the President of the United States; second, a motion to take up a message from the House of Representatives; and, third, a motion to take up a conference report. It is perfectly plain. The rule says that when any one of these motions is made all other proceedings shall be suspended. Therefore a Senator speaking could yield for that purpose without losing the floor. No other motion can be made at the same time a Senator is speaking. If he yields for a motion to be made, he, of course, yields the floor for that purpose.

So far as the Senator from New York is concerned, the Chair has already stated that in the event of a recess the present occupant of the chair would recognize the natural and moral right of the Senator to the floor tomorrow and would recognize him. As to whether or not his remarks then would be interpreted as a second speech, that question does not arise now, and would not arise until a point of order were made. But certainly if the Senator took the floor tomorrow after a recess, it would be, at all events, only a second speech, and a point of order could not then be raised. If the Senator surrenders the floor by unanimous consent of the Senate to the effect that he shall not be considered as having lost the floor, but that his speech will simply be suspended and that he shall resume the floor and continue his speech tomorrow as a part of his speech today, it will be entirely in accordance with the rules of this body.

Mr. COPELAND. Suppose, then, Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that I may yield the floor, but resume it again tomorrow morning to continue my first speech, in order that the Senator from Kentucky may make a motion to recess?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator would be continuing his first speech tomorrow, if that were agreed to. Does the Senator make that request?

Mr. COPELAND. I ask unanimous consent.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator has made a request for unanimous consent. Is there objection?

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I desire to propound a parliamentary inquiry as to the effect of the ruling just made by the Chair. As I understand, the Chair now rules that a conference report is of higher privilege in this body than a constitutional motion to proceed to the consideration of a vetoed measure.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair has not so ruled.

Mr. CLARK. The Chair ruled a little while ago that the motion which I made to proceed to the consideration of the vetoed measure was not privileged, and that the Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND] could not yield the floor without losing the floor. Now, I understand the Presiding Officer to return to his ruling of a day or two ago, in which he said that a Senator holding the floor could yield for the consideration of such privileged matters as a conference report without losing the floor.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. With reference to a conference report, the rules contain an express provision that all proceedings shall be suspended in order that it may be considered.

Mr. CLARK. I am just trying to find out whether it is the ruling of the Chair that the provision of the Senate rules has higher precedence in this body than has the Constitution of the United States.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator knows that probably better than anybody else.

The Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND] has made a request for unanimous consent. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

RECESS

Mr. BARKLEY. I move that the Senate take a recess until 12 o'clock noon tomorrow.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 4 o'clock and 41 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until tomorrow, Wednesday, July 14, 1937, at 12 o'clock meridian.

Franklin Mott Gunther to be Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary of the United States to Rumania.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

TUESDAY, JULY 13, 1937

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Blessed be the name of the Lord our God, whose delight is in them that fear Him and put their trust in His mercy. We thank Thee for the infinite love revealed in the incomparable life and character of Thine only begotten Son. Help us, we pray Thee, our Father, to follow His example, that we may ennoble and dignify our daily conduct. Keep us very conscious of that joy which comes when His spirit hallows our industry and achievements. Bless all influences which inspire the arts of happiness and good will among men. Grant that the harmonies of union and concord may prevail throughout our country, and Thine shall be the praise. In the name of our Savior. Amen.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT

A message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the House by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Frazier, its legislative clerk, announced that the Senate disagrees to the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 707) entitled "An act for the relief of Lucille McClure", requests a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. BAILEY, Mr. LOGAN, and Mr. WHITE to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to speak for 2 minutes in order to propound an inquiry of the majority leader.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I understand there is a movement on foot to recess Congress the latter part of this week, for something like 2 weeks, and I have obtained this time to inquire of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. RAYBURN] if he can give us any information at this time on that proposition?

Mr. RAYBURN. I cannot. In response to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL] last week with reference to the matter as to whether we might reach a point in the proceedings where we could have an agreement to recess for 10 days or 2 weeks, I expressed the hope that we might reach a condition in legislative matters where we could do that; but, as was stated by the Speaker in his press conference, that was simply the expression of a hope. There has been no plan worked out to do anything like that this week.

Mr. RANKIN. Let me say to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. RAYBURN] that if any plan for a recess is worked out I hope that it will be withheld until at least two bills can be considered by the House; first, the veterans' bill now on the Speaker's desk, which I think we may be able to dispose of tomorrow, and also the Bonneville bill. The Rivers and Harbors Committee has been working on that measure for some time, and we will probably get a rule on it from the Committee on Rules tomorrow. This great project is now completed, and those of us who are in sympathy with it are very anxious to put it to work, and if there is any movement made for a recess for 2 weeks, or any time for over 3 days, I hope that it will be withheld until we can dispose of the Bonneville bill.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for a minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SNELL. I do this in order to inquire of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. RAYBURN] whether any progress has been made along the line we were talking about the other day, in respect to a recess?

Mr. RAYBURN. Not at this early date.

Mr. SNELL. I really wish something could be done along that line. It will meet with the approval of the country.

Mr. RANKIN. Let us first pass the Bonneville bill.

Mr. SNELL. That is a $50,000,000 proposition.

Mr. RANKIN. It was money well spent, if we will now put it to work for the American people. It is the beginning of a T. V. A. for the West.

JANITOR FOR COMMITTEE ON EDUCATION

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Speaker, I present a privileged report from the Committee on Accounts, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 274

Resolved, That until otherwise authorized by law there shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House of Representatives the sum of $1,260 per annum, payable monthly, as compensation to a janitor for the Committee on Education, to be appointed by the chairman of said committee.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, what committee is this?

Mr. WARREN. It is the Committee on Education. I think it is about the only committee in the House that does not have a janitor.

Mr. RANKIN. Oh, no.

Mr. WARREN. One of a very few.

Mr. RANKIN. Let me correct the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. SNELL. I desire to ask the gentleman from North Carolina a question about that.

Mr. WARREN. Very well.

Mr. SNELL. What reason is there at this time, after all these years, and just as Congress is nearly adjourned, to appoint a janitor to the Committee on Education? This committee has not had a meeting in 3 months. Has no bills before it or none on the calendar. What important matters has that committee before it that cannot be attended to by the regular members of the committee under the conditions that have existed for the last 50 years?

Mr. WARREN. In the first place, Mr. Speaker, this is a unanimous report from the Committee on Accounts, in which the minority members of the committee concur. Recently we have had a five-way shift in the chairmanships of the House. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. LARRABEE], who has been the chairman of the Committee on the Census, which committee has both a clerk and a janitor, gave up that committee and accepted the chairmanship of the Committee on Education, which committee has only a clerk and no janitor. I think it is generaly admitted that in recent years the work of the Committee on Education has become quite important and will become more so as years go on.

It is only a matter of fairness to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. LARRABEE] that this janitor be given to his committee.

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman answer another question?

Mr. WARREN. Certainly.

Mr. SNELL. Has the Committee on Education any bills on the calendar at the present time?

Mr. WARREN. I am unable to answer that question. I know that committee has been considering important legislation this entire session.

Mr. SNELL. It does not seem to me that because the chairmanship has been changed we should give him a janitor just on that account. He did not have to accept the chairmanship. It does not seem to me that is a real argument.

Mr. WARREN. I will say to the gentleman that that was not the reason.

Mr. SNELL. That is the reason the gentleman just gave.

Mr. WARREN. The reason I gave is that that committee is entitled to a janitor.

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman tell me why they are entitled to a janitor?

Mr. WARREN. It is in exactly the same class as about 15 other committees of the House that do have a janitor, and it is the only committee of its class in the House that does not have a janitor.

Mr. SNELL. The only committee in the House that does not have a janitor?

Mr. WARREN. Of its class.

Mr. SNELL. What does the gentleman mean by that?

Mr. WARREN. I mean those that have clerks carrying a salary of $2,760.

Mr. SNELL. With the statement of your own President that he is going to cut down the expenditures of this Government, it seems to me a foolish proposition to start in creating new jobs for janitors just as the Congress is about to adjourn.

Mr. WARREN. The gentleman knows I do not bring in resolutions creating new jobs, nor have I in the last 6 years.

Mr. SNELL. I know that, and that is why I am so greatly surprised at this time.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WARREN. I yield.

Mr. DONDERO. I know of no bill on the calendar from our Committee on Education.

Mr. WARREN. I did not say so.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WARREN. I yield.

Mr. RANKIN. I understand this employee, in addition to being janitor, is also messenger for the committee?

Mr. WARREN. That is correct.

Mr. RANKIN. What I want to call attention to is that the Veterans' Committee has no messenger and no janitor. The clerks on the Veterans' Committee do more work for other Members of Congress than the employees of any other committee in Congress.

Mr. WARREN. I suggest the gentleman from Mississippi refer that matter to the Committee on Accounts.

Mr. REES of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WARREN. I yield.

Mr. REES of Kansas. As a member of the Committee on Education, I am not informed that there are any bills pending before that committee at this time. I do not see any occasion whatsoever to employ a janitor or anybody else on behalf of that committee at this time.

Mr. WARREN. The gentleman knows there is a very important bill before that committee.

Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the resolution.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. WARREN) there were ayes 110 and noes 75.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that there is no quorum present and I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Two hundred and thirteen Members are present, not a quorum.

The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 235, nays 113, answered "present" 2, not voting 81, as follows:

ADDITIONAL JANITOR, COMMITTEE ON WAYS AND MEANS

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Speaker, I offer a privileged resolution from the Committee on Accounts and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 275

Resolved, That until otherwise authorized by law there shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House of Representatives the sum of $1,260 per annum, payable monthly, as compensation to an additional janitor to the Committee on Ways and Means to be appointed by the chairman of said committee: Provided, however, That the authorization and appropriation contained herein shall terminate whenever a vacancy occurs in the position now held by Harry Parker.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Speaker, 63 years ago a 12-year-old barefoot boy was found in the rotunda of the Capitol shining the boots of the Members of the House. He had come to town on the milk wagon from the Mount Vernon estate, where he and all of his forebears were born. His name was Harry Parker, and he had missed the return trip of the milk wagon. Since that time he has been working here in this building. We can well imagine that one of his courtly manner did come from the environs of Mount Vernon. There is a great fresco on the minority side of the House depicting Cornwallis treating for peace. Directly behind General Washington and one of his generals in that historic scene is a colored boy who was Washington's body servant, and who carried his name. The boy in that painting is the grandfather of Harry Parker.

After performing various duties here in the Capitol for 17 years Harry became the janitor of the Ways and Means Committee in 1891, when it was headed by the brilliant William L. Wilson, of West Virginia. For 46 years, beginning with Mr. Wilson and continuing under Nelson Dingley, of Maine; Sereno E. Payne, of New York; Oscar W. Underwood, of Alabama; Claude Kitchin, of North Carolina; Joseph W. Fordney, of Michigan; William R. Green, of Iowa; Willis N. Hawley, of Oregon; James W. Collier, of Mississippi; and Robert L. Doughton, of North Carolina, he has been the faithful and loyal attendant upon that great committee and his cheery smile has greeted thousands of Members and visitors during his 63 years of continuous service as an employee of the House of Representatives. I can properly term him here today as a Christian gentleman.

He says he is 75 years old. From my check-up I think he must be much older.

Mr. Speaker, Harry is tired. The old man is weary. He is "wore out." His feet hurt him. Now you have got to come from my section or from Georgia or Mississippi to know what it means when an old colored man's feet begin to always hurt him. He has walked countless miles around these corridors carrying important messages and documents and ministering to the committee he loves so much. Harry needs a rest, and who is there who would keep him from it in the fullness of his years?

He receives a salary of $130 per month. This resolution merely permits the Ways and Means Committee to have an assistant messenger and janitor at the rate of $105 per month, and when Harry passes on to his reward the position is terminated. It is distinctly understood that this shall not be construed to be any precedent.

He said to me this morning, "Boss, if you gemmuns do this, what in the world is going to happen to me away from all of you?"

And I said, "Harry, just hang around here and make yourself at home the rest of your life, for you are just as much a part of this institution as is the dome over this building." [Applause, the Members rising.]

Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. DOUGHTON].

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I have enjoyed and I appreciate very much the historic facts related by my colleague, the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Accounts relative to the lifelong, faithful, and efficient services of Harry Parker. I have been here quite a while myself as years are numbered. When I arrived in Washington one of the first persons with whom I became acquainted and by whose faithful and diligent services I became attracted was Harry Parker. I have been a member of the Committee on Ways and Means for more than 12 years, never dreaming at the time I was elected to that committee that I would ever have the honor of serving as its chairman. I have been chairman of the committee a little more than 4 years. As has been stated, Harry Parker has been messenger of that committee beginning simultaneously with the services of Chairman Wilson, of West Virginia.

This, Mr. Speaker, is an outstanding exception, an extraordinary exception; in fact, Harry Parker is an extraordinary character. He is one of the most faithful, diligent, and conscientious public servants with whom I have ever been acquainted or whom it has ever been my privilege to know.

Harry Parker is the most industrious, the most faithful, and the most active of all the employees connected with our committee. I arrive at my office each morning before the elevator starts, which is prior to 7:30 a. m. When I reach my office Harry is there, and he remains all day. I cannot get him to take a rest or a vacation. Harry has collapsed two or three times on account of the condition of his health. He is not able to continue to do the work that is required of his position.

Mr. Speaker, I hope the resolution will be unanimously adopted as a tribute to the long, faithful, and loyal service of one of the most faithful employees I have ever known around the Capitol.

I do not have at my command words to adequately express my feelings and my sentiments with regard to the services and the worth of this faithful employee. He is unable to live without his salary, therefore he cannot quit. But as my good friend the gentleman from North Carolina said, we want Harry to be at liberty and be at ease, so that he may come and go when he likes and have a sufficient amount of money to live on for the remainder of his days as a recognition and reward for his long and faithful service and an expression of the appreciation of this House of work well done and services faithfully performed and the fine example he has set that all public employees might profitably emulate.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY].

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, everything has been said that need be said in relation to Harry Parker by the two gentlemen from North Carolina. It so happens that I am the senior member of the Ways and Means Committee in point of service on either side of the aisle. I simply wish to add my word of appreciation for the many years of personal contact with Harry Parker and to say that from the days of Claude Kitchin, who was the first chairman I served under, the list as presented by the gentleman from North Carolina actually covers a service of over 20 years that some of the Members have known him and his willing service not only to the committee members but to all with whom he has been thrown in contact.

When I came to Congress, Harry was in his prime, although he had then been with the Congress a great many years. I am sure I voice the sentiments not only of my colleagues on the Republican side but every Member that has served on the Ways and Means Committee during the period to which the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WARREN] referred, and I am sure all Members are in hearty accord with the recognition that this House of Representatives is willing to make today to a faithful, not servant, but companion, one might almost say, in the personality of Harry.

As the gentleman from North Carolina so well stated, this establishes no precedent. Where will we find another that has continuously served this membership for 63 years as Harry has done? The reminiscences of his days with the leaders of Congress in times gone by could be made a volume of very great interest, because he has watched the proceedings of Congress, particularly the proceedings of the Ways and Means Committee, over a long period of years, and has learned his lesson of the events of the day thoroughly. I feel that we are doing ourselves credit when we make this slight recognition of the long, faithful, arduous, and thoroughly satisfactory service of one of the finest characters I have ever known in my public life. I therefore join with the gentleman from North Carolina in urging the adoption of the pending resolution. [Applause.]

Let me add the following as illustrative of the depth of character of this man and of his tender nature and gratitude. I think it is proper to recite to the House an incident that occurred at the time of Speaker Longworth's death in April 1931.

There was sincere affection between the late Speaker Longworth and Harry Parker. Harry felt Mr. Longworth's death very keenly; he had lost a real friend. Congress was not in session when the Speaker passed away. It had adjourned a month before, hence there was no opportunity for the House to pay tribute. The House Chamber was deserted and silent. But there was one who entered the empty Hall to do homage to his devoted friend. It was Harry Parker. With tears streaming down his ebony face and with a simple prayer upon his lips Harry laid upon the Speaker's rostrum where Mr. Longworth had presided over the House for three terms a spray of lovely American Beauty roses and the gavel used by the Speaker when performing his last official acts. A touching tribute, born of the love of a faithful colored servant with a white heart to a great and good man.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MITCHELL].

Mr. MITCHELL of Illinois. Mr. Speaker and Members of the House, to me this is a great occasion. We are about to pay honor and show proper recognition to a man of my race who has rendered unusual service to the Congress and to the Nation. Because of the unique and important place the Negro occupies in the American Nation, and because of the high-class service the Negro has rendered this Nation for more than 300 years, and which he continues to render, and because he is often overlooked on occasions of this kind, it is very significant that the Honorable LINDSAY WARREN, a Member of this House for many years, coming from the State of North Carolina, has introduced this resolution which provides for the care and comfort of Mr. Harry Parker, who has been in the service of various committees at this Capitol for more than 60 years.

He has rendered distinguished service and has shown himself to be worthy of the respect, the confidence, and the admiration of this great body of men, numbering many thousands, who have come to the House during his employment here. I cannot let the occasion pass over my head without adding my word to what has been said here in his behalf and in commendation of this splendid service which he has rendered. I wish to say that the just recognition which we are showing him will reflect itself in the lives of the young and old of my race who believe in just and proper recognition of all mankind regardless of race. In the step that we are about to take here today, we are simply doing for Mr. Harry Parker what George Washington did for the grandfather of Harry Parker about 140 years ago.

I brought here a section taken from George Washington's will bearing on the same thing and while it will take about 3 minutes for me to read it, I believe the Speaker and the House will bear with me so that I may read just what George Washington said about the very thing we are doing here.

I quote from the last will of President Washington:

> Upon the decease of my wife, it is my will and desire that all the slaves whom I hold in my own right shall receive their freedom. To emancipate them during her life would, though earnestly wished by me, be attended with such insuperable difficulties, on account of their intermixture by marriage with the dower Negroes, as to excite the most painful sensations, if not disagreeable consequences to the latter, while both descriptions are in the occupancy of the same proprietor; it not being in my power, under the tenure by which the dower Negroes are held to manumit them. And whereas among those who will receive freedom according to this devise, there may be some, who, from old age or bodily infirmities, and others, who on account of their infancy, will be unable to support themselves, it is my will and desire that all who come under the first and second description shall be comfortably clothed and fed by my heirs while they live; and such of the latter description as to have no parents living, or, if living are unable or unwilling to provide for them, shall be bound by the court until they shall arrive at the age of 25 years. * * * The Negroes thus bound are (by their masters or mistresses) to be taught to read and write, and to be brought up to some useful occupation. * * * And I do expressly forbid the sale or transportation out of the said Commonwealth of any slave I may die possessed of under any pretense whatsoever. And I do moreover most pointedly and most solemnly enjoin it upon my executors hereafter named, or the survivors of them, to see that this clause respecting slaves, and every part thereof, be religiously fulfilled at the epoch at which it is directed to take place, without evasion, neglect, or delay, after the crops which may be then on the ground are harvested, particularly as it affects the aged and infirm; seeing that a regular and permanent fund be established for their support, as long as there are any subjects requiring it; not trusting to the uncertain provision to be made by individuals. And to my mulatto man William, calling himself William Lee, I give immediate freedom, or, if he should prefer it (on account of the accidents which have befallen him, and which have rendered him incapable of walking, or of any active employment), to remain in the situation he now is, it shall be optional in him to do so; in either case, however, I allow him an annuity of $30 during his natural life, which shall be independent of the victuals and clothes he has been accustomed to receive, if he chooses the last alternative; but in full with his freedom, if he prefers the first; and this I give him as a testimony of my sense of his attachment to me, and for his faithful services during the Revolutionary War.

It is significant that George Washington, the Father of his Country, did for his disabled, incapacitated slaves just what we are proposing to do here for a descendant of George Washington's faithful Negro bodyguard. The Father of his Country, about 150 years ago, considered the debt of gratitude he owed his Negro slaves and made provision for their freedom at the death of his wife. At the same time he provided a pension for all of his disabled slaves at that time and for those who would be disabled at the death of his wife.

He realized that these people, though slaves, had made a large contribution to his own success. One of them particularly, William Lee by name, had gone with the general as his bodyguard through the Revolutionary War, had stood by him during his most critical hours, served and nourished him during his hours of illness, encouraged and prayed for him during hours of darkness and seemingly despair.

Washington would highly approve what the House of Representatives is doing today for a grandson of that Negro slave who went with him through the Revolutionary War and administered to his wants until the death of the general. This faithful man that we are honoring today is an exemplification of the fine traits shown in the character of Washington. He has served this Nation at this Capitol during the past 63 years and has rendered the highest type of service at all times. He has made thousands of friends by reason of his honesty, his faithfulness, his industry, and his sterling character. His life might well be an example for the young people of this age—both white and colored—because it is refreshing to pause for a moment and review the life of one who has rendered so many years of service to his fellow man and to his country, and has done so because of his love for his fellow man, his loyalty to his country, and his faithfulness to every trust.

During the long years that Harry Parker has been employed at this Capitol he has not been an eye servant; he has been efficient and faithful in every respect; and when I say he has been efficient I simply mean this: He has done the right thing in the right way at the right time without having to be told. What trait of success is more needed among our young today than that trait, so well illustrated in the life of this man we are honoring? I wish to congratulate the Honorable LINDSAY WARREN for bringing this resolution before the House providing for this recognition of the fine work done by my friend. I wish to congratulate the House for the fine spirit displayed here in honoring this man for the work he has done. I regard this as typical of the highest American spirit and ideal. I am happy, indeed, to have had this opportunity to say this word on this occasion, where such humane consideration is being shown a faithful and deserving member of my race. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JENKINS] and 1 minute to the gentleman from California [Mr. FORD].

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, to the long list of distinguished chairmen of the Ways and Means Committee under whom Mr. Parker worked, one was inadvertently omitted. I refer to Mr. William McKinley. I know that Mr. McKinley and Mr. Parker were very warm friends. Most great men—and Mr. McKinley was a most striking example—were very cordial to those who were closely associated with them. When Mr. McKinley was chairman of the Ways and Means Committee much of his work was done in what we now call the little Ways and Means room. And there it was he spent most of his spare time. Harry Parker had the privilege of waiting on this distinguished man, who was quite as distinguished in his courteous manner as in his statesmanship. Mr. McKinley and Harry had one thing in common besides their innate courtesy. It was that both were much inclined to be religious. Mr. McKinley was wont to read his Bible very frequently. When McKinley left the Congress he left his Bible in the Ways and Means room. Harry prized this Bible highly, and when I became a member of the Ways and Means Committee Harry presented this Bible to me. He did this, as he said, for he wanted McKinley's Bible to go to an Ohio member of the committee and to another Ohioan whom he considered to be his friend. It goes without saying that I appreciated this very much.

Probably no man added more luster to the distinguished position of chairman of this powerful committee than did Mr. McKinley. Position on this committee is a great honor. Although Ohio is one of the greatest States of the Union, and although it is one of the greatest Republican States of the Union, only four Republican Members from Ohio have held places on that great committee since the day of Mr. McKinley. Three of these were Gen. Charles H. Grosvenor, of Athens, Ohio; Speaker Nicholas Longworth, of Cincinnati; and Charles C. Kearns, of Amelia, Ohio.

However well all these great statesmen performed their work, however great was their fidelity to their duties, none of them performed his duty more conscientiously than did Harry Parker. His work was more menial than theirs. His name is not written in gold letters across the sky of national fame. But when fidelity is the text and when courtesy and kindness are given their proper consideration in computing the real worth of a man, Harry Parker will still be associated with men like McKinley and Underwood and Longworth. I am proud to say these few words in testimony of the worth of my friend Harry Parker. [Applause.]

Mr. FORD of California. Mr. Speaker, I think this occasion is one that will go down in the history of the House of Representatives as a day on which the House has shown a broad spirit of genuine humanity.

Every man who has come to this House and every member of the staff of the House of Representatives is conscious of the smile and the pleasing personality and the simple and genuine courtesy of manner which Harry Parker displays to everybody. It is a joy to meet him. It is a privilege to know him. May I say to the Members of the House that they have today as a body shown their great humanity in conferring upon him a distinction in recognizing his long, active, and faithful service.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the resolution. The Speaker demands a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 340, noes 0.

So the resolution was agreed to.

WILLIAM P. CONNERY, JR.

Mr. McGROARTY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 2 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. McGROARTY. Mr. Speaker, it is exactly in conformity with the fine thing which has just been done to remind the Members of the House of a tribute to be paid to a former Member of this House, no less a person than the gentleman from Massachusetts, the late Hon. WILLIAM P. CONNERY, Jr.

A committee of the House has arranged a memorial service, and notices were sent out to this effect. However, I find that many Members, for some reason or other, have not seen the notice. May I call to your attention that next Thursday morning, the day after tomorrow, at 9 o'clock, in St. Matthews Church, at Rhode Island Avenue and Seventeenth Street, there will be held a memorial service called "Month's Mind", because on Thursday Mr. CONNERY will have been dead 1 month. The committee would feel honored if every Member of the House would attend this service. The service begins at 9 o'clock and will be concluded in ample time for all Members to meet their 10 o'clock committee appointments or other appointments they may have at that hour.

Mr. Speaker, I thank you and the House for this opportunity to remind the Members of this occasion.

PUTTING THE BREADMAKERS OF THE UNITED STATES OUT OF BUSINESS

Mr. PLUMLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Vermont?

There was no objection.

Mr. PLUMLEY. Mr. Speaker, the Scriptures tell us that man cannot live by bread alone, but bread is now and always has been a very essential and necessary part of man's balanced or unbalanced diet. Do you realize that a very serious situation confronts the bread makers of the United States who live and do business along the Canadian border? Do you know that bread baked in Canada from Canadian flour comes into the United States duty free? Well, it does. Square this with the fact that Canadian wheat, lower in price than similar American wheat, if imported, would be subject to a duty of 42 cents a bushel. Think this over.

Talking about bread and wheat, I ask you seriously what justification is there for taxing the raw material and allowing the finished product to come in duty free? Yes; duty free. But—and here is the rub—if the United States bakers sold their bread in Canada, it would not be duty free in Canada; it would be subject to a duty or tax of nearly 50 percent; to be exact, a duty of 49.4 percent.

In this connection I would like to call attention to one provision of the so-called reciprocal-trade agreement with Canada negotiated not so long ago and which has had 1 year to run thus far. Therein one of the concessions given to the United States was that which reduced the tariff exacted by Canada upon bakery machinery and apparatus made in the United States by some 57 percent.

The result of this reduction in duty is shown in the figures which disclose that American-made bakery machinery and apparatus sales to Canada increased some 248 percent in 1936 over the year 1935.

So it seems to me that about the only notice the border bakers have had from their Government in recent years has been this move, whereby the latest and most efficient bakery machinery built in this country has been made available to the Canadian bakers at a price considerably below that which they heretofore have paid. It is not necessary for me to point out that the Canadian bakers, through the use of this more efficient machinery, thereby were enabled to occupy a more strategic position from the viewpoint of lowered costs of production, and also were enabled to increase the magnitude by which they could undersell our border bakers. That they have done so is attested to by the figures which show that during the first 4 months of 1937 nearly double the amount of bread was imported into this country from Canada than in the comparable period of 1936. This increase in importation, and at the price demanded for the imported article, has been one of the major causes as a result of which in the relatively small area of the New England national borderline some 17 bakers have had to close up shop completely.

Is this reciprocity? I ask you. Is it not extending the good neighbor policy to the breaking point when you put your own people out of business to the end that your neighbor may prosper at the expense of your own citizens?

It is a fact that Canadian bread sells today in the United States for less than it costs our bakers to make it. Is that right, or just, or fair to American industry? It just does not make sense. Bread imports from Canada have increased 1,182 percent in the last few years and are increasing with alarming rapidity and to the actual damage of our bread makers, who in large numbers along the Maine, Vermont, and New Hampshire Canadian border have been driven out of business. The same condition prevails all along the border, and you Representatives of those districts adjoining the Canadian border in the West will hear about it, if you have not already heard.

Seventeen bakeries in Maine, New Hampshire, and Vermont have been forced to close. Ninety-six people have been put out of business thereby.

IMPORTS OF CANADIAN BREAD ALMOST DOUBLE

While in 1927 Canadian imports of bread were 237,190 pounds, in 1936 there were 3,041,188 pounds imported, and in the first 4 months of 1937 the imports of Canadian bread were almost double those of the first 4 months of 1936.

The bakery industry in New England, not to say countrywide, represents a financial investment of many millions of dollars. It, the industry, furnishes—or has furnished until interfered with by this Canadian imported-bread problem—steady and profitable employment to several thousand citizens of these United States. Is it not about time that we did something to conserve our own industries and to protect our own citizens in their peace, comfort, prosperity, and pursuit of happiness, instead of being outguessed and outtraded in these so-called trade treaties, theoretically reciprocal, which do not reciprocate? "Res ipsa loquitur", as our legal friends would say.

Our forefathers had an interesting theory that swallows lived on air. The birds were observed to fly with their mouths open and never to come to ground, so our ancestors classed swallows with chameleons, as aerophagi.

My honest conviction is that had our forefathers not been born out of time, had they lived today and observed the hysteria of some people, who shall be nameless, they would be justified in believing with us that there are too many human aerophagi abroad in the land today, high-flying folk, who live on airy "isms", "ologies", and theories, scornful of those of us why try, at least, to keep one foot on the ground.

LET US GET PRACTICAL FOR A CHANGE

As many of you know, this is a matter concerning which I have been active for some time, as have been others, in an attempt to correct a critical and a very serious situation.

On January 5 last the minority leader [Mr. SNELL] introduced H. R. 55, which undertakes to provide for a duty on bread leavened with yeast. No action has resulted.

Congressman MCCORMACK, of Massachusetts, recognizing all these things about which I have spoken, has introduced, by request, H. R. 6562, which amends section 601 of the Revenue Act of 1932 and imposes a tax of 3 cents per pound on imported bread leavened with yeast, except certain rye breads, which will remedy the situation by imposing a tax on imported bread, which tax amounts to 3 cents a pound. If you pass this bill and it becomes a law, you will save your bread bakers of the United States. If you do not, you are standing by and doing nothing and permitting that valuable and essential industry to be stabbed and bled to death by those who pretend to be its friends, while its neighbors across the line are prospering and happy and contented as we pay them, and pay the penalty, for our own obtuseness.

SAVE THE BAKERIES OF THE UNITED STATES

Time and expedition are the essence of the saving of these baking industries. Every day's delay spells approaching disintegration and destruction of the business.

Get behind the McCormack bill, and let us have immediate, concerted, and cooperative action that will produce the desired results, namely, the early consideration of this measure and its enactment into law. [Applause.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. MAGNUSON asked and was given permission to extend his own remarks in the RECORD.

INTEREST RATE ON CERTAIN FEDERAL LAND-BANK LOANS—VETO MESSAGE OF THE PRESIDENT

The SPEAKER. The unfinished business before the House is, Will the House, on reconsideration, agree to pass the bill H. R. 6763, the objections of the President to the contrary notwithstanding?

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I regret exceedingly that I cannot follow the suggestions contained in the message of the President.

There is much force to the statements and facts which he presents.

If there were no additional facts and circumstances to be considered, the situation might be different; but in the light of all the facts and circumstances, I feel that the legislation should be enacted.

The committee gave considerable time to the discussion of the various issues involved.

The contract rate on outstanding land-bank loans varies from 4 percent to 6 percent, though the major portion of the outstanding loans have a contract rate of 5 percent. All of the commissioner's loans bear interest at the rate of 5 percent.

All of the land-bank loans made during the last 2 years have borne a contract rate of 4 percent, and that is the rate that is called for in the loans that are being made at this time; that is, the current loans.

However, for the past 2 years we have had an emergency land-bank rate of 3½ percent. This rate expires this month, and in the absence of legislation, all of the outstanding loans will revert to the various contract rates.

The bill under consideration continues the emergency rate of 3½ percent for the fiscal year beginning July 1, 1937, and provides for a 4-percent rate on all outstanding loans for the fiscal year beginning July 1, 1938.

The bill also provides that all Commissioner's loans for the 2 years shall bear interest at the rate of 4 percent instead of the present rate of 5 percent.

For generations two burdens have lain heavily upon the home-owning farmer: First, taxes; second, interest rates. His farm cannot get away. He cannot dodge taxes. He must pay these taxes regardless of whether he has any income whatever from the farm during the year in which the taxes fall due.

The farmer has no fixed income, and therefore the interest rates bear heavily, especially during years in which there is no production or in which farm prices are low.

If the present measure is enacted into law, the emergency 3½-percent rate will be continued for 1 year, and then it steps up on all loans to the current contract rate of 4 percent, so that beginning with July 1, 1938, all land-bank and commissioner's loans will bear interest at the rate of 4 percent. This seems to me to be a fair rate, and I believe these interest rates are as high as the farmer should be called upon to pay. If the measure is not enacted, the farmers will have different rates of interest to pay, varying from 4 percent to 6 percent, depending upon the time at which the loans were made.

A good many relief measures are still outstanding. Various individuals, both in the town and in the country, have been given combined relief loans and grants. The Resettlement Administration has been permitted by Executive order to make loans at a rate of 3 percent per annum. The Rural Electrification Administration is permitted to make loans at 3 percent. I am not criticizing these rates. I am simply drawing the comparison.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. JONES. I would prefer to wait until I have finished my statement, then I shall be pleased to yield.

The present emergency farm interest rates have enabled many farmers to stay off relief rolls and to stave off foreclosure.

I am impressed with the thought that so long as we find it necessary to make special concessions to certain groups the lure should be up the ladder instead of down, and that one who is trying to make a go of it on his own and pay the interest rates which are stipulated should at least not be discouraged. In other words, I do not think we ought to put a premium on sluggishness and a penalty on thrift. It seems to me there can be no controversy over that principle. [Applause.]

Many of you have lived on a farm, as I have. If so, you know the very great burden of paying high interest rates when the living must be made from the production of the farm. If the rates remain high, there is little hope of paying off these obligations and becoming in the full sense free men.

I submit herewith the rates that will be paid by the land-bank borrowers on outstanding loans if the rate goes back to contract basis:

There are outstanding, as of March 31, 1937, in round numbers, $2,058,000,000 in loans. Of these, two hundred and nine million bear interest at the rate of 4 percent, fifty-seven million bear interest at the rate of 4¼ percent, eight million bear interest at the rate of 4½ percent, one and a half million bear interest at the rate of 4¾ percent, one billion eighty-five million bear interest at the rate of 5 percent, forty-eight million bear interest at the rate of 5¼ percent, five hundred and sixty-three million bear interest at the rate of 5½ percent, seventy-eight thousand bear interest at the rate of 5¾ percent, eighty-four million bear interest at the rate of 6 percent, and a few thousand bear interest at the rate of 6½ percent.

Commissioner's loans outstanding on March 31, 1937, numbered eight hundred and thirty-three million, all bearing interest at the rate of 5 percent.

The expense to the Government depends upon how the matter is figured. If the loss to the Government is figured as the difference between the rate stipulated in the bill and the old contract rates, the expense to the Treasury would be the figure set out in the message. However, I anticipate that no one expects the 5-percent, 5½-percent, and 6-percent loans to be restored permanently.

If the loss is figured as the difference between the interest rate of 3½ percent provided in this bill for this year and the current contract rate of 4 percent, the loss to the land banks would be about $10,000,000 per year on the land-bank loans. I believe no one can figure exactly what the loss will be on the commissioners' loans, but the difference in the 5-percent and the 4-percent rate would be about $8,500,000.

The Farm Credit Administration now holds 37 percent of the outstanding farm mortgages of the United States. Every farmer in the country who needs money for the purposes outlined in the bill is eligible to borrow from the system. It seems to me, therefore, that there is no discrimination. Of course, there are some higher interest rates paid to private individuals and private lending companies, which, because of provisions in the mortgage or for other reasons, cannot be refinanced by the Farm Credit Administration. At the same time, the Farm Credit Administration facilities are open to all the farmers in America who need the advantages of a loan.

So long as the conditions require special concessions to different groups, it seems to me that these home owners who are struggling to make a go of their own affairs and who are competing with some of those who are allowed these concessions should receive consideration. The Nation is interested in home owners. This concession is made to them as such.

I want to express appreciation of the fine accomplishment of the Farm Credit Administration. It has made more loans at a lower rate of interest than have ever been made in the history of this country and at lower rates than are now being made in any other country for the same type of loan. The farmers owe much to this fine organization.

But, in the light of the surrounding circumstances and the conditions prevailing, and in view of the step-up provision of the bill, which establishes a 4-percent rate beginning with the next fiscal year, I feel that the measure should be enacted into law.

I may say this matter was gone over carefully by the Committee on Agriculture, and the committee voted overwhelmingly to take this action.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES. I yield.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. May I ask the gentleman how did there come to be such a wide range of interest rates and so many different rates of interest on loans from the same agency to the same group or class of borrowers?

Mr. JONES. The provisions in the original act stipulated that the rate of interest to be charged should be the rate which the land bank paid on their obligations which they sold, plus the essential costs of administration to be prorated, thus making the rate approximately 1 percent or sometimes a little more above the then prevailing rate. So it is determined by the outstanding cost of obligations, and the rate of interest which is paid for current money on a long-time basis.

Mr. PETTENGILL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES. I yield.

Mr. PETTENGILL. If the veto should be sustained, what prospect is there that other legislation would be introduced by the gentleman's committee into the House with a higher rate of interest, say 4 percent, which the Farm Credit Administration would agree to? Is the gentleman under the impression that the Farm Credit Administration is determined that all rates shall go back permanently to the contract rates?

Mr. JONES. I think, in all frankness, the Farm Credit Administration might agree to recommend some concession, but just how much it would be I cannot tell the gentleman. I do not believe they would be willing to make any concession on the commissioner's loans. I think they would probably be willing to agree to some concession on the land-bank loan interest rate. The current contract rate on land-bank loans is 4 percent. For more than a year the Farm Credit Administration, due to fine management, has been able to sell their obligations at a low rate, and they are not Government guaranteed, as a lot of people think. The reason they can sell them at a low rate is because they have been on a sound basis. They have been selling their obligations at around 3 percent and have been making loans for more than a year at around 4 percent. I have hopes, of course, that we could get a 4-percent rate, if we could agree on it, but when we go back we may get into a jam. This is merely a 2-year extension, and I hope if this bill is passed we may be able in that time to work out a permanent uniform rate, and enact it into law, which will be around 4 percent, or not very far from 4 percent.

Mr. PETTENGILL. Mr. Speaker, personally I would like to see some compromise agreement arrived at, but apparently the gentleman has not sufficient confidence in the acquiescence by the Farm Credit Administration to prevent him from voting to override the veto.

Mr. JONES. I think, even though they agreed to it this late in the session, with the conditions prevailing in another body, we might have difficulty; and I will say to the gentleman that on July 1 of this year the old contract rates went into effect, and they are now in effect, and will continue, unless this legislation or some other provision becomes a law. Some of the farmers, beginning July 1, are paying 5½ percent and some 5¾ percent on those various rates.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES. Yes.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, I was not a Member of the House when the original Farm Loan Act was passed, but it is my understanding that at that time it was the intention of Congress that the money loaned by the Federal land bank to farmers should be at as near cost as possible.

Mr. JONES. I understand that was the philosophy. I was not here at that time either.

Mr. KNUTSON. The gentleman and I came in together. I understand that the earnings of the Federal land bank this year were approximately the same amount as the President states in his message that the Government would sustain in the form of a loss if this legislation is passed.

Mr. JONES. The statements in the message are accurate as between the rates stipulated here and the old contract rates.

Mr. KNUTSON. If that be true—and I know it is true—then if we override the veto the Government will not be out any money, because we merely absorb the earnings and give the farmers the benefit of the earnings.

Mr. JONES. No; I think that is an inaccurate statement. The Government will be out. The Treasury would have to make provision for this institution as such to pay the losses on the difference.

Mr. KNUTSON. What I am getting at is this: If we continue the low rates it will merely wipe out the earnings of the land bank.

Mr. JONES. That is a difference of opinion. As a matter of fact, I have hoped that we can get a continuing 4-percent rate. But the land banks must charge a rate that will make the institutions self-sustaining, or the Government must absorb the loss, or the institutions would go into bankruptcy.

Mr. REES of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES. Yes.

Mr. REES of Kansas. The gentleman from Texas has explained that these bonds that were sold to offset the loans at 5 and 6 percent were for about 1 percent less than the interest rate on the loans.

Mr. JONES. Yes.

Mr. REES of Kansas. But half of those loans were 5 percent or more, and is it not a fact that nearly all of those bonds have been refinanced at 3 percent?

Mr. JONES. No.

Mr. REES of Kansas. So that the prevailing rate is a little more than 3 percent now?

Mr. JONES. That is not correct. Some have been refinanced and a good many have not been, because they are not callable. In 1933 they refinanced, and some of them at 4 percent, and that is the lowest they had ever been able to get up to that time, and they thought that was fine. That was refinancing 5-percent bonds at a 1-percent reduction. Some of them are still outstanding.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES. Yes.

Mr. DOWELL. Originally when this law was passed making these loans, was it not the understanding that this was to be made at as low a rate of interest as possible?

Mr. JONES. I think that is the desire of the President and the desire of all of the Members of the Congress. I do not believe there is any dispute over that.

Mr. DOWELL. Then may I ask how can it be figured that there is a loss to the Government at three and a half percent at the present time, when the Government is borrowing money at a less rate than the amount it is charging for these loans?

Mr. JONES. This institution, as well as its obligations, are sold in the open market. The Government does not even guarantee the interest on these bonds.

Mr. DOWELL. I understand, but it is Government money and under Government control.

Mr. JONES. As I understand, the Government is selling its long-time obligations now at rates which vary from 2¾ to possibly 3 percent, although I have not the latest figures on that.

Mr. DOWELL. Are not farmers entitled to as low a rate of interest as anybody else in borrowing from the Government?

Mr. JONES. They have the lowest rate given any individual, so far as I have been able to determine. I have the figures of various institutions and I know of no individual loans that run less than those to the farmers.

Mr. DOWELL. They are making loans at a less rate than to farmers.

Mr. JONES. They are making loans to institutions at 3½ percent, but most of those are farm-credit institutions.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES. Yes.

Mr. LUCAS. Is it not a fact that with regard to the question of loans, as the gentleman just stated, that if this veto is sustained by this House, the farmer will then be getting a rate of interest comparable with any other agency in this country that is borrowing money from this Government?

Mr. JONES. When it gets down to the individual bases, that is correct. That much must be said in fairness.

Mr. FORD of California. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES. Yes.

Mr. FORD of California. Home-loan owners pay 5 percent?

Mr. JONES. Yes.

Mr. FORD of California. Why should they pay any more than a farmer?

Mr. JONES. Let me state the difference: The gentleman asked me a question which I think deserves an answer. I want to make it clear that I do not say that the home-owners' loan rates are too high or too low. I am not passing on them. But there is a reason for the distinction, and that is this: The average farm income shown by statistics is much less than the average income in the town or in the city. This fact is recognized throughout the country and all through Government operations. The W. P. A., for instance, allows wage rates in New York, I understand, at $95 per month. In certain sections of the country they are much less, ranging down to less than half the New York rate.

The whole income situation in the city and in the town is on a somewhat different basis. I am not passing on the merit of the standards set up by the Home Owners' Loan Corporation. I think there is a further distinction. Home owners' loans were made on an 80-percent basis. These land banks loaned on a 50-percent basis, plus a 25-percent commissioner's loan, and if you will figure the evident losses that are coming in the Home Owners' Loan, you will find the loss to the Government will be considerably more there than it is in this institution. I just offer those as indications. I think the two should be decided on their own merits. I do not like to make the comparison, but the gentleman brought it up and he is entitled to an answer.

Mr. FORD of California. I think the House is entitled to an explanation also.

Mr. JONES. I think so.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES. I yield.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. If this rate of 3½ percent is maintained for another year and the other provisions of the bill, it will have a tendency to lessen the number of foreclosures, will it not?

Mr. JONES. I think that is correct.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Is that not an important consideration?

Mr. JONES. I think it is very important.

Mr. DUNN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES. I yield.

Mr. DUNN. What percentage of the farmers of this country will this bill affect?

Mr. JONES. This bill affects about the percentage named in the message.

Mr. DUNN. What is that?

Mr. JONES. About 10 percent of the farms, but I do not think the answer to that makes a fair presentation of the facts. Here is a fair presentation of the facts: Only 42 percent of the American farms have any mortgage on them. I wish there were not any on them, but there are only 42 percent of the farms that have mortgages on them. Of those mortgaged farms the Farm Credit Administration has nearly 40 percent. So, insofar as mortgages are concerned, there are nearly 40 percent involved in this legislation.

Mr. DUNN. Then if the President's veto is sustained, it means that 10 percent of the farmers will be compelled to pay a higher rate of interest; is that correct?

Mr. JONES. That is correct.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES. I yield.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. The question has been asked and the chairman of the committee has stated that the rate of cost to the farmer was based on the cost of this money to the Government?

Mr. JONES. No. The cost to the Farm Credit Administration.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Yes. Yesterday I asked the Farm Credit Administration for the interest rates on the refundings, and they gave me these figures, which I have totaled up: In consolidated fundings, $712,837,000 have been refinanced at 3 percent; $201,031,100 have been refinanced at 3¼ percent; $879,706,740 have been refinanced at 4 percent.

Mr. JONES. I will state to the gentleman that those are the lowest refinancings that have ever been made under the land-bank system, and I believe the lowest ever made by any agency that was not Government owned.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. If these figures are added up, it means that the average rate on that refinancing is 3½ percent, which would be the rate contemplated?

Mr. JONES. Of course, the gentleman understands that the cost of administration in making individual loans must range around 1 percent, and with private lending agencies it is more than that.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Just one further observation. In the first of the refundings in 1934, 4 percent was the lowest rate. The first half of 1935, 3¼ percent, and the last half of 1935 and 1936, 3 percent has been the rate. Does not the gentleman think that with the continued refinancing we will have an average rate of around 3 percent, which will amply justify the lower rate?

Mr. JONES. Ultimately, I hope that the financing may be done on a basis that will permit a permanent 4-percent rate to the farmer. That would be possible if all obligations were callable, and if all outstanding obligations could be refinanced at 3 percent. But, of course, this cannot be done all at once.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES. I yield.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Is it not true that of the total debt now outstanding, about thirty-six and one-half billion, the average rate is about 2.582 percent?

Mr. JONES. What institution is the gentleman talking about?

Mr. CRAWFORD. The Federal debt. The average interest rate is about 2.582 percent.

Mr. JONES. I am not familiar with that.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I think the Treasury releases yesterday stated that. Is it not true that one of the finest ways in the world to enable the Farm Credit to dispose of these bonds on a refunding basis at a low interest rate is to keep this rate low enough so that these farmers can pay the interest and principal when it matures?

Mr. JONES. I think so.

Mr. CRAWFORD. And thereby show that they are keeping things paid up to date?

Mr. JONES. I believe that is correct.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES. I yield.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Assuming the President's veto is sustained, what are the chances of a compromise bill being brought in that will meet with the approval of the administration and the farmers?

Mr. JONES. The gentleman asks me a question that I cannot answer. We would have some very difficult conditions. It is pretty late in the session. We might be able to work out one, I will say frankly.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES. I yield to my colleague.

Mr. RAYBURN. This matter was passed upon the first time about 1933, was it not?

Mr. JONES. Yes.

Mr. RAYBURN. When our farm population was probably at the lowest ebb of their depression?

Mr. JONES. Yes.

Mr. RAYBURN. I ask my colleague if it is not true that since that time the farm income has practically doubled?

Mr. JONES. That is correct. It has been increased very, very greatly. I do not know whether it would be quite that much.

Mr. RAYBURN. It is something like $5,000,000,000 as compared with $9,000,000,000 gross.

Mr. JONES. Yes.

Mr. RAYBURN. This bill will cost the Federal Treasury for the next 2 years, I understand, about $52,000,000.

Mr. JONES. It will cost that as between this and the old contract rates.

Mr. RAYBURN. If we are to do this for the farmer, we will be asked to do the same thing for the urban home owner. I think the gentleman will agree with me that the farmer in his country and mine is pretty well out of the depression as far as farm prices are concerned. I think we are selling the produce of our farms at about as reasonable prices as we have had in his time and mine. What argument would we have with reference to the urban home owner should he say he is paying an excessive rate when he is trying to acquire a little home? What argument are we going to make against him if the Committee on Banking and Currency brings out a bill affecting his interest rate? That would cost the Government maybe $25,000,000, maybe $50,000,000, or maybe $100,000,000. I am sure my friend, the gentleman from Texas, knows that I do not ask these questions or make these statements in criticism of him, because I know he has a very hard job, but it is quite possible that all these things added together would increase our annual outlay from $150,000,000 to $200,000,000. I think we all realize, I do at least, that it is vitally necessary, and one of the most important things that faces the country, to balance the Budget not later than 1939. [Applause.] We should strive toward that end. I know there are sections of the country in dust and drought which have not in any very great degree recovered, but I believe that the average farmer in this country, the average landowner in this country, with an interest rate reduced 40 percent from what it was if the 4 percent obtains—and I am confident I speak for the vast majority of the farm people of my immediate section in saying this—while he wants a low rate of interest he is willing to pay what it costs the Government with the cost of administration added.

It appears to me that if the President's veto is sustained, that the gentleman from Texas and his committee would in all probability be able to work out something—and we are to be here for some time yet—that would protect the farmer in a lower rate of interest than he has ever had except this 3½ percent, and yet not take money out of the General Treasury.

Mr. JONES. There is much force to the gentleman's argument. As I stated a while ago, however, comparing the average farm income with the average income of the man in the city, it will be found that there is more difference there than there is between the home owner's rate and the 4-percent rate. We shall find, if this legislation is not passed, that we shall immediately go back to the old contract rate unless we can get some legislation through. This is temporary legislation, and I would like to see it enacted to hold the lines until we can work it out on a permanent basis.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES. I yield.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Does the gentleman take into consideration the standard of living and the cost of living in the great cities as compared with the same costs on the farms?

Mr. JONES. I am just taking into consideration the facts I spoke of. I do not know why the standard of living should be greatly different in the cities than in the country.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. There is not any question in the gentleman's mind but what there is a difference, is there?

Mr. JONES. There probably is, but I think the farmer is entitled to as many rights as the man in the city. I do not think there ought to be any distinction.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HOPE].

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Speaker, I desire to make a few brief observations with respect to some matters which I think should be considered in connection with the President's message.

The President's veto message is predicated upon the idea that the emergency is over as far as the farmers of this country are concerned. It is stated in the message that farm income has increased and that the level of farm prices has increased. This is true; but I want to call the attention of the House to the fact that high farm prices do not do the farmer any good when he has nothing to sell, and that is just the situation in which a large proportion of our farmers have found themselves during the past year. Prices have been good because of drought and crop failures, but the farmer who had nothing to sell got no benefit whatever from that situation. This is the reason, very largely, why a continuing farm emergency is with us. Perhaps in another year, with good crops and good prices, the situation may be different; but for the present the emergency is still with us. If there was reason last year and the year before for giving the Federal land-bank borrowers an interest rate of 3½ percent, that reason prevails to the same extent today.

Later this afternoon the House will act upon the conference report on the farm-tenancy bill. We adopted that legislation for the purpose of doing away with the evils of farm tenancy. We are very foolish, it seems to me, to start a long program of farm-tenancy relief in this country unless we do what we can to prevent the lapse into tenancy which will take place under present conditions unless interest rates are somewhere near what the farmers can pay under existing conditions. During the last 5 years the net increase in the number of farm tenants in this country has been 200,000, or an average of 40,000 per year. Unless we can stop this drift it is idle to talk about solving the problem of tenancy.

Mr. THURSTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOPE. I yield.

Mr. THURSTON. In regard to the economy phase of the President's veto message is it the program today that we are to vote upon the proposal to give the President 6 additional secretaries, making a total of 10 secretaries? He already has four, two more than any of his predecessors had. I ask the gentleman, also, if it is not true that at this time the Federal Government is lending money to shipbuilding concerns for less than 1 percent per annum? The farmer is to pay from 4 to 6 percent.

Did we not just recently provide $60,000,000 additional out of the Treasury to build more ships, the builders of which will likely receive these low interest rates? These ship concerns also receive subsidies. There are other groups in the country that are being more preferred out of the Federal Treasury in regard to interest rates than the farmers. Therefore other groups are being greatly preferred.

Mr. HOPE. I am in agreement with the gentleman in his contention that there are a great many favors being shown other groups which are being denied the farmer. Furthermore, if the matter of economy is involved, it would take the rest of the afternoon to even enumerate the places where waste and extravagance can be stopped. As long as we can spend over $500,000,000 a year on the Navy and almost that much on the Army, and can spend over $1,000,000,000 in 6 months buying gold from all over the world at artificial prices, we can afford to spend a little to ease the interest burden of the farmer.

But right in connection with Government savings let me call attention to the fact that so far as the farmers of this country are concerned we have been doing pretty well in making savings out of the appropriations which the Congress has made for their benefit. Most of you read in the press this morning that $60,000,000 is to be turned back into the Federal Treasury by the Agricultural Adjustment Administration out of the $500,000,000 which was appropriated last year for soil-conservation payments. Two years ago we passed a bill making an annual permanent appropriation of one-third of the customs receipts for the benefit of agriculture.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman 2 additional minutes.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Speaker, out of the $109,000,000, which was made available last year under this appropriation, only $18,000,000 has been spent. The remainder will eventually go back into the Treasury of the United States.

Mention has been made of the great variation in the interest rates on these Federal land-bank loans. I think something should be done in connection with that. We cannot remedy this general situation at this session of the Congress, but we ought to take the matter up at the next session and work out some permanent plan whereby all farmers will have a uniform rate. We can, however, relieve the existing situation by voting to pass this bill, notwithstanding the veto of the President.

I have the same high regard for the Governor of the Farm Credit Administration and the way in which he has administered the affairs of that organization as the distinguished chairman of our committee. I know that Governor Myers opposes this legislation; but, after all, it is up to the Congress to determine the policy of the Government in this regard. Governor Myers and his associates have carried out the policies that we have heretofore declared in a splendid way. They are entitled to a lot of credit. They will just as cheerfully and as willingly, I am sure, carry out the policy that we declare today, if we override the President's veto.

Mr. HILL of Washington. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOPE. I yield to the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. HILL of Washington. Under the conference report on the farm-tenancy bill, how much will those farmers pay in interest?

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. BIERMANN].

Mr. BIERMANN. Mr. Speaker, the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture called attention to the fact that the contract rates—that is, the rates to which these loans will recur if we do not override the veto—run all the way from 4 to 6½ percent. The testimony of Governor Myers showed that the average contract rate is 5.07 percent. That is the average of all of them. It so happens that the high rates cannot be reached except by this bill. These high rates were contracted back some years ago when the money market was up and the bonds from which the Federal land bank got the money to make the loans were selling at higher rates than now; consequently the interest rate had to be much higher. These rates went up to 6½ percent, with an average of 5.07 percent. The only way to give this relief is to pass the bill that we have under consideration at the present time.

Mr. Speaker, I agree with the philosophy back of the President's veto message. I think those of you who have done me the honor of watching my vote will agree that I have voted against huge appropriations about as consistently as any other Member of the House. However, I think there are circumstances that make this bill advisable at this time.

In 1934 and again in 1936 there were droughts over all this country. There were pestilences that ruined the farmers' crops. I call your attention also to the fact that during a long term of years, while other businesses and occupations were prospering very greatly, the farmers were on a steady decline from 1920 right straight through to 1933. My opinion is that the principal cause of their bad circumstance was due to laws passed by the Congress of the United States. So it is fitting that the Congress pass at this time a law giving the farmers special favor.

The President submitted an estimate that the cost of this measure for 2 years would be $52,900,000. We should not spend that sum lightly. But may I direct your attention to the fact that Congress has authorized and appropriated funds for two battleships to cost more than $61,000,000 each. Items of that kind, billion-dollar appropriations for the Army and Navy, such outlays must be attacked before Budget balancing and reduction of our huge public debt are to become realities.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOOK].

Mr. HOOK. Mr. Speaker, it is not the easiest thing to be the only member of the committee to take one side of a question. I have listened with interest to the great leader of this House when he said that our farm income has practically doubled in the last few years. I have also listened to some Members on the floor of the House when they said, "I am not going to be with the President. I am going to be with the farmers. The farmers are with me but the President is not."

I say that the President of the United States has always been with the farmers and has given the farm population of this Nation the best administration it has ever encountered. I say to the Members who claim the farmers are with you but the President is not, that if you do not stay with the President the farmers will not stay with you.

The lowest rate of interest that is paid in any nation of the world is paid by the farmers here. I believe in a low rate of interest if it is at all possible, but I do not believe in too many outright gifts of $50,000,000 or more at a time when we have an unbalanced Budget. I have heard men on this side of the House rise time after time asking, "Where are you going to get the money?"

We have a chance now to help the President of the United States carry out his program and balance the Budget. Do not give any more gifts of $50,000,000 to $100,000,000 in places that it is not needed and help our President save this Nation from bankruptcy.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOOK. I yield.

Mr. RICH. May I refer the gentleman to the President's veto message, in which he states:

> The whole question involves the rate of interest charged by Government agencies and relates not only to farm loans but also to moneys lent by the Home Owners' Loan Corporation, the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, the Public Works Administration, and other agencies.

If this veto is overridden and the bill is passed will the interest rates of all these other agencies be leveled to the rate carried in this bill?

Mr. HOOK. I do not happen to be able to control all the votes of the Congress, so I cannot tell the gentleman what the rates of these other agencies will be if this veto is overridden. Support Roosevelt and vote "no" on the question of overriding the President's veto.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. COFFEE].

Mr. COFFEE of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, I rise to urge the House to sustain the Committee on Agriculture and to override this veto.

I will say that our committee, whose chairman is one of the fairest men in the House, has given this measure a great deal of thoughtful consideration. Hearings were held, and the possibilities of loss to the Federal Treasury were fully considered.

The committee compromised on this vetoed measure, which extended the interest rate of 3½ percent on Federal land-bank loans for 1 year and provided a 4-percent rate for the second year, thus indicating the desire on the part of the committee to approach a self-sustaining rate on Federal land-bank loans.

It seems that if one of the departments brings up a bill which provides for large expenditures by the Federal Government, there is no objection; but if a committee of Congress authorizes an expenditure of a relatively small sum through a temporary reduction in interest for the benefit of distressed farmers, the department objects and the President vetoes the legislation.

In this case I think the President has been ill-advised. We are not unmindful of the splendid work the Farm Credit Administration has done; but there are certain sections of this country where, because of drought, grasshoppers, and other adverse conditions, some special form of relief is necessary.

So long as the W. P. A. can expend $430,000,000 in New York City, with a sponsor's contribution of less than 1 percent, to relieve distress, I submit that the farmers of this country, who are not eligible for W. P. A. relief, are entitled to this temporary interest reduction as a relief measure.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for one question?

Mr. COFFEE of Nebraska. In just a moment. I favor balancing the Budget. But certainly saving the amount involved in this measure will not balance the Budget. The Budget should be balanced, but not at the expense of the farmers.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BOILEAU].

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Speaker, I believe in lower rates of interest, and for this reason have been very happy as a member of the Committee on Agriculture and as a Member of the House to support this type of legislation, which reduces the rates of interest on farm loans.

During the past 2 years we have passed laws which have reduced the interest rate to 3½ percent on these farm loans. On each occasion the bill has passed both the House and the Senate, and has been signed by the President. All during this period of time, however, we have neglected to give consideration to the farmer borrowers who have been most distressed, the farmers who have been compelled to make Commissioner's loans. We have not in the past 2 years given relief to the farmers whose economic situation was such they were forced to take Commissioner's loans at the higher rate of interest, 5 percent. This year is the first time we have attempted to give any relief to such farmers. I for one cannot understand why the bill should receive a Presidential veto, when for the first time we bring in a measure carrying relief for those who have secured Commissioner's loans. I sincerely hope the Members of the House will support the Committee on Agriculture, which has finally realized that the men and women living upon farms who are in the most distressed condition and are forced to get Commissioner's loans should have help. I hope you will support your committee in its efforts to get this necessary relief and reduce the interest rate from 5 percent to 4 percent for a 2-year period.

Mr. SAUTHOFF. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOILEAU. I am pleased to yield to my colleague the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. SAUTHOFF. May I call the attention of the House to the fact that when you foreclose on a home owner in a city you take away from him his home, and he may still have his job, but if you foreclose on a farmer you take away not only his home but also his business, so that he is both homeless and jobless.

Mr. BOILEAU. The gentleman is absolutely correct. The farmers of this country have not yet reached the point where they are not in need of relief. This is not a great deal of relief, as it is estimated to cost somewhere around thirty or forty million dollars. If we can spend this money as set forth in the bill to give relief to the farmers of this country, it will do a tremendous amount of good, and, in addition, will have the wholesome effect of beginning to reduce interest rates all the way down the line. This country has been suffering from interest rates which have been too high. We have been paying too much for the use of capital. If we can by our action here add some stimulus to the movement to reduce interest rates all the way down the line, we shall be helping not only the farmers of this generation but the farmers and home owners of all succeeding generations. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. PIERCE].

Mr. PIERCE. Mr. Speaker, having great respect for the President, I do not like to see a veto overridden. I am extremely regretful that I feel it my duty to vote and to speak against this veto. I believe the President has been misinformed. The interest rate of 3½ percent for this year for the farmer and 4 percent next year on Government money is little enough reward for the people who have produced our foods at a loss in this country for so, so many years.

If the veto is sustained, it will compel payment of contract rates up to 6½ percent for Government money, which it borrows at 2½ percent. Farmers are in no position to be so penalized now.

I fear that the President's advisers have not given him the true picture of the situation. It is apparent to all informed people that 1 or 2 years of farm prosperity have not made it possible to pay off losses accumulated through many years of raising and selling crops for less than the cost of production. Certain interests are talking a great deal about farm prosperity and high prices. They forget the debt burden and that the farmer is obliged to renew his machinery and essentials at the current high prices. They also forget that the Government is lending money to utilities and others at a lower rate of interest than that granted farmers.

It is specially unfortunate to have such a veto at a time when farm-tenancy legislation is urged, providing Government money at 3 percent for inexperienced farmers bent on experimental farming. It would seem wise to avoid making more tenants by crowding farmers for an interest rate which they cannot afford to pay. The reasons offered by the Farm Credit Administration seem totally inadequate to those really concerned with this problem. The loss to the Treasury, which they stress, is caused because of the fact that their own agency, under a previous administration, sold bonds which are not yet callable, at high rates of interest. Why should they require the farmers to pay for mistakes of a former political administration?

Another reason advanced by the Farm Credit Administration is even more obnoxious to farmers concerned. I refer to the oft-repeated statement that they fear cheap interest rates will bring about land speculation. Those who make this specious argument are pushing most vigorously for the type of farm-tenancy legislation which would undoubtedly result in tremendous land speculation and great loss to the Government. The reputed losses through the fair interest rates to farmers cannot begin to pay for the extravagant and wasteful expenditures of the Resettlement Administration in its experimental program.

Just why economy should begin on farmers established on their farms and struggling to meet debts and payments is not apparent to me. I have listened to all the arguments made before the Committee on Agriculture since March 1933. I have never heard one valid argument advanced for such unnecessary pressure on farm borrowers. I certainly hope that the President may have better advice on this matter. I do believe he sincerely desires to help farmers. The average American farmer would rather have fair business treatment than an experimental program purporting to come from an interest in his welfare. I have never known any real farmer to clamor for the type of farm legislation which is being thrust upon us from the cubicle offices in the center of Washington.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PIERCE. I yield.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Does not the gentleman feel the interest rate ought to be cut below 3½ percent instead of being increased?

Mr. PIERCE. Indeed it ought to be lower. It ought to be a permanent guaranty. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to extend their remarks in the RECORD in connection with the bill now under consideration.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WEARIN].

Mr. WEARIN. Mr. Speaker, those of us who come from agricultural regions feel it is imperative that the interest rate on land-bank mortgages continue at 3½ percent for another year and likewise that a reduction be effected from 5 to 4 percent on commissioner's loans. We recognize the fact that the national income of American farmers has approximately doubled since 1932 but the unusually variable climatic conditions in this country have complicated the situation from the standpoint of the distribution of that income. I refer in particular to the fact that two droughts have left various farming areas of the United States almost destitute of cash crops. This is one of many reasons why the continuation of the present program for another year is necessary.

The suggestion has been made this afternoon that if the House sustains the veto we will be in a position to negotiate some kind of compromise with the Farm Credit Administration. Of course the fact of the matter is the Farm Credit Administration is not affected by this action because the Federal Government will pay the bill. I do not believe in the theory or principle of subsidies any more than many other people, but we have recently passed a tenancy bill in an effort to place more people on the land. It would be rather short-sighted for us to refuse to appropriate a sum of money to keep people on the land who are already there, which is precisely what this legislation proposes to do. As far as a future compromise and additional legislation is concerned, this, in my opinion, offers the best opportunity that the Members of this House will have this session to go on record in favor of continuing the present rate of 3½-percent interest on land-bank mortgages and 4 percent on commissioner's loans.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. LUCKEY].

Mr. LUCKEY of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, the Presidential veto of this bill extending reduced interest rates on farm loans for 1 additional year did not come as a complete surprise. In anticipation of such action a number of us tried to secure an appointment with the President. We believed that we could present the true facts about the farm conditions in a great part of this country in such a way as to cause him to sustain the action of the House and Senate. In pleading with you to override the President's veto I do not criticize the action of our President, but neither do I for 1 minute condone or agree with the views of the President's advisers who recommended this veto. Because we failed to secure an appointment with the President the only course now left open is to override his veto.

As a basis for the veto the President has stated that farmers are now able to pay the higher interest rates because of increased farm prices and because of increased farm income. That may be true in some parts of our agricultural areas, but it is certainly not true in the great region known as the Prairie States or the Great Plains area. The real facts are that in many regions farmers are worse off today than they were in 1933 when these interest rates were first established. I cannot get time enough to go into details so will only touch the high spots.

In my own State of Nebraska we have had three drought years. What good does it do a farmer who has lost his crops by drought, dust storms, or by grasshopper plagues if the price of corn or wheat is high? If you have no wheat, you cannot make money even if the price of wheat is $10 per bushel, let alone when it is less than $1.20 per bushel. You talk about farm prosperity, when this year there were more than fifteen hundred farms untilled because those who had farmed them in past years had exhausted every possible source of credit and could no longer carry on farming operations. You talk about farm prosperity, when the Farm Credit Administration is foreclosing on thousands and thousands of farms and when literally hundreds of thousands of tillers of the soil are being forced out of their homes and on public relief rolls.

The Presidential message states that the index price of farm commodities has risen from 55 in 1933 to 126 at the present time. That is true, but what of it? Is there any economist in this House who thinks that such a statement has any real meaning unless it is followed up with a comparison of the index prices of industrial products which the farmer must buy? The index of farm prices was far below the index of the prices that the farmer must pay for his industrial necessities in 1933 and it is still far behind. Certainly agricultural income has been increased, but that means nothing unless you compare that increase in income with the same figures for industry, capital, and labor. If you make such a comparison, you will find again that the farmer is still far behind.

Further along in his message the President states that if losses occur on these farm loans the Federal Government will have to sustain those losses. In plain and simple words that means that if there is a loss this reduction in interest rates will amount to a subsidy to the American farmer of $30,000,000, more or less. Now, neither the President nor his arch adviser, Mr. Myers, of the Farm Credit Administration, can tell whether or not such losses will occur, let alone determine the extent of the losses. I am willing to assume that a loss of $30,000,000 may accrue, and I ask you, What of it? Suppose we do subsidize millions of American farmers with $30,000,000. Is that any worse than the subsidies we have made to those who have amassed great wealth and power in many lines of industrial endeavor?

Neither this Congress nor this administration has been squeamish about asking for subsidies. Right now we have a request before us for an initial authorization of one hundred and fifty millions to subsidize the merchant marine, and it is expected that the entire subsidy to be carried out on that line will be more than a billion dollars. We have been and are subsidizing everything under the sun. The great newspapers and publishing houses get an annual subsidy of $75,000,000. The air lines, the railroads, shipbuilders, shipowners, ship operators, banks, and industries get subsidies. Is it any different to subsidize a great economic group than it is to subsidize a privileged few? The other day this body authorized an appropriation of $50,000,000 to be spent in addition to the naval appropriation bill for new ships for the Navy. That request had the approval of the bureaus to which it had been referred. On this farm-interest bill one bureaucratic head of an independent agency has been able to go before his chief and say, "Stop this business." He has been able to raise the cry of subsidy and thus prevent the dispensing of equity and justice for which our Government has long been famous.

If you ladies and gentlemen think it is all right to extend subsidies to the privileged few who have great wealth and power but not to the millions of humble farmers, then vote to sustain this veto. If you believe this is a land of equality and justice, where even the humblest citizen of all the land has the same rights of protection and assistance extended by the Government to the powerful, then vote to override this veto.

For the last 10 days I have sat at my desk receiving daily weather and crop reports from the Great Plains States and from my district. A torrid sun is again creating havoc with our crops and green fields, upon which a renewed hope for prosperity has been dependent. Great hordes of grasshoppers are destroying crops before our very eyes. From the vast bread basket of our country, where millions of sturdy farmers have been fighting this terrific battle, comes the plea for equal treatment and justice. Regardless of whether you represent an urban or farming district, I ask your vote to override this veto and to bring about fair play for those who labor to produce the foodstuffs for this entire Nation. [Applause.]

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HARRINGTON].

Mr. HARRINGTON. Mr. Speaker, the news just received of the President's veto of the bill extending the emergency interest rates on Federal farm mortgages comes as a hard blow to every Member of this body having the interests of the farmer at heart. For some time concern has been expressed by the farmers of my district over reports that a veto of this bill was in prospect. Numerous letters have been received calling attention to the inability of our farm borrowers to meet the higher interest rates, and I was hopeful that the President would take into consideration economic conditions in the drought area and concur in the congressional view that the resumption of normal rates should be postponed at least for another year. Since he has not so decided, I think that it becomes our duty to enact this legislation over the veto.

Although there may be justification on general grounds for the President's position in the matter, I desire to call attention to the fact that the farmers in the drought-devastated sections of our country are still battling for their existence. To these agricultural producers the current prices being paid for farm products means little or nothing, because they have had nothing to sell in 2 of the last 3 years. Thousands of them have already lost their farms, and thousands more will be unable to meet their interest obligations to the Government unless we act to continue the emergency rates in effect.

If I remember correctly, Governor Myers, of the Farm Credit Administration, has stated that the termination of the emergency rates will mean increase in Federal revenues of some $40,000,000. That figure, however, has been disputed. But assuming that it is correct, $40,000,000 is not even an approach to a balanced Budget, and if it were, I do not believe it is the intention or desire of this body to attempt to balance the Budget at the expense of the one group of taxpayers, particularly the farmers in the drought areas, least able to shoulder the burden.

In conclusion, I wish to say this: If Mr. Myers thinks he is going to squeeze another forty million out of the farmers through the defeat of this bill, he is very likely to be disappointed. Instead of collecting interest he is going to collect land. The raising of interest rates beyond the farmer's ability to pay can mean only one thing—foreclosure and surrender of the land. Thousands more of farmers turned off the land and forced into cities, there to go on relief, swell the ranks of the unemployed and furnish additional competition to city labor. In these thousands of cases, the defeat of this bill amounts to confiscation of the acres needed to produce the food to feed our Nation. Therefore, I plead with our colleagues from the urban districts and nonagricultural areas to join with us in reenacting the measure.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. POAGE].

Mr. POAGE. Mr. Speaker, when I received the news that the President had seen fit on yesterday to veto House bill No. 7562, which extends the present 3½-percent interest rates on Federal land-bank loans and the present 4-percent interest rate on land bank commissioner's loans, I was deeply grieved. I cannot but feel that the President was uninformed as to the full implications of this action. I am sure that he would not purposely or knowingly insist on the literal enforcement of contracts entered into under the duress of 10 to 15 years of agricultural depression and oppression which must necessarily result in the loss of the homes of thousands and tens of thousands of American farmers. And yet this is the inevitable result of the veto of this legislation unless this House and the other body do not rise up and by a two-thirds vote of each body commit this Government to a policy of help and consideration for the farmer who has undertaken the payment of a farm home.

The National Grange reports that, according to a study made by the Bureau of Agricultural Economics, from 1933 to 1936, both inclusive, an average of 27 farmers out of every 1,000 lost their farms through mortgage foreclosure, tax delinquency, or bankruptcy each year. The aggregate number of farms lost to their owners during the 4 years indicated was 108 out of every 1,000. Since the total number of farms in the United States is now placed at 6,812,000, it will be seen that during the past 4 years more than 735,000 farmers, or more than one-tenth of the total home owners of the United States, lost title to their farms and have presumably become tenants.

At the same time we are now engaged in an effort to eradicate, or at least reduce, tenancy, and a bill on this subject cut down to one-tenth of the original appropriation to meet the President's wishes has passed both Houses. Since the total number of farm tenants is approximately 2,800,000, to provide each one of them with a farm costing an average of $4,000 each would call for the lending of more than $11,000,000,000. As that is beyond the range of possibility under prevailing conditions, there is only one thing we can do to relieve the situation, and that is to prevent those who are now owners from slipping into the tenant class. That is the purpose of the bill just vetoed by the President.

The Government is now borrowing money at an average rate of about 2½ percent, and the land banks are making new loans at 4 percent. Under these circumstances what possible reason can there be for compelling those who borrowed from the land bank back in the black days of the early thirties to pay 5-, 6-, and even 6½-percent interest, as most of the existing contracts call for? As long as the Government can borrow at 2½ percent it is not giving the farmers a subsidy when it loans the money at 3½ and 4 percent. On the other hand, if the reduced interest rate is not continued, the Government will be in the position of demanding a pound of flesh from the very people we must help if this Nation is to prosper.

Today the Government can help to maintain home owners as such for a fraction of the cost that will be involved in rehabilitating these same people if a short-sighted policy of getting all the contract calls for is allowed to control our action. For one I shall vote to override the veto. Mr. Speaker, I feel that if this House does not today sustain the Committee on Agriculture in overriding this veto, we will be in the position of saying in one breath we are willing to appropriate from $50,000,000 to $100,000,000 per year to make home owners out of tenants, and at the same time we are unwilling to maintain the home owners we now have by the expenditure of a small portion of that amount.

As soon as we act on this measure we are to consider the conference report on the tenent home-ownership bill, which carries an authorization of from twenty to seventy million dollars per year, plus in every case such amounts as the President may see fit to add, for the purpose of aiding farmers who are now tenants to become home owners. This aid is to be a permanent yearly expense, whereas should the President be correct in his assumption that it will cost the Government $51,000,000 to borrow money at 2½ percent and loan it to farmers at 3½ to 4 percent, this will be the total expense. It will not be repeated each year. It is admitted that the land bank can now loan money at 4 percent and suffer no loss, because it is doing this very thing every day. Under the terms of this bill the interest rate next year will level off at 4 percent. Is it not then advisable that we keep this interest rate down and keep these borrowers in the home-owning class while we can do it with a minimum expenditure, rather than to let them drop into tenancy and then try to start them from the bottom again?

And what of the buying power of the farmer? If we take it away in the form of increased interest rates that the Government-operated loan agencies might be able to show a profit, how will the farmer buy the products of the mill and factory? Even though farm prices are increasing, it will add nothing to farm purchasing power unless we leave some of the increase in the hands of the farmer.

And one thing more, Mr. Speaker, if this bill is not passed, the old contract interest rates will be reestablished, and the average of these Federal land-bank contract interest rates is today higher than the interest rate the Federal loaning agencies charge on city property, although every investment man knows that farm mortgages are the best investment that can be had. And there is what I consider to be another very good reason for extending an even lower rate to farm borrowers. When you foreclose on the owner of a city home, you lose a home owner, it is true; but you do not ordinarily take from the citizen his means of making a living. You do not thereby place him on relief to add to the Government's burden, but when you seek to double the Government's money at the expense of some hapless farmer and as a result sell his home at foreclosure, you have not only taken away his home; you have also taken his means of making a living, and have with poetic justice added to the relief burdens of the Government. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. ENGEL].

Mr. ENGEL. Mr. Speaker, I do not see how anyone in the face of the facts can justify a vote in support of the President's veto of the bill which continues the present 3½-percent interest rate on Federal farm loans. There is now before the House a conference report accompanying H. R. 7562 and which will undoubtedly be voted upon today. This is a conference report on the farm-tenancy bill, which would loan 100 percent of the value of the farm to tenant farmers to purchase farms with at 3 percent interest. If this bill is carried out to its fullest extent, it will mean that $11,000,000,000 will be loaned to tenant-farmers of America at 3 percent interest to provide money with which to purchase farms. I am informed that this is an administration measure and that it has the full support of the President. How can the President veto a bill, which veto, if sustained, would compel the farmers to pay the old interest rate and which would discontinue the present interest rate of 3½ percent on farm loans and at the same time support the Bankhead-Jones Farm Tenant Act, which would ultimately loan to the tenant farmers $11,000,000,000 at 3-percent interest? To be consistent, the President would, of course, have to veto the Bankhead-Jones Farm Tenant Act, which is his own administration measure.

I do not want to be misunderstood. I believe the farm-tenant problem is a real problem in America and ought to be solved, but I am simply pointing out the inconsistency of the policy of the President in supporting a bill that will give one class of farmers loans at 3 percent and at the same time vetoing a bill which would give another class of farmers 3½-percent interest on his Federal farm loan. Under the Farm Tenancy Act he is trying to make farm owners out of tenants. In vetoing this interest measure he would be making tenants out of farm owners.

Mr. Speaker, the majority leader in his remarks made a statement that if we continued a 3½-percent interest rate on farm loans, what argument would we have against the reduction of the interest rate on Home Owners' Loan mortgages. The President advanced a similar argument in support of his veto.

On August 17, 1935, and during the first session of the Seventy-fourth Congress (p. 13577) I introduced a bill to reduce the interest rate on home owners' loans from 5 percent to 3½ percent. At that time I made the following statement on the floor of the House:

> According to a statement furnished me by the Home Owners' Loan Corporation, giving the latest available figures, $2,665,061,750 has so far been borrowed on bonds and loaned to home owners. The rate of interest paid on these bonds varies from 1½ percent to 3 percent per annum, averaging a little more than 2½ percent. The rate charged home owners on mortgages is 5 percent. The Government is charging annually on the above mortgages $133,244,817 in interest and paying out on these bonds $70,511,765 annually. In other words, the Government is charging the home owners each year approximately $63,000,000 more in interest than they are paying out on the bonds.

I also placed in the RECORD a table showing the amount, the serial number, the date of issue, and the interest rate on each home owner's loan bond issued up to June 1, 1935. This verifies the statement I made that the average interest rate paid by the Government was approximately 2½ percent. In view of the fact that the Government is paying 2½ percent and making the home owner pay 5 percent, what justification can the administration have for failing to reduce the interest rate to at least 3½ percent? Why should the home owner pay double the interest rate on the mortgage that the Government is paying on the bonds?

For reasons I have stated, I favor a continued 3½-percent interest rate on Federal farm loans.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I yield one-half minute to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DUNN].

Mr. DUNN. Mr. Speaker, a great deal has been said about the Budget. I am more concerned about putting good food into people's bellies in the United States than I am concerned about that mythical thing called the Budget. [Laughter and applause.] It is my intention to always support legislation which will be a benefit to the farmers and the laboring people of our country, regardless of political consequences.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentlewoman from Indiana [Mrs. JENCKES].

Mrs. JENCKES of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I want to bring the thought to the Members of the House that the farmer has had many years in which to suffer losses; he has had 1 or 2 years, due to the legislation we have passed, in which to retrieve some of those losses. He has not yet replenished his equipment and supplies, and what he has now, if paid in interest, will be lost to the manufacturers of the country. What the farmer saves today in interest will not be stored or hoarded but will be spread all over the Nation and will give employment to those in the cities who manufacture the things that the farmer uses. [Applause.]

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I yield now to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. JOHNSON].

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I shall vote with the Committee on Agriculture to pass the pending bill for retaining the emergency rate of interest charged by the Federal land banks of 3½ percent for a period of 1 year, notwithstanding the veto of the President of the United States.

The bill also provides that beginning 1 year hence the rate will be increased to 4 percent. This on the theory, I assume, that farm conditions will have improved to the extent that farmers will be able to pay an increased interest rate.

As I suggested a few minutes ago, when the distinguished gentleman from Oregon [Mr. PIERCE] was speaking, it occurs to me that, taking into consideration that the Government borrows money for less than 1 percent, it could well afford to lend to farmers at a rate less than 3½ percent; and, if I had my way about it, the rate would not be stepped up to 4 percent a year hence or any other time.

The charge is made, of course, that this is a subsidy to farmers. To charge this is to admit the expense of administering the farm credit set-up is exorbitant. For surely there is no legitimate reason for charging the farmers in excess of 3½ percent and at the same time to lend hundreds of millions of dollars to the shipbuilders at a rate of less than 1 percent.

Mr. Speaker, when legislation was pending here to subsidize shipbuilders to the tune of hundreds of millions of dollars, we had no suggestion from the White House or any department of Government about economy or balancing the Federal Budget. Personally, I want to see the Federal Budget balanced at the earliest possible date, but I am unwilling to do so at the expense of the tax-burdened, drought-burdened, and interest-burdened farmers of the land. [Applause.]

May I remind this House once more that only a few weeks ago this body voted for a couple of $60,000,000 battleships and that no suggestion came from the other end of Pennsylvania Avenue or any department of Government that this would unbalance the Budget. The statement was made a few minutes ago that in the last 20 years Congress has voted more than $4,000,000,000 in subsidies for the shipbuilders of the country, and the rumor is afloat that before this Congress adjourns we shall be called upon for additional subsidies for the shipping interests.

I submit, Mr. Speaker, and Members of the House, that if this Congress passes this and other needed farm legislation to assist the farmers to balance their own budgets, that such legislation will do more to aid in the peace, prosperity, and contentment of the people of America than all the battleships and implements of war for which the tax-burdened farmers of the country must help pay for generations to come. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, a few weeks ago this House overrode the President's veto on another bill by an overwhelming majority, and I feel confident that it will do so again today by a majority of from 2 to 1 to possibly 3 or 4 to 1. In my remarks advocating the overriding of the President's veto on the previous bill I did not apologize for refusing to support the President. I said at that time that I yield to no one in my respect to and admiration for the President; I was glad to support the President when I believe him to be right, but that I did not hesitate to oppose him when I was convinced that he was wrong. I said then that I thought the Chief Executive, relying upon poor advice, was wrong, and I speak deliberately when I reiterate the same feeling with reference to this bill.

In defense of his veto the President points out that if this measure is allowed to stand as passed by this House it will cost the Government some $52,000,000. But that estimate, of course, is on the theory that in case this bill is not passed the farmers will be forced to pay the old interest rates of from 4 to 6½ percent, as the gentleman from Texas, the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Agriculture [Mr. JONES], very well pointed out. Of course, no one in this House believes that Congress would for a moment think of going back to such an exorbitant former interest rate and no one contends that under any circumstances should the rate be in excess of 4 percent. At that rate the cost of this bill would be not to exceed $10,000,000 per year.

In the President's message he also pointed out that the ability of the farmers to pay has increased more than 100 percent, caused by the rise in the level of farm prices since 1932 and 1933. It is true that farm prices have improved materially, and had it not been for the unprecedented drought in Oklahoma and several other Middle Western and far Western States in 1936 the condition of the farmers would have been decidedly improved. But, as pointed out a few moments ago by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HOPE], the rise in farm prices has been of little benefit to farmers who have nothing to sell. In Oklahoma the wheat, oat, cotton, and other crops were practically a complete failure in 1936. In some counties of Oklahoma the cotton crop was cut to one-tenth of the normal yield, so it is needless for me to argue or explain the dire need in which the farmers of my State and surrounding States have found themselves, nor is it necessary for me to remind this House that the farmers are not out of the woods financially. Therefore, I submit, Mr. Speaker, that the least we can do is to extend this bill for another 2 years and thus in a small way aid in giving the farmers of America a fighting chance to help themselves. [Applause.]

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I yield now to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. REES].

Mr. REES of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I feel that the President is inconsistent and not justified in his veto of H. R. 6763. The bill before us provides for a further temporary extension of an interest rate of 3½ percent until June 30, 1938, and 4 percent until June 30, 1939, on Federal land-bank loans and for a 4-percent rate on land bank commissioner loans until June 30, 1939. The extension heretofore granted by Congress has already expired. Unless Congress will override the President's veto by a two-thirds majority and pass this bill, the farmers who have loans with the Federal land bank will be required to pay, instead of 3½ percent interest, all the way from 4 percent to 6 percent interest. As a matter of fact, more than half of the Federal land-bank loans would bear interest at 5 percent, and a considerable amount of these loans would bear 6 percent interest. The Federal land bank commissioner loans would bear interest at 5 percent, instead of 4 percent, as provided by this bill. And let us remember that the total amount of Federal land-bank loans at the present time amount to $2,063,558,000, and the land bank commissioner loans amount to $831,704,000, making a total of $2,895,262,000.

I want to again call your particular attention to the President's letter, directed to the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture of the House and to certain Members of the Senate, wherein he opposed maintaining the lower interest rates on farm loans. In his letter he made the statement that he "was disturbed by the provisions of the bill" and believed that the Members of Congress should be advised as to the situation that would be created by the passage of that measure. A little later I will call your attention to a situation that might be created if we do not pass this measure. He said in that letter, also, that any reduction in the rates of interest that were formerly provided by the Federal land bank and the land bank commissioner loans would create a gift to the farmer from the Federal Treasury, and that he was opposed to a grant or gift by further legalizing a low rate of interest on farm loans. The reduction of interest rates under this bill, as you know, is temporary.

In his message to Congress today, the President states that if we maintain the lower rate of interest, even though it be temporary, it will create a deficit in the United States Treasury at the end of the fiscal year 1938 in the sum of $30,000,000, and that during the 2-year period, he further says, it will probably amount to as much as $52,000,000.

I would like to give due credit to the administration for having given the problem of balancing the Budget the consideration to which it is entitled. I am in favor of balancing the Budget, just as soon as it can possibly be done. I do not want, if it is possible to prevent it, to create any further deficits in the United States Treasury. On June 28 I called your attention to some figures that should prove to your satisfaction that no deficit should be created in the United States Treasury by reason of the extension of the present rate of interest by the Federal land bank, or the Federal Land Bank Commissioner, as provided by the terms of this measure. I do not believe it would cause a raid on the United States Treasury by the farmers of this country in any sense of the word.

But let me suggest that even if the passage of this bill should result in the creation of a small subsidy on the part of the Treasury, the administration and the President are inconsistent in opposing it. Just recently a subsidy of more than $50,000,000 was granted to the shipping interests of this country. The President did not question that expenditure in the least. As a matter of fact, during the past 6 months this Congress has granted subsidies to many other groups and municipalities who have sought them. I do not believe the allowance of one subsidy should be an excuse for the granting of another, but am simply calling your attention to the fact that the administration has appeared to single out one particular group and, by one stroke of the pen, has said that he was not willing to grant them further relief in this respect.

The administration was not disturbed at an expenditure of approximately a billion dollars to the Army and the Navy, and has not been disturbed when this Congress has exceeded the Budget estimates, and the estimates of the Appropriations Committee, in other instances, by millions of dollars.

I called your attention recently to an expenditure of some $7,000,000 for a tract of timber land in California that is to be added to a national park 15 miles away. Over in St. Louis the Government has spent several million dollars for what is known as a Jefferson Memorial. A great part of which money we are advised is to pay for real estate at fabulous prices. This House agreed just a few weeks ago to spend $5,000,000 to extend a national highway through the State of North Carolina, and two or three other Southern States. In this last instance there was no matching of funds by the States through which the highway passes, as has always been the policy in the building of public highways.

There are instances too numerous to mention here, where the administration has approved the granting of subsidies. I call your attention to these items to show that in these cases, anyway, the administration does not seem to be disturbed about the expenditure of funds and the granting of subsidies beyond the liberal estimates of the Appropriations Committee of the House. Think back, for a minute, to the millions of dollars in appropriations and subsidies that have been granted for the building of river dams, and the construction of power projects.

During the past 4 years, according to statistics that have been furnished us by the Department of Agriculture, we find that 27 out of every 1,000 farm owners in this country lost their farms because they were not able to pay their interest and their taxes. With few exceptions, this condition came about by circumstances over which these farm owners had no control. Thousands of farmers in the last 4 years have lost their homes. They have either become tenant farmers or, in many cases, have gone on the relief rolls. We have here a serious question. I call your attention to these figures to show you that the farmer's condition is far from being solved. As a matter of fact, he is going to need further assistance, for awhile at least, if he is expected to live on his own farm.

The President, in his message, has given us some figures to indicate that conditions on the farm are so much better than they were in the pre-war period. According to figures that I have gathered from the Department of Agriculture, I find that the farmer's price level for the sale of his products at this time is 124 percent of the pre-war days. But we also find that the cost of the things he buys is 133 percent of the pre-war period. So the farmer's dollar today is worth approximately 93 percent of what it was worth during the pre-war period.

Today, in his message, the President has quoted figures showing the gross farm income for 1936 amounted to $9,530,000,000. I call your attention to the farmers' net income for the year 1936 which, according to figures from the Department of Agriculture, was $7,200,000,000. Then I want to compare this figure with the average net income of the farmers during the 10-year period from 1920 to 1930. That yearly average was a little more than $10,000,000,000. So in making a fair comparison of the farmers' net income, we find that such net income this last year is $2,800,000,000 less than the average net income during the 10-year period just mentioned; and the fact remains that during that period the farmers, generally speaking, were hardly able to show a profit.

Mr. Speaker, we have a serious problem. We are considering a most important piece of legislation. There are 639,800 Federal land bank and land-bank commissioner borrowers in the United States. I am informed that this constitutes about 37 percent of all the farm loans in this country. Approximately 70 percent of these borrowers had paid their interest at the end of the year 1936. According to the Federal land-bank figures, there were 95,300 farmers who were unable to take care of their interest payments even at the reduced interest rates and the taxes which had become due at the end of the year. This delinquency came about by reason of crop failures and adverse conditions. These farmers could not meet their obligations. These 95,300 farmers alone represent an investment of $429,000,000. This number would have been much greater had it not been for the temporary reduction of the interest rate heretofore granted by this Congress.

We are dealing with a stupendous problem this afternoon, a problem that involves an investment of two and one-half billion dollars, but, more important, involves, I think, the fate of thousands of farm owners who may not be able to retain possession of their farms if at this crucial moment we see fit to increase an interest charge against them, which they may not be able to pay. If we expect to save the farms for the farmers, the very least thing we can do is to maintain at least temporarily the present rate of interest on Federal land bank as well as land-bank commissioner loans, as provided under this bill.

We have spent a lot of time during this session discussing the question of keeping people from the relief rolls. We have talked about the farmers who are on relief rolls. We find that between 35,000 and 40,000 farmers, on an average, are losing their farms each year. If we want to keep people off the relief rolls and want to help solve the farm problem today, then we ought to pass this bill over the President's veto. Here is a chance to assist materially 685,000 farm owners, and we can do it, in my opinion, without expense to the Federal Government.

A great deal has been said about a low rate of interest granted to the farmers by the Federal loan agencies during the present emergency. I grant you that it is a comparatively low rate, but not as compared with the rates granted to railroad companies and corporations, as well as municipalities, that have been assisted by the use of Government funds. Furthermore, when more than half of these farm loans were made, and the interest charges were 5 percent and 6 percent, the bonds that provided the funds bore interest at 4 percent and 5 percent. These bonds have nearly all been refinanced at 3-percent interest. As a matter of fact, the average interest rate on all Federal loan bonds is only 3.4 percent. Furthermore, the farmer, when he made his loan, paid for stock in the Federal land bank in an amount equivalent to 5 percent of the amount of his loan. In other words, the farmers have invested $100,000,000 of their own money to help guarantee the payment of the Federal land-bank loans. And the farmer, when he makes his loan, pays the secretary of the local organization a fee on the percentage basis on his loan for services rendered in securing the loan for him.

If you will examine the statements of the Federal land banks for 1936 and the first quarter of 1937, you will find they show a net profit of approximately $22,000,000 above a sufficient reserve that has been set aside to protect the banks against losses on account of shrinkage, judgments, foreclosures, real estate owned, and so forth. I believe that with the profits already accumulated, as shown by the Federal land bank statements, and the profits that should accrue during the next year, together with the savings that can be made by a more careful and economical management on part of those in charge of Federal farm loan organizations, there should be more than sufficient funds to take care of this temporary reduction in interest rates.

Many people have a mistaken idea that money borrowed from the Federal land bank is Government money. The Federal land bank is an agency that makes the loans and sells bonds on the market against these loans. One thing more, to show that the interest rate on the bonds above mentioned is reasonable and fair, I call your attention to the fact that the United States Treasury at this time is able to borrow money at the rate of 2½-percent interest.

If the farmers of this country can raise a good crop this year, and have a fair price for it, the delinquencies in the payment of interest and taxes will be at a minimum in a year from now.

Mr. Speaker, this is not a political question in any sense of the word. It is not sectional or class legislation. It is a question that rises above politics. It is one that directly or indirectly affects a vast portion of the substantial citizens of our country. It is a question that affects their standards of living. Let us not forget that the progress of this Nation is pretty closely associated with whatever degree of prosperity may be attained by the farmers of our country. If we are serious in our efforts to help the farmer to help himself, here is our chance to do it. We have an opportunity to assist a large number of representative persons who are engaged in the great business of agriculture in this country. The thousands of farmers who will be affected by this bill are not asking for alms in any sense of the word. All they are asking for is an even break. Let me plead with you again that you vote to override the President's veto on this bill and give the farmer a chance to help himself.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. KLEBERG].

Mr. KLEBERG. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that 3½-percent interest for 1 year at an approximate expenditure of $30,000,000, affecting those farmers, not who have received the double increase reflected in the Nation's produce but the low end, will give an opportunity to them to pay out and save them from relief so that they may remain landowners; and that is far more consistent than the reasons assigned in the President's message which vetoed this bill. There will be more American citizens kept off of relief than three times this amount of money will provide for by direct relief, to say nothing of their morale being sustained.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is, Will the House, on reconsideration, pass the bill H. R. 6763, the objection of the President to the contrary notwithstanding? The Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 260, nays 98, not voting 73, as follows:

GOLDEN GATE INTERNATIONAL EXPOSITION

The SPEAKER. Pursuant to provisions of Public Resolution 52, Seventy-fifth Congress, the Chair appoints as members of the United States Golden Gate International Exposition the following Members of the House of Representatives: Mr. LEA, Mr. HAVENNER, and Mr. WELCH.

BANKHEAD-JONES FARM TENANT ACT

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report upon the bill (H. R. 7562) to encourage and promote the ownership of farm homes and to make the possession of such homes more secure, to provide for the general welfare of the United States, to provide additional credit facilities for agricultural development, and for other purposes, and ask unanimous consent that the statement be read in lieu of the report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas calls up the conference report upon the bill H. R. 7562 and asks unanimous consent that the statement be read in lieu of the report. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the statement of the conferees.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7562) to encourage and promote the ownership of farm homes and to make the possession of such homes more secure, to provide for the general welfare of the United States, to provide additional credit facilities for agricultural development, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert the following:

"That this Act may be cited as 'The Bankhead-Jones Farm Tenant Act'.

"TITLE I—FARM-TENANT PROVISIONS

"POWER OF SECRETARY

"SECTION 1. (a) The Secretary of Agriculture (hereinafter referred to as the 'Secretary') is authorized to make loans in the United States and in the Territories of Alaska and Hawaii and in Puerto Rico to persons eligible to receive the benefits of this title to enable such persons to acquire farms.

"(b) Only farm tenants, farm laborers, sharecroppers, and other individuals who obtain, or who recently obtained, the major portion of their income from farming operations shall be eligible to receive the benefits of this title. In making available the benefits of this title, the Secretary shall give preference to persons who are married, or who have dependent families, or, wherever practicable, to persons who are able to make an initial down payment, or who are owners of livestock and farm implements necessary successfully to carry on farming operations. No person shall be eligible who is not a citizen of the United States.

"(c) No loan shall be made for the acquisition of any farm unless it is of such size as the Secretary determines to be sufficient to constitute an efficient farm-management unit and to enable a diligent farm family to carry on successful farming of a type which the Secretary deems can be successfully carried on in the locality in which the farm is situated.

"COUNTY COMMITTEE AND LOANS

"SEC. 2. (a) The County Committee established under section 42 shall—

"(1) Examine applications (filed with the county agent in the county, or with such other person as the Secretary may designate) of persons desiring to finance the acquisition of farms in the county by means of a loan from the Secretary under this title.

"(2) Examine and appraise farms in the county with respect to which an application for a loan is made.

"(b) If the committee finds that an applicant is eligible to receive the benefits of this title, that by reason of his character, ability, and experience he is likely successfully to carry out undertakings required of him under a loan which may be made under this title, and that the farm with respect to which the application is made is of such character that there is a reasonable likelihood that the making of a loan with respect thereto will carry out the purposes of this title, it shall so certify to the Secretary. The committee shall also certify to the Secretary the amount which the committee finds is the reasonable value of the farm.

"(c) No certification under this section shall be made with respect to any farm in which any member of the committee or any person related to such member within the third degree of consanguinity or affinity has any property interest, direct or indirect, or in which they or either of them have had such interest within one year prior to the date of certification.

"(d) No loan shall be made to any person or with respect to any farm unless certification as required under this section has been made with respect to such person and such farm by the committee.

"TERMS OF LOANS

"SEC. 3. (a) Loans made under this title shall be in such amount (not in excess of the amount certified by the County Committee to be the value of the farm) as may be necessary to enable the borrower to acquire the farm and for necessary repairs and improvements thereon, and shall be secured by a first mortgage or deed of trust on the farm.

"(b) The instruments under which the loan is made and security therefor shall—

"(1) Provide for the repayment of the loan within an agreed period of not more than forty years from the making of the loan.

"(2) Provide for the payment of interest on the unpaid balance of the loan at the rate of 3 per centum per annum.

"(3) Provide for the repayment of the unpaid balance of the loan, together with interest thereon, in installments in accordance with amortization schedules prescribed by the Secretary.

"(4) Be in such form and contain such covenants as the Secretary shall prescribe to secure the payment of the unpaid balance of the loan, together with interest thereon, to protect the security, and to assure that the farm will be maintained in repair, and waste and exhaustion of the farm prevented, and that such proper farming practices as the Secretary shall prescribe will be carried out.

"(5) Provide that the borrower shall pay taxes and assessments on the farm to the proper taxing authorities, and insure and pay for insurance on farm buildings.

"(6) Provide that upon the borrower's assigning, selling, or otherwise transferring the farm, or any interest therein, without the consent of the Secretary, or upon default in the performance of, or upon any failure to comply with, any covenant or condition contained in such instruments, or upon involuntary transfer or sale, the Secretary may declare the amount unpaid immediately due and payable, and that, without the consent of the Secretary, no final payment shall be accepted, or release of the Secretary's interest be made, less than five years after the making of the loan.

"(c) Except as provided in paragraph (6) of subsection (b), no instrument provided for in this section shall prohibit the prepayment of any sum due under it.

"(d) No provision of section 75, as amended, of the Act entitled 'An Act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States', approved July 1, 1898 (U. S. C., 1934 ed., title 11, sec. 203; Supp. II, title 11, sec. 203), otherwise applicable in respect of any indebtedness incurred under this title by any beneficiary thereof, shall be applicable in respect of such indebtedness until such beneficiary has repaid at least 15 per centum thereof.

"EQUITABLE DISTRIBUTION OF LOANS

"SEC. 4. In making loans under this title, the amount which is devoted to such purpose during any fiscal year shall be distributed equitably among the several States and Territories on the basis of farm population and the prevalence of tenancy, as determined by the Secretary.

"AVOIDANCE OF PRODUCTION EXPANSION

"SEC. 5. In carrying out this title, the Secretary shall give due consideration to the desirability of avoiding the expansion of production for market of basic commodities where such expansion would defeat the policy of Congress as set forth in section 7 (a) (5) of the Soil Conservation and Domestic Allotment Act, as amended, and shall, so far as practicable, assist beneficiaries of the program under this title to become established upon lands now in cultivation.

"APPROPRIATION

"SEC. 6. To carry out the provisions of this title, there is authorized to be appropriated not to exceed $10,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1938, not to exceed $25,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1939, and not to exceed $50,000,000 for each fiscal year thereafter. Not more than 5 per centum of the sums appropriated for any fiscal year in pursuance of this section shall be available for administrative expenses in carrying out this title during such fiscal year.

"TITLE II—REHABILITATION LOANS

"BORROWERS AND TERMS

"SECTION 21. (a) Out of the funds made available under section 23, the Secretary shall have power to make loans to eligible individuals for the purchase of livestock, farm equipment, supplies, and for other farm needs (including minor improvements and minor repairs to real property), and for the refinancing of indebtedness, and for family subsistence.

"(b) Loans made under this section shall bear interest at a rate not in excess of 3 per centum per annum, and shall have maturities not in excess of five years, and may be renewed. Such loans shall be payable in such installments as the Secretary may provide in the loan agreement. All loans made under this title shall be secured by a chattel mortgage, a lien on crops, and an assignment of proceeds from the sale of agricultural products, or by any one or more of the foregoing.

"(c) Only farm owners, farm tenants, farm laborers, sharecroppers, and other individuals who obtain, or who recently obtained, the major portion of their income from farming operations, and who cannot obtain credit on reasonable terms from any federally incorporated lending institution, shall be eligible for loans under this section.

"DEBT ADJUSTMENT

"SEC. 22. The Secretary shall have power to assist in the voluntary adjustment of indebtedness between farm debtors and their creditors and may cooperate with and pay the whole or part of the expenses of State, Territorial, and local agencies and committees engaged in such debt adjustment. He is also authorized to continue and carry out undertakings with respect to farm debt adjustment uncompleted at the time when appropriations for the purpose of this section are first available. Services furnished by the Secretary under this section shall be without charge to the debtor or creditor.

"APPROPRIATION

"SEC. 23. (a) For the fiscal year ending June 30, 1938, the balances of funds available to the Secretary for loans and relief to farmers, pursuant to Executive Order Numbered 7530 of December 31, 1936, as amended by Executive Order Numbered 7557 of February 19, 1937, which are unexpended on June 30, 1937, are authorized to be appropriated to carry out the provisions of this title.

"(b) The President is authorized to allot to the Secretary, out of appropriations made for relief or work relief for any fiscal year ending prior to July 1, 1939, such sums as he determines to be necessary to carry out the provisions of this title and to enable the Secretary to carry out such other forms of rehabilitation of individuals eligible under this title to receive loans as may be authorized by law and designated in the Executive order directing the allotment.

"TITLE III—RETIREMENT OF SUBMARGINAL LAND

"PROGRAM

"SECTION 31. The Secretary is authorized and directed to develop a program of land conservation and land utilization, including the retirement of lands which are submarginal or not primarily suitable for cultivation, in order thereby to correct maladjustments in land use, and thus assist in controlling soil erosion, reforestation, preserving natural resources, mitigating floods, preventing impairment of dams and reservoirs, conserving surface and subsurface moisture, protecting the watersheds of navigable streams, and protecting the public lands, health, safety, and welfare.

"POWERS UNDER LAND PROGRAM

"SEC. 32. To effectuate the program provided for in section 31, the Secretary is authorized—

"(a) To acquire by purchase, gift, or devise, or by transfer from any agency of the United States or from any State, Territory, or political subdivision, submarginal land and land not primarily suitable for cultivation, and interests in and options on such land. Such property may be acquired subject to any reservations, outstanding estates, interests, easements, or other encumbrances which the Secretary determines will not interfere with the utilization of such property for the purposes of this title.

"(b) To protect, improve, develop, and administer any property so acquired and to construct such structures thereon as may be necessary to adapt it to its most beneficial use.

"(c) To sell, exchange, lease, or otherwise dispose of, with or without a consideration, any property so acquired, under such terms and conditions as he deems will best accomplish the purposes of this title, but any sale, exchange, or grant shall be made only to public authorities and agencies and only on condition that the property is used for public purposes. The Secretary may recommend to the President other Federal, State, or Territorial agencies to administer such property, together with the conditions of use and administration which will best serve the purposes of a land-conservation and land-utilization program, and the President is authorized to transfer such property to such agencies.

"(d) With respect to any land, or any interest therein, acquired by, or transferred to, the Secretary for the purposes of this title, to make dedications or grants, in his discretion, for any public purpose, and to grant licenses and easements upon such terms as he deems reasonable.

"(e) To cooperate with Federal, State, Territorial, and other public agencies in developing plans for a program of land conservation and land utilization, to conduct surveys and investigations relating to conditions and factors affecting, and the methods of accomplishing most effectively, the purposes of this title, and to disseminate information concerning these activities.

"(f) To make such rules and regulations as he deems necessary to prevent trespasses and otherwise regulate the use and occupancy of property acquired by, or transferred to, the Secretary for the purposes of this title, in order to conserve and utilize it or advance the purposes of this title. Any violation of such rules and regulations shall be punished as prescribed in section 5388 of the Revised Statutes, as amended (U. S. C., 1934 ed., title 18, sec. 104).

"PAYMENTS TO COUNTIES

"SEC. 33. As soon as practicable after the end of each calendar year, the Secretary shall pay to the county in which any land is held by the Secretary under this title, 25 per centum of the net revenues received by the Secretary from the use of the land during such year. In case the land is situated in more than one county, the amount to be paid shall be divided equitably among the respective counties. Payments to counties under this section shall be made on the condition that they are used for school or road purposes, or both. This section shall not be construed to apply to amounts received from the sale of land.

"APPROPRIATION

"SEC. 34. To carry out the provisions of this title, there is authorized to be appropriated not to exceed $10,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1938, and not to exceed $20,000,000 for each of the two fiscal years thereafter.

"TITLE IV—GENERAL PROVISIONS

"FARMERS' HOME CORPORATION

"SECTION 40. (a) There is hereby created as an agency, of and within the Department of Agriculture, a body corporate with the name 'Farmers' Home Corporation' (in this Act called the Corporation). The principal office of the Corporation shall be located in the District of Columbia, but there may be established agencies or branch offices elsewhere in the United States under rules and regulations prescribed by the Board of Directors.

"(b) The Secretary shall have power to delegate to the Corporation such powers and duties conferred upon him under title I or title II, or both, and such powers under title IV as relate to the exercise of the powers and duties so delegated, as he deems may be necessary to the efficient carrying out of the purposes of such titles and may be executed by the Corporation, and to transfer to the Corporation such funds available for such purposes as he deems necessary. In connection with and in the exercise of such powers and duties so delegated, all provisions of this Act relating to the powers and duties of, and limitations upon, the Secretary shall apply to the Corporation in the same manner as to the Secretary, and the term 'Secretary' shall be construed to include 'Corporation'.

"(c) The Corporation shall have a nominal capital stock in an amount determined and subscribed for by the Secretary. Receipts for payments for or on account of such stock shall be issued by the Corporation to the Secretary and shall be evidence of the stock ownership of the United States.

"(d) The management of the Corporation shall be vested in a board of directors (in this Act called the Board) subject to the general supervision of the Secretary. The Board shall consist of three persons employed in the Department of Agriculture who shall be designated by the Secretary. Vacancies in the Board, so long as there are two members in office, shall not impair the powers of the Board to execute its functions and two of the members in office shall constitute a quorum for the transaction of business. The directors, appointed as hereinbefore provided, shall receive no additional compensation for their services as such directors but may be allowed travel and subsistence expenses when engaged in business of the Corporation outside of the District of Columbia.

"(e) The Board may select, subject to the approval of the Secretary, an administrator, who shall be the executive officer of the Corporation, with such power and authority as may be conferred upon him by the Board.

"(f) The Corporation—

"(1) Shall have succession in its corporate name;

"(2) May adopt, alter, and use a corporate seal, which shall be judicially noticed;

"(3) May sue and be sued in its corporate name in any court of competent jurisdiction, State or Federal: Provided, That the prosecution and defense of all litigation to which the Corporation may be a party shall be conducted under the supervision of the Attorney General, and the Corporation shall be represented by the United States Attorneys for the districts, respectively, in which such litigation may arise, or by such other attorney or attorneys as may, under the law, be designated by the Attorney General: And provided further, That no attachment, injunction, garnishment, or other similar process, mesne or final, shall be issued against the Corporation or its property;

"(4) May adopt, amend, and repeal bylaws, rules, and regulations governing the manner in which its business may be conducted and the powers vested in it may be exercised and enjoyed;

"(5) Shall be entitled to the free use of the United States mails in the same manner as other executive agencies of the Government;

"(6) Shall have such powers as may be necessary or appropriate for the exercise of the powers vested in the Corporation (including, but subject to the limitations of this Act, the power to make contracts, and to purchase or lease, and to hold or dispose of, such real and personal property as it deems necessary) and all such incidental powers as are customary in corporations generally. The Board shall define the authority and duties of the officers and employees of the Corporation, delegate to them such of the powers vested in the Corporation as it may determine, and require bonds of such of them as it may designate and fix the penalties and pay the premiums of such bonds.

"(g) Insofar as applicable, the benefits of the Act entitled 'An Act to provide compensation for employees of the United States suffering injuries while in the performance of their duties, and for other purposes', approved September 7, 1916, as amended, shall extend to employees of the Corporation.

"(h) All money of the Corporation not otherwise employed may be deposited with the Treasurer of the United States or in any bank approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, subject to withdrawal by the Corporation at any time, or with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury may be invested in obligations of the United States. Subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, the Federal Reserve banks are hereby authorized and directed to act as depositories, custodians, and fiscal agents for the Corporation in the performance of its powers.

"(i) The Corporation, including its franchises, its capital, reserves, and surplus and its income and property shall, except as otherwise provided in section 50 (a), be exempt from all taxation now or hereafter imposed by the United States or any State, Territory, District, dependency, or political subdivision.

"(j) The Corporation shall at all times maintain complete and accurate books of account and shall file annually with the Secretary a complete report as to the business of the Corporation.

"ADMINISTRATIVE POWERS OF SECRETARY AND CORPORATION

"SEC. 41. For the purposes of this Act, the Secretary shall have power to—

"(a) Appoint (without regard to the civil-service laws and regulations) and fix the compensation of such officers and employees as may be necessary. No person (except as to positions requiring technical training and experience for which no one possessing the requisite technical training and experience is available within the area) shall be appointed or transferred under this Act to any position in an office in a State or Territory the operations of which are confined to such State or Territory or a portion thereof, or in a regional office outside the District of Columbia the operations of which extend to more than one, or portions of more than one, State or Territory, unless such person has been an actual and bona-fide resident of the State or Territory, or region, as the case may be, in which such office is located, for a period of not less than one year next preceding the appointment or transfer to such position (disregarding periods of residence outside such State or Territory, or region, as the case may be, while in the Federal Government service). If the operations of the office are confined to a portion of a single State or Territory, the Secretary in making appointments or transfers to such office shall, except in the classes of cases exempted from the preceding sentence, appoint or transfer only persons who are residents of such portion of the State or Territory: Provided, That hereafter, wherever practicable, all appointments of persons to the Federal service for employment within the District of Columbia, under the provisions of this Act, whether such appointments be within the classified civil service or otherwise, shall be apportioned among the several States and the District of Columbia upon the basis of population as ascertained at the last preceding census.

"(b) Accept and utilize voluntary and uncompensated services, and, with the consent of the agency concerned, utilize the officers, employees, equipment, and information of any agency of the Federal Government, or of any State, Territory, or political subdivision.

"(c) Within the limits of appropriations made therefor, make necessary expenditures for personal services and rent at the seat of government and elsewhere; contract stenographic reporting services; purchase and exchange of supplies and equipment, law books, books of reference, directories, periodicals, newspapers, and press clippings; travel and subsistence expenses, including the expense of attendance at meetings and conferences; purchase, operation, and maintenance, at the seat of government and elsewhere, of motor-propelled passenger-carrying and other vehicles; printing and binding; and for such other facilities and services as he may from time to time find necessary for the proper administration of this Act.

"(d) Make contracts for services and purchases of supplies without regard to the provisions of section 3709 of the Revised Statutes (U. S. C., 1934 ed., title 41, sec. 5) when the aggregate amount involved is less than $300.

"(e) Make payment prior to audit and settlement by the General Accounting Office.

"(f) Acquire land and interests therein without regard to section 355 of the Revised Statutes, as amended. This subsection shall not apply with respect to the acquisition of land or interests in land under title III.

"(g) Compromise claims and obligations arising under, and adjust and modify the terms of mortgages, leases, contracts, and agreements entered into pursuant to, this Act, as circumstances may require.

"(h) Collect all claims and obligations arising under this Act, or under any mortgage, lease, contract, or agreement entered into pursuant to this Act, and, if in his judgment necessary and advisable, to pursue the same to final collection in any court having jurisdiction: Provided, That the prosecution and defense of all litigation under this Act shall be conducted under the supervision of the Attorney General, and the legal representation shall be by the United States Attorneys for the districts, respectively, in which such litigation may arise, or by such other attorney or attorneys as may, under the law, be designated by the Attorney General.

"(i) Make such rules and regulations as he deems necessary to carry out this Act.

"COUNTY COMMITTEE

"SEC. 42. (a) The Secretary is authorized and directed to appoint in each county in which activities are carried on under title I a county committee composed of three farmers residing in the county.

"(b) Each member of the committee shall be allowed compensation at the rate of $3 per day while engaged in the performance of duties under this Act but such compensation shall not be allowed with respect to more than five days in a month. In addition, they shall be allowed such amounts as the Secretary may prescribe for necessary traveling and subsistence expenses.

"(c) The committee shall meet on the call of the county agent in the county, or on the call of such other person as the Secretary may designate. Two members of the committee shall constitute a quorum. The Secretary shall prescribe rules governing the procedure of the committees, furnish forms and equipment necessary for the performance of their duties, and authorize and provide for the compensation of such clerical assistants as he deems may be required by any committee.

"(d) Committees established under this Act shall, in addition to the duties specifically imposed under this Act, perform such other duties under this Act as the Secretary may require of them.

"RESETTLEMENT PROJECTS

"SEC. 43. The Secretary is authorized to continue to perform such of the functions vested in him pursuant to Executive Order Numbered 7530 of December 31, 1936, as amended by Executive Order Numbered 7557 of February 19, 1937, and pursuant to Public Act Numbered 845, approved June 29, 1936 (49 Stat. 2035), as shall be necessary only for the completion and administration of those resettlement projects, rural rehabilitation projects for resettlement purposes, and land development and land utilization projects, for which funds have been allotted by the President, and the balances of funds available to the Secretary for said purposes which are unexpended on June 30, 1937, are authorized to be appropriated to carry out said purposes: Provided, That any land held by the United States under the supervision of the Secretary pursuant to said Executive orders may where suitable be utilized for the purposes of title I of this Act, and the Secretary may sell said land and make loans for the necessary improvement thereof to such individuals and upon such terms as shall be in accordance with the provisions of said title.

"GENERAL PROVISIONS APPLICABLE TO SALE

"SEC. 44. The sale or other disposition of any real property acquired by the Secretary pursuant to the provisions of this Act, or any interest therein, shall be subject to the reservation by the Secretary on behalf of the United States of not less than an undivided three-fourths of the interest of the United States in all coal, oil, gas, and other minerals in or under such property.

"TRANSFER OF AVAILABLE LANDS

"SEC. 45. The President may at any time in his discretion transfer to the Secretary or the Corporation any right, interest, or title held by the United States, and under the supervision of the Secretary, in any land which the President shall find suitable for the purposes of this Act, and the Secretary or the Corporation, as the case may be, may use and dispose of such land in such manner, and subject to such terms and conditions, as the President determines will best carry out the objectives of this Act.

"TRANSACTIONS WITH CORPORATIONS

"SEC. 46. Nothing in this Act shall be construed to authorize the making of any loan, or the sale or other disposition of real property or any interest therein, to any private corporation, for farming purposes.

"SURVEYS AND RESEARCH

"SEC. 47. The Secretary is authorized to conduct surveys, investigations, and research relating to the conditions and factors affecting, and the methods of accomplishing most effectively, the purposes of this Act, and may publish and disseminate information pertinent to the various aspects of his activities.

"VARIABLE PAYMENTS

"SEC. 48. The Secretary may provide for the payment of any obligation or indebtedness to him under this Act under a system of variable payments under which a surplus above the required payment will be collected in periods of above-normal production or prices and employed to reduce payments below the required payment in periods of subnormal production or prices.

"SET-OFF

"SEC. 49. No set-off shall be made against any payment to be made by the Secretary to any person under the provisions of this Act, by reason of any indebtedness of such person to the United States, and no debt due to the Secretary under the provisions of this Act shall be set off against any payments owing by the United States, unless the Secretary shall find that such set-off will not adversely affect the objectives of this Act.

"TAXATION

"SEC. 50. (a) All property which is being utilized to carry out the purposes of title I or title II of this Act (other than property used solely for administrative purposes) shall, notwithstanding that legal title to such property remains in the Secretary or the Corporation, be subject to taxation by the State, Territory, District, dependency, and political subdivision concerned, in the same manner and to the same extent as other similar property is taxed.

"(b) All property to which subsection (a) of this section is inapplicable which is held by the Secretary or the Corporation pursuant to this Act shall be exempt from all taxation now or hereafter imposed by the United States or any State, Territory, District, dependency, or political subdivision, but nothing in this subsection shall be construed as affecting the authority or duty of the Secretary under any other law to make payments in respect of any such property in lieu of taxes.

"BID AT FORECLOSURE

"SEC. 51. The Secretary is authorized and empowered to bid for and purchase at any foreclosure or other sale, or otherwise to acquire property pledged or mortgaged to secure any loan or other indebtedness owing under this Act; to accept title to any property so purchased or acquired; to operate or lease such property for such period as may be deemed necessary or advisable to protect the investment therein; and to sell or otherwise dispose of such property so purchased or acquired upon such terms and for such considerations as the Secretary shall determine to be reasonable, but subject to the reservation of the rights provided for in section 44.

"PENALTIES

"SEC. 52. (a) Whoever makes any material representation, knowing it to be false, for the purpose of influencing in any way the action of the Corporation upon any application, advance, discount, purchase, or repurchase agreement, contract of sale, lease, or loan, or any change or extension of any of the same by renewal, deferment of action or otherwise, or the acceptance, release, or substitution of security therefor, shall be punished by a fine of not more than $5,000 or by imprisonment for not more than two years, or both.

"(b) Whoever, being connected in any capacity with the Corporation, (1) embezzles, abstracts, purloins, or willfully misapplies any moneys, funds, securities, or other things of value, whether belonging to the Corporation or pledged or otherwise entrusted to it; or (2) with intent to defraud the Corporation, or any other body politic or corporate, or any individual, or to deceive, any officer, auditor, or examiner of the Corporation, makes any false entry in any book, report, or statement of, or to, the Corporation or draws any order, or issues, puts forth, or assigns any note or other obligation or draft, mortgage, judgment, or decree thereof; or (3) with intent to defraud the Corporation, participates or shares in or receives directly or indirectly any money, profit, property, or benefits through any transaction, loan, commission contract, or any other act of the Corporation, shall be punished by a fine of not more than $10,000 or by imprisonment for not more than five years, or both.

"(c) Whoever willfully shall conceal, remove, dispose of, or convert to his own use or to that of another, any property mortgaged or pledged to, or held by, the Corporation, as security for any obligation, shall be punished by a fine of not more than $5,000 or by imprisonment for not more than two years, or both.

"(d) The provisions of sections 112, 113, 114, 115, 116, and 117 of the Criminal Code of the United States (U. S. C., title 18, secs. 202–207, inclusive), insofar as applicable, are extended to apply to contracts or agreements of the Corporation, which for the purposes hereof shall be held to include advances, loans, discounts, purchase and repurchase agreements, contracts of sale, and leases; extensions and renewals thereof; and acceptances, releases, and substitutions of security therefor.

"(e) Whoever conspires with another to accomplish any of the acts made unlawful by the preceding provisions of this section shall, on conviction thereof, be subject to the same fine or imprisonment, or both, as is applicable in the case of conviction for doing such unlawful act.

"FEES AND COMMISSIONS PROHIBITED

"SEC. 53. No Federal officer, attorney, or employee shall, directly or indirectly, be the beneficiary of or receive any fee, commission, gift, or other consideration for or in connection with any transaction or business under this Act other than such salary, fee, or other compensation as he may receive as such officer, attorney, or employee. No member of a county committee established under section 42 shall knowingly make or join in making any certification prohibited by section 2 (c). Any person violating any provision of this section shall, upon conviction thereof, be punished by a fine of not more than $1,000 or imprisonment for not more than one year, or both.

"EXTENSION OF TERRITORIES

"SEC. 54. The provisions of this Act shall extend to the Territories of Alaska and Hawaii and to Puerto Rico. In the case of Alaska and Puerto Rico the term 'county' as used in this Act shall be deemed synonymous with the Territory, or any subdivision thereof as may be designated by the Secretary, and payments under section 33 of this Act shall be made to the Governor of the Territory or to the fiscal agent of such subdivision.

"SEPARABILITY

"SEC. 55. If any provision of this Act, or the application thereof to any person or circumstances, is held invalid, the remainder of the Act, and the application of such provisions to other persons or circumstances, shall not be affected thereby."

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment to the title of the bill.

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7562) to encourage and promote the ownership of farm homes and to make the possession of such homes more secure, to provide for the general welfare of the United States, to provide additional credit facilities for agricultural development, and for other purposes, submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the conferees and recommended in the accompanying conference report:

Farm-tenant provisions

The Senate amendment authorized the Corporation created in the amendment to acquire land and sell or lease it to persons eligible to the benefits of the act. The conference agreement with respect to the farm-tenant title follows the substance of the House bill with the following differences:

(1) Under the conference agreement, loans may be made for a period not in excess of 40 years. The House bill term was 30 years.

(2) Under the conference agreement, applications for loans, which are to be passed on by the county committee, are to be filed with the county agent in the county or with such person as the Secretary designates.

(3) The conference agreement contains a provision, adapted from the Senate amendment, under which the loan instruments are to contain a term that the borrower carry out such proper farming practices as the Secretary prescribes.

(4) The conference agreement contains a provision, adapted from the Senate amendment, under which the loan instruments are to contain a term to the effect that, without the consent of the Secretary, final payment may not be accepted or the Government's interest released prior to 5 years from the making of the loan.

(5) The conference agreement contains a provision, which was implicit in both the House bill and the Senate amendment, which expressly gives the Secretary the power to declare the entire amount due under the loan agreement immediately payable on default in the performance of, or upon any failure to comply with, any term or condition of the mortgage or deed of trust.

(6) The conference agreement rewords the provision of the House bill making the provisions of the Frazier-Lemke Act unavailable to the borrower until he has paid at least 15 percent of his indebtedness.

(7) The conference agreement contains a provision, adapted from the Senate amendment, under which the Secretary is, so far as practicable, to exercise his powers to avoid production expansion where expansion would defeat the parity policy of section 7 of the Soil Conservation and Domestic Allotment Act, and to assist beneficiaries of the title to become established on lands now under cultivation.

(8) Under the House bill, $50,000,000 was authorized to be appropriated for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, and no authorization was made for later years. The Senate amendment authorized that sum to be appropriated for the fiscal year 1940 and for each fiscal year thereafter. The conference agreement adopts the Senate provision.

(9) The conference agreement contains a provision under which administrative expenses for carrying out the farm-tenant title (personnel, overhead, etc.) are not to exceed in any fiscal year 5 percent of the amount appropriated for the fiscal year. The Senate amendment fixed a flat $400,000 as the upper limit.

Rehabilitation loans

There are no express provisions in the Senate amendment authorizing the making of rehabilitation loans as such, but the Senate amendment does authorize loans of the kind which may be made under title II of the House bill. These loans under the House bill and the Senate amendment may be made to the beneficiaries of the tenant provisions. The conference agreement contains the loan and debt adjustment provisions of title II of the House bill with two minor clarifying changes. Under the House bill the purposes for which loans could be made included "other farm needs." The first change made by the conference agreement is for the purpose of making clear that the phrase "other farm needs" includes minor repairs and minor improvements to real property. The second makes it clear that loans made under the title are renewable.

Submarginal land

The Senate amendment contains no express provision relating to retirement of submarginal land. The conference agreement contains the provisions of the House bill without change.

General provisions

Under the Senate amendment, a corporation is established to carry out its provisions. The House bill conferred the powers on the Secretary of Agriculture and did not provide for a corporation. The conference agreement establishes a corporation in the Department of Agriculture, the directors of which are to be Department officials, who serve without additional compensation. The Secretary of Agriculture can empower the corporation to exercise the functions conferred upon him under the farm tenant and rehabilitation loan titles and in the parts of the general title which relate to such subjects. When so authorized the act applies to the corporation just as it does to the Secretary. The corporation can exercise no powers under the submarginal land title. The corporation in order effectively to exercise the powers conferred upon it must have the power conferred in the Senate amendment to acquire, hold, and dispose of real and personal property. In the conference agreement, that power has been strictly limited, so that it is not a general one, but is confined only to the necessities of exercising the powers given it and must be exercised subject to the limitations of the act. Thus a granted corporate power with respect to real and personal property may not be construed to authorize a general property purchase and sales program contrary to the terms of titles I or II.

The remainder of the general title in the conference agreement is the same as the same title in the House bill with the following differences:

(1) The conference agreement omits the provision of the House bill under which reductions in personnel were to be determined in accordance with a geographical rule. The provision for requiring apportionments of appointments of personnel in accordance with the census has been made to apply only where it is practicable to do so.

(2) Under the House bill, land could be acquired without regard to section 355 of the Revised Statutes under which various restraints are put upon land acquisition. The conference agreement limits that exception so that acquisition of submarginal land must be in accordance with section 355 whenever that section by its terms applies.

(3) An express provision in the conference agreement which was adapted from the Senate amendment requires that litigation be conducted under the supervision of the Attorney General by the various district attorneys.

(4) Under the House bill, property held by the Secretary was tax exempt, but property which was in the hands of the beneficiaries of the tenant and rehabilitation provisions was subject to taxation. By reason of the inclusion of a corporation in the conference agreement it is necessary to carry over some of the provisions of the Senate amendment relating to taxation and tax exemption of the corporate property. The conference agreement provides that even though title is in the Secretary or the Corporation, real and personal property in the hands of beneficiaries of titles I and II is subject to taxation. Property of the Corporation or the Secretary (used for administrative purposes) and property owned by them and not in the hands of such beneficiaries is tax exempt. The Corporation's franchises, income, notes, etc., are tax exempt. An express provision of the conference agreement preserves the power and duty of the Secretary to make such payments in lieu of taxes on property held by him as are now authorized by law.

(5) The conference agreement provides that the county committee shall meet on the call of the county agent or such person as the Secretary may designate.

(6) The conference agreement contains a provision taken from the Senate amendment under which the President is authorized to transfer to the Secretary or the Corporation any land under the supervision of the Secretary which is suitable for use under the act and authorizes them to use and dispose of such land in such manner, and subject to such terms and conditions as the President determines will best carry out the objectives of the act.

(7) The conference agreement contains a prohibition on making of loans, and transferring real property to corporations for farming purposes. A comparable provision is found in the Senate amendment.

(8) Inasmuch as the House bill did not contain any provision for a corporation, the usual penalty provisions in relation to transactions by and property of Federal corporations were not included. The conference agreement provides for a corporation, and hence includes the penalty provisions of the Senate amendment.

(9) Section 49 of the House bill contained certain provisions prohibiting officers, attorneys, and employees of the United States to be the beneficiaries of any fees, commissions, or gifts in connection with any transaction or business of the United States under the bill. The conference agreement makes it clear that this provision is to apply to officers, attorneys, and employees of the Corporation.

The House recedes on the title and short title to the bill.

MARVIN JONES,
WALL DOXEY,
CLIFFORD R. HOPE,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, those who are interested have read the statement or have followed the changes in the measure. The measure as reported follows the general outlines of the House bill. The questions involved in title I which caused a discussion here are identical with the House provisions, with these exceptions: We retain the loan provisions; the Government does not take title to the land at all. In the House bill there was a provision that the loan period should not exceed 30 years, and that the man could not sell the property until he paid for the entire loan, except with the consent of the Secretary. Under the bill as reported the time is changed from not exceeding 30 years to not exceeding 40 years. The rate of interest remains the same; and we have this added provision: That if the man pays off the loan at any time he may have the deed, except that if he pays it off within the period of 5 years the Government will not issue a full release until the end of the 5-year period. There is a further provision broadening the statement in the House bill which stipulated that the purchaser should not waste the land or damage the buildings or injure the soil. That is clarified and added to by stipulating that he shall during this 5-year period, or during the period which he takes to pay, comply with such farm practices as the Secretary may find essential to the preservation and conservation of the soil.

There is this further provision put into the bill: The Senate bill provided for administration by a corporation instead of by the Secretary of Agriculture.

In the conference report we authorized the Secretary to use a corporation if he finds it advisable to do so. In other words, it is in his discretion; but that corporation must exercise only the functions that are conferred upon the Secretary under the terms of the bill.

That, I believe, covers the main changes in the measure.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES. I yield.

Mr. WARREN. The gentleman will recall that I offered a very important amendment which was agreed to by the House, which assigned over to this new agency certain farm lands in various States that had been acquired by the Resettlement Administration. Can the gentleman tell me what became of that amendment?

Mr. JONES. That amendment is retained in the bill.

Mr. MITCHELL of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES. I yield.

Mr. MITCHELL of Tennessee. The appraisement of the lands remains in the hands of the local committee?

Mr. JONES. In the hands of the local committee.

Mr. MITCHELL of Tennessee. The same as it was originally passed?

Mr. JONES. Just as it passed the House.

Mr. MITCHELL of Tennessee. That is true as to the applicant for the loan?

Mr. JONES. Yes.

Mr. MITCHELL of Tennessee. And also the appraisal of the land?

Mr. JONES. Yes.

Mr. NELSON. This local committee is made up of three farmers?

Mr. JONES. The local committee is made up of three farmers; yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES. I yield.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. As I understand, the same amounts remain available, $10,000,000 the first year, $25,000,000 the second, and $50,000,000 thereafter?

Mr. JONES. That is correct; $50,000,000 the third year and succeeding years. That change was made. The House bill only ran for 3 years. This change says "not to exceed $50,000,000 for each year after the second year." It is a continuing authorization rather than a limited one. I am glad the gentleman called my attention to that.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Is there any provision with reference to submarginal lands?

Mr. JONES. Yes. That remains as in the House bill.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES. I yield.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. What provision is made for title to the land? Are the lands subject to taxation?

Mr. JONES. The land is subject to taxes right along. The Government never owns the land, and therefore it never would be exempt from taxation.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. LUCAS].

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. Speaker, having spent more time on the problem of farm tenancy than any other major issue before Congress today, I am compelled at this juncture of farm-tenancy legislation to speak briefly again upon this vital issue.

I think the distinct difference between the House bill, which received overwhelming approval here, and the bill which was passed by the Senate is generally understood by the Members of the House. I think it is understood by all that the conferees faced a formidable task in reconciling the conflicting provisions of these two measures. There was a fundamental difference involved. There were two entirely different philosophies in the bills.

From the beginning of the hearings on farm-tenancy legislation last January I never altered my position in my antagonism toward the Government going into the purchasing or acquiring of lands for the purpose of resale to a tenant. I appreciate the fact that in days of economic stress and trouble, such as this Nation has been passing through during the last few years, it has become necessary in many instances to transfer a certain amount of local government to the Nation's Capital; but the great difficulty in this trend toward centralized government is to know when and where to stop. Certainly this is not an emergency piece of legislation, and the more local autonomy you can keep in legislation of this kind the better it will be for the future government of this country.

I know the type of tenants both bills seek to reach—industrious, thrifty, and independent tenants. I undertake to say at this point that had the Senate bill become the law of the land, and had any independent, honest, thrifty tenant thoroughly understood the provisions of the Senate bill, he never would have entered into partnership with Uncle Sam. Under the philosophy of the Senate bill, those independent Americans, many of whom in my community are leaders in public thought and social activities, would be placed under the direct control, supervision, and guidance of Uncle Sam as their landlord. This is bureaucratic control from Washington, which, in my opinion, is wholly unnecessary, and I make the prediction that if the time ever comes in America when Uncle Sam becomes landlord for a million tenants, which was the bright prospect under the Senate bill, within a short space of time, from 30 to 40 years, the next step will be for the Government to control all of the lands of the country, and land socialism will be the policy of the Government. When that last vestige of independent initiative is stripped from the farmers, then another different and strange so-called Utopia in government will replace the Government of our fathers.

In conclusion, I want to pay a tribute to the House conferees for standing by their guns, upon what seems to me to be one of the most important problems which any group of conferees was compelled to face.

Especially do I want to commend the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Agriculture for his rigidity, firmness, and fairness in acceding to the wishes of Members of the House. I think it is generally agreed that there are certain manifestations of farm tenancy dealing with the social fabric of the Nation which must be seriously considered in the future, and as an experiment in a problem where the field is broad and fertile I hope that we are in the beginning assuming the one and only justifiable course. [Applause.]

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUCAS. I yield.

Mr. SABATH. I fully appreciate that the gentleman has devoted a great deal of time and study to this problem and that probably few Members are better posted or better informed upon this subject than the gentleman from Illinois. Do I understand that the gentleman is willing for this conference report to be adopted because he considers the legislation to be merely an experiment and not a permanent fixed policy of the Government?

Mr. LUCAS. No; I think that in the beginning it will be an experiment, but that if it is handled properly it will become a permanent policy of the Government to benefit the farm tenants of this country.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. PACE].

Mr. PACE. Mr. Speaker, I hesitate to take issue with the distinguished gentleman who heads the Committee on Agriculture, but I say quite frankly that if this conference report is adopted it will be the first step by Congress to put the farmers of this Nation into irons.

Did you know that there has been added to this bill a provision that every man who secures a dollar to get him a home must contract and agree "to carry out such farming practices as the Secretary of Agriculture shall prescribe"? For 40 long years the man who borrows a dollar under this bill is under the absolute domination of the Secretary of Agriculture, whosoever he may be. It is not a question as to Mr. Wallace, the present Secretary, in whom we all have confidence; but I warn you gentlemen that you are now taking a step along a road that runs down through the years. You do not know, and I do not know who the next Secretary of Agriculture will be. I for one will never consent that he shall tell the farmers in my State how, what, when, and where they may plant and harvest their crops.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PACE. I do.

Mr. MICHENER. Right along the line the gentleman has suggested, the Bureau of the Census advises us that 42 percent of the farmers of the country are tenant farmers. As suggested by the gentleman from Georgia, we will by this action be giving the Secretary of Agriculture absolute control to regiment over 42 percent of the farmers in the country if this bill does what it is presumed to do.

Mr. PACE. Mr. Speaker, I appeal to the Members to read the provisions that have been added to the bill.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I think that my good friend from Georgia is unduly excited over this provision. This will not apply to any 42 percent of the farmers. It will apply only to those who want to avail themselves of the benefits of the bill and who are given special concessions of a low interest rate not exceeding 3 percent, and a period of loan not exceeding 40 years.

It is my feeling that if we are to have a farm program—and those who went through the agonies of the period when we did not have a farm program know that the only sensible thing is to have one—if we are to have a farm program somebody must administer it. Our present farm program is based on the soundest principles, those of soil conservation. Certainly it is my thought that if we are going to have that as the basis, and if we are going to charge a low interest rate and encourage these people, those who avail themselves of the benefit of this legislation should submit to the same farming practices that are required of the others who carry out the farm program already adopted.

Mr. PACE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES. I yield.

Mr. PACE. There should not be any difference between us. The gentleman must agree that under this bill every single person who gets a dollar must agree to carry out such practices as the Secretary of Agriculture may prescribe, and that that has nothing in the world to do with general conservation but is in addition thereto.

Mr. JONES. I may state to the gentleman that certainly the administrative authority on the one will probably have the same requirements in the other, for it will be the same administrative authority in both instances. Certainly somebody has to name the conditions and we cannot do that in the bill. I would rather have the Secretary of Agriculture, who is administering the program for the other farmers, stipulate the conditions than to have it done by anyone else; and, certainly, I would not want just to permit them to have special rates with no obligation.

Mr. DOXEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES. I yield.

Mr. DOXEY. I appreciate the action of the chairman in yielding to me to make an observation for the benefit of the gentleman from Georgia. I do not know whether the gentleman from Georgia ever served on a conference committee or not, but if he has he will appreciate the difficulties that face the conferees.

This provision with reference to administration is taken from the Senate bill and not the House bill. Substantially the same provision was offered in the House as an amendment to the House bill but was defeated. This and one or two minor propositions is about all we brought back from the conference. I do not believe the gentleman from Georgia means to be critical. I am sure that he is interested in the program. He must know that we had to yield somewhat to the Senate. If the bill is not entirely satisfactory, the gentleman should feel charitably toward it, because the Senate and the House tried to work for the benefit of agriculture.

We are certain of one thing: When the Government lends money it should try to see that the man who gets the benefit will farm in the right sort of way.

Mr. HOPE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES. I yield to the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. HOPE. In view of the statement of the gentleman from Georgia, may I ask the chairman of the Agricultural Committee if he knows of any individual, corporation, or organization of any kind which would sell land to a man with nothing down and simply an option? Some supervision has to be exercised over the man while he is paying for it.

Mr. JONES. I do not know of any who would do that and I never heard of anyone like that. As a rule there are in some of the mortgages issued by private companies stipulations that would almost astonish you if you read them carefully, but they are safeguarding provisions. All the Secretary can do if any of these covenants is violated is to declare the balance due and leave the man where he started. All he can do is take away the privileges which the Government extended in the first place.

Mr. HOPE. Of course, we assume that the purchaser goes into this with his eyes open.

Mr. JONES. He does not have to take advantage of this opportunity if he does not want to.

Mr. HOPE. He does not have to accept the provision.

Mr. JONES. The Senate conferees, of course, want the Government to purchase these lands and go through a lease period and not give title to the purchaser until the end of 20 years. I hope the gentleman feels this is a much less drastic provision than that.

Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. PACE] 3 additional minutes.

Mr. PACE. Mr. Speaker, I do not want to be misunderstood. This provision has nothing to do with preventing waste. That was in the bill as we passed it, and I favor it. It has nothing to do with keeping the property insured. That is all right. It is provided by section 4, page 3, of the conference report that the Secretary of Agriculture shall prescribe rules and regulations for operating the farm, what he shall plant, how he shall plant, when he shall gather, how he shall gather, what warehouse the products shall be taken to, and provides, if you please, if you do not do every single thing that the Secretary of Agriculture tells you to do he has the right to declare your loan in default, foreclose and take your home.

I say that is important, Mr. Speaker, because today we are just beginning. If we start off with such a provision and put the tenants of this Nation in irons, we will certainly see the day when there will be millions of tenants in this Nation under such domination.

Mr. LUCAS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PACE. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. LUCAS. Admitting what the gentleman says is correct——

Mr. PACE. There cannot be any doubt about that.

Mr. LUCAS. Does the gentleman believe any independent, thrifty, honest, frugal tenant, which this bill seeks to reach, will enter into a partnership with Uncle Sam under such circumstances?

Mr. PACE. If he will not, then the bill means nothing.

Mr. LUCAS. That ought to satisfy the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. PACE. I want a tenant bill. I have 24,000 tenants in my district, and I want to help those poor fellows, but as this matter stands today you compel me to vote against a conference report to help the men in my district.

Mr. ZIMMERMAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PACE. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. ZIMMERMAN. Since the Government is putting up all the money and taking all the risk, does not the gentleman think if the tenant wants to avail himself of assistance from the Government he should subscribe to these requirements?

Mr. PACE. I am sorry, but I cannot vote under any circumstances to make the tenants of my district subject to the whim of any man in the city of Washington.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. MICHENER. Will the gentleman from Texas yield?

Mr. JONES. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. MICHENER. Is it not true that there has been but one bill affecting agriculture passed by the Congress within the last few years containing the regimentation that this bill does in this particular section, and I refer to the potato-control bill? This is the only bill that has been before the Congress that has contained the potato-control regulation which the country so condemned?

Mr. JONES. I do not think the gentleman would even suggest that comparison if he had taken the time to read the entire bill and compare it. This is a purely voluntary transaction. The potato bill levied a tax on all potato growers regardless of whether they entered into the program or not. As a starter in the present program the Government is going to lend 100 percent. It is going to lend that money to tenants who are selected by local committees. Several concessions are made. It is not amiss, in my opinion, for the authorities who have this matter in charge and those who will administer it to have the right to see that the land is not abused and that the security which the Government has under this program is not dissipated. The whole conference group is of the opinion this is a reasonable provision.

Mr. ZIMMERMAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. ZIMMERMAN. Is it not a fact in addition to putting up all the money to buy this land, the Government even agrees to make subsistence loans to the tenant farmer?

Mr. JONES. Yes.

Mr. ZIMMERMAN. And it is no more than fair or reasonable to require him to follow certain directions of the Department?

Mr. JONES. This is not regimentation, and I do not favor regimentation.

Mr. BURDICK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES. I yield to the gentleman from North Dakota.

Mr. BURDICK. I was interested in what the gentleman from Georgia said a while ago. He stated he has 24,000 tenants in his district. May I ask him, under the terms of this bill, how many of the tenants can be aided?

Mr. JONES. It depends upon the appropriations to be made by the Congress. If the thing is worked properly, I think this program will be more beneficial as time goes on.

Mr. BURDICK. I mean the first year.

Mr. JONES. There will be comparatively few. There is only $10,000,000 made available the first year. However, practically all the great programs of this country started modestly. Usually when they started too ambitiously they were bogged down.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. HOFFMAN. The House bill is so much better than the proposal advanced in the Senate that there is no comparison. I agree with the chairman. If the Government is to lend this money, it should be protected against waste and the other things that naturally follow improper farming. However, I recall that on the last page of the application for a rehabilitation loan—and I have cited this fact here before (RECORD, p. 4199)—there was a requirement that the borrower should not do anything that was in opposition to the A. A. A. program until the money borrowed and interest thereon was paid. Under this act can the Secretary go that far?

Mr. JONES. I do not think so. There is no authorization for that, and I would very much oppose any such provision.

Mr. HOFFMAN. I should hope so.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the conference report.

The previous question was ordered.

The conference report was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

MORSE DRY DOCK & REPAIR CO.—VETO MESSAGE OF THE PRESIDENT (H. DOC. NO. 293)

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following veto message of the President of the United States, which was read by the Clerk:

To the House of Representatives:

I return, without my approval, the bill H. R. 2757, entitled "An act to carry out the findings of the Court of Claims in the claim of Morse Drydock & Repair Co."

This claim is based upon an alleged unpaid balance of the charge of the Morse Drydock & Repair Co. against the United States Mail Steamship Co., Inc., for labor and materials furnished in reconditioning the steamships George Washington, America, Princess Matoika, Pocohontas, Susquehanna, and Potomac, delivered to the steamship company pursuant to a contract entered into by it with the United States Shipping Board on May 28, 1920, by the terms of which the steamship company agreed to recondition said vessels, at its own cost and expense, promptly upon the delivery of the vessels to it, and to charter them for a period of 5 years at the rate of $3.50 per net register ton per month.

The United States Mail Steamship Co., Inc., contracted with the claimant, the Morse Drydock & Repair Co., for the work of reconditioning these six vessels. The negotiations leading up to the contracts were with the steamship company, and the claimant at all times during the work of reconditioning understood that the steamship company would pay for the work and did not look to the Shipping Board for payment.

A receiver was appointed to take over the assets of the United States Mail Steamship Co., Inc., on August 16, 1921, and said company was adjudged a bankrupt on November 14, 1921, by the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York. At the time of the appointment of a receiver the steamship company was indebted to the Shipping Board on account of accrued charter hire in the sum of $501,552.93. A settlement agreement was entered into between the United States and the trustees in bankruptcy, by which the trustees assigned and transferred to the United States all interest in any money or accounts due the steamship company or the trustees, in consideration of which the United States withdrew its proof of claim for the amount of the accrued charter hire and paid to the trustees the sum of $175,000. The trustees thereupon released the United States from liability for all claims against the bankrupt estate.

The approval of this bill would give the claim of the Morse Drydock & Repair Co. a preferred status, to the exclusion of other creditors.

Had it been established that the United States is morally liable for the balance due on account of the repairs to these vessels, under the charter party-agreement payment should be made to the bankrupt estate.

For this reason and the reasons set forth in the attached letter, I do not feel justified in approving this bill.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, July 12, 1937.

The SPEAKER. The objections of the President will be entered at large upon the Journal.

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland. Mr. Speaker, I move that the message and the bill be referred to the Committee on Claims and be printed under the rule.

The motion was agreed to.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Monday next, after the disposition of the business on the Speaker's table and the completion of the legislative business of the day, the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. KNUTSON] may be permitted to address the House for 30 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

CONTROL OF OUTBREAKS OF INSECT PESTS

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 431) making an appropriation for the control of outbreaks of insect pests.

The Clerk read the title of the joint resolution.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, may I inquire of the gentleman from Missouri if he can indicate how long it will take to dispose of the matter which he has just presented.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, this bill has been reported out by the unanimous vote of the committee. So far as I know there is no opposition to the measure. It is a matter of national emergency.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my objection.

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognized the gentleman from Missouri upon his assurance that there was no opposition to the joint resolution and that it was a matter of great emergency.

Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the joint resolution, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That for carrying out the purposes of and for expenditures authorized under the public resolution entitled "Joint resolution making funds available for the control of incipient or emergency outbreaks of insect pests or plant diseases, including grasshoppers, Mormon crickets, and chinch bugs", approved April 6, 1937, there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $1,000,000, to remain available until June 30, 1938: Provided, That in the discretion of the Secretary of Agriculture, no part of this appropriation shall be expended for control of grasshoppers, Mormon crickets, or chinch bugs in any State until such State has provided the organization or materials and supplies necessary for cooperation: Provided further, That transportation of control materials purchased under this appropriation shall be under conditions and means determined by the Secretary of Agriculture as most advantageous to the Federal Government: Provided further, That procurements under this appropriation may be made by open-market purchases notwithstanding the provisions of section 3709 of the Revised Statutes of the United States (U. S. C., title 41, sec. 5).

With the following committee amendment:

Page 2, line 5, after the colon, insert the following: "Provided further, That this appropriation shall be expended under the personal supervision and direction of the Secretary of Agriculture, who shall make a detailed report to the Secretary of the Senate and the Clerk of the House of Representatives of the several items of expenditure made hereunder."

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, the Budget estimate for this purpose submitted last April provided for an expenditure of $2,000,000. The Committee on Appropriations, in pursuance of its policy of holding down expenditures to a minimum, reported a bill for half the amount, which was passed by the House and became a law.

But the infestations this year have been unusually heavy. In fact, reports received through the Department of Agriculture and from Members of the House indicate that it is perhaps the heaviest for many years. As a result, the first appropriation has been exhausted, and unless further funds are available the loss of crops in many States will be serious. The loss in corn alone will amount to a national catastrophe. All corn reserves are being exhausted and importations from abroad have been required to supply barest domestic requirements. It is believed that prompt action will save corn and other crops not yet matured.

This bill appropriates the remaining million dollars recommended by the Budget. The funds are being economically administered, and practically the entire amount is being spent for materials. The States and local subdivisions are providing transportation and distribution, and Federal appropriations are applied directly without material overhead expenditures.

The time is short. Every 24 hours count, and the bill should be messaged over this afternoon. For that reason I ask for a vote on the bill and amendment without extended debate.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members so desiring may have 5 legislative days in which to extend their remarks in the RECORD on this bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, when the Private Calendar was last called the Committee on Immigration had a number of bills on the calendar known as omnibus bills. The first bill was considered by the House, and about 7 of the 15 titles were considered. I thought the further consideration of that bill would be the first order of business. The Committee on Claims has not had a day this session, and I am willing to have my bills passed over on the next calendar day provided this can be done without prejudice to the bills to which I have referred.

The SPEAKER. The Chair may state that the arrangement heretofore made by which it was contemplated that the Committee on Claims should have the right to call up today an omnibus claims bill was made by unanimous consent. If the gentleman will consult the rules of the House, he will see the Committee on Claims has not had its regular call with respect to omnibus claims bills and will not have until the third Tuesday of the month, which is next Tuesday. Therefore the gentleman has under no condition lost any right his committee might have had under the circumstances.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Does the bill from the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization retain its place on the calendar?

The SPEAKER. The bill to which the gentleman refers, of course, retains its place on the calendar.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. On the next calendar day?

The SPEAKER. Absolutely. However, the Chair further understood, although he is not able to verify it, that there was some arrangement by which if we passed the so-called alien bill these bills to which the gentleman has referred would all be passed over.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I agree with the Speaker, but I made this parliamentary inquiry in order to preserve the rights of the Members who have bills in the omnibus bill and the rights of the committee.

The SPEAKER. The Chair may state that all of the rights of the committee will be preserved.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I thank the Chair.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein a letter sent to each individual Member of the House by Senator ADAMS, of Colorado.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Colorado?

There was no objection.

(Mr. ROMJUE, Mr. REES of Kansas, Mr. BLOOM, Mr. COFFEE of Washington, and Mr. PACE asked and were given permission to extend their own remarks in the RECORD.)

THE FEDERAL JUDICIARY

The SPEAKER. Under the previous order of the House, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SUMNERS] is recognized for 1 hour.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I am going to try this afternoon to be useful to the public interest in a situation which we must all regard as very serious.

When we stop to take our soundings, when we look at the stars for our direction, when we read the signs of the times, no American cititzen can fail to appreciate the gravity of our situation. It does not make any difference what your views may be about other matters, no intelligent American citizen can fail to appreciate the seriousness of the situation. When we look about us at the nations of the earth today, we know that free government, popular government on earth, relatively speaking, is disappearing. For anybody with our governmental traditions to face that situation and know that the very identical things which are afflicting the other nations of the earth are also afflicting this Nation, he must be serious.

We are assembled here this afternoon at a time which the historians of the future will record as the highest peak in many respects in human history within 500 years.

When we make an examination of the attitude which obtains among the persons who are operating the functioning machinery of this Government, I say, with all respect, we must recognize that much of the hope of the Nation rests in the House of Representatives—you, in this tragic hour of the world's existence.

We know that as a people, as a Nation, we are at the crossroads in America. Soon we must determine whether or not we are going to preserve Anglo-Saxon institutions in this country or join the other nations of the earth under a dictator. Do not let anybody fool himself about that. People do not have dictators merely because they choose to have dictators. They have dictators when their problems exceed the governmental capacity of their people. Now, write that down, please. No people clothed with the power of self-government ever came under the government of a dictator, except by conquest, unless they had lost the ability to provide in themselves an agency through which popular government could function.

The work of government has to be carried on. This is provided for in the economy of God Almighty. The fact that there shall be government is fixed in human necessity. The people of Germany lost the power to govern and Hitler came to govern when the people of Germany failed to provide in themselves an agency through which the Government of Germany could be carried on and meet its problems.

We think these things cannot come to us. We are deceived by a perfectly ridiculous egotism. Only the greatest people who ever trod this earth can save this country from a dictator. We confront a situation this hour, when I stand here and you sit there, that requires a united government, a united people. Is there anybody who has any sense who does not know that the problems of this hour challenge us to produce the most united people and the most capable people who ever assumed the responsibility of government on the face of this earth? Is there anybody at this hour who has any sense who does not know that?

We are dealing with some practical things today. Does anybody challenge that? What is happening to us? Are we in America on this day moving toward a greater solidarity of the people? Are we moving in America this day toward a greater solidarity in the Senate of the United States? Are we moving in America today toward a greater cooperation of effort between the President of the United States and the legislative branch of the Government? If not, in what direction, then, are we moving?

I am going to talk a little horse sense this afternoon, just plain, practical horse sense, to men and women who sit under the greatest challenge of responsibility, so far as I know, in human history since time began.

I am going to talk a little about the Supreme Court situation, and I shall try to do it in a very helpful way. I want to talk just as plainly this afternoon as I can, and, as God knows my heart, I want to do good for my country. I am for the President of the United States and I am for my country. I do not want to discuss the provisions of the pending bill. I want to direct your attention, however, to the havoc which that bill is now working in the solidiarity of the Nation. That is what I am talking about, and with the hope though vain it may be that as officers and as a people we may calmly consider whether there still remains differences of sufficient substance to justify this concentration of public interest and effort upon that which up to this time has brought only confusion, discord, and hurt to that solidarity which it is essential for us to have in order to have the strength and unity of effort to make our people secure in these times of world-wide chaos.

That is all that I am talking about. I am asking the American Nation what ought to be done under the circumstances. A few years ago this administration came to responsibility. It came in in an hour of great responsibility and of public danger. One of the most fascinatingly interesting, psychologically, governmental phenomena to be observed among the people of the earth occurred. I was here during the Wilson administration, and I saw that thing happen then. Our people, Anglo-Saxon people, have the genius, fascinatingly interesting, the remarkable genius of sensing the existence of a condition which requires a quicker pick-up and stronger power than their institutions ordinarily afford. I saw it in the Wilson administration, when, instead of turning the Government over to a dictator, as other peoples do, the people gave temporary power to Mr. Wilson to do all that a dictator could do, and had the genius to retain the power, to control its exercise, if necessary, and the ability to recapture and distribute that power. I do not know whether Mr. Wilson misunderstood his commission, his trusteeship, or not; but when that interesting time came, when, under the influence of the same Anglo-Saxon governmental instinct, the time came when that governmental power should have been sent back into the Anglo-Saxon institutions, Mr. Wilson did not recognize it.

He was not well. I pray God that same thing may not happen this time. Mr. Speaker, when this administration came into power, that identical thing happened again. The people said stand by the President. I stood by the President, not always, but generally. I wanted always to stand with him. He did a good job—a mighty good job, but let nobody misunderstand what it cost to do that job. I am not talking merely about these billions of dollars that were expended, but also about what it cost us in morale, what it cost us in self-reliance, what it cost us in independence from the individual up through the small community and the State. Thirty-six billion dollars is the Government's debt today—and $2,000,000,000 more this year have been spent than we have taken in. Where is that moving us toward? It is moving us toward bankruptcy, of course. The President wants to turn about, he says, and I believe him. I want to help him. If I can help to prevent this House splitting wide open, if I can help to prevent cleavage between the President and this House, or substantial parts of it, at this time when he needs and the country needs just the reverse of what is in the Senate and what is threatened in the House, I will be helping the President and I will be helping my country, I believe, more than those who are advising him now, when there is not enough left in this controvery to justify the hurt which is being done by its continuance.

I honestly believe that with all the conviction which the best advised judgment I can command gives to me. That is the only reason I am speaking today. When these States and municipalities, when individuals, private citizens, and others are moving on the Federal Treasury, when there is no money in the Treasury, where is that leading us? It is moving us toward bankruptcy in money and in self-reliance and independence and in those virtues that make it possible for a people to preserve a system of self-government. [Applause.] I believe the President recognizes that fact. I believe he is getting ready, and the country is getting ready, and you are getting ready, to tackle this job. And it is not going to be an easy job either. There is going to be lots of trouble about it. I do not want in this House, if we can avoid it, what is happening in and to the other body.

I think usually we have to speak of the Senate as "the other body." That reminds me of a story I heard down home. There had been too many folks killed in a gambling house in my town, so they posted a rule that there could not be any personalities. In a poker game one fellow caught another on the other side of the table cheating. He drew back his chair, put his six-shooter on the table, and said: "I am not going to call no personalities, I am not talking about nobody, but if I catch that red-headed, one-eyed son-of-a-gun cheating again I am going to shoot tother eye out." [Laughter.]

I hope I am not, in telling that little story, being disrespectful of the Senate. I certainly do not intend to be. I am concerned for my friends over there. This is not a situation of their choosing. Since February 5 this controversy has worn and consumed their energy and self-restraint and poured out among them vials of bitterness which has gone deeply into their relationships. That is not good for them. It is not good for the country. For the sake of the membership of the House, for the sake of the country, I devoutly hope that experience and that hurt can be avoided by the consideration and sound judgment of those in responsibility.

I do not believe, as I size up the situation, as I consider our difficulties, with the friction developing worse and worse within our governmental organization, that we will be in shape to tackle our job. Is that sound? [Applause.] I mean just horse sense. I am talking about horse sense. I do not think with the friction that is developing we can do the job. How important is it to do the job? It is as important as the hope of liberty in the world. We hold the key position in the world today for free government as against autocracy. I am not trying to make a speech. I am just talking to the brains of thinking men and women in this solemn hour today. The Committee on the Judiciary of the House has tried to keep this controversy out of the House, and I have no apology to make for it; and at the same time we have been doing something to meet the condition against which the other bill, it is claimed, is directed. I will discuss that directly. The Senate and the House are different. Over in the Senate they have just a little crowd relatively. They know each other pretty well; it is a sort of club. When one of them says something mean to another, and the other says, "You are another one", probably knowing each other so very well there is not much fussing about it, and they just say, "Come on, let us go to lunch." At least that has been true. It is not so true now. This controversy, I am afraid, is cutting deeply. But you bring that issue into this House, transplanting as you would in a measure the bitterness in the Senate, you would split this House from top to bottom and it would not heal soon.

Then I say to my distinguished friend for whom I have the deepest affection, the leader of the House, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. RAYBURN], and to my equally distinguished and beloved friend, the Speaker, who sits there, when that is done, do not try to tell me that this House will be in any shape to follow you in solidarity and unity of effort in doing its share of the job of saving this country. I may do a bad job in this effort, but I am trying to be helpful today to my leader, my Speaker, this House, my President, and my country .

I am appealing to the thinking sense of grown men and women who have their heads on their own shoulders. What we need in America more than anything else is to put our feet on the ground [applause] and put our heads on our own shoulders. There used to be an expression down among our boys in Tennessee when a fellow was showing a disposition to get a little flighty in the head, "Keep your shirt on!" Then we need to sit down and give this thing a little thinking, and when we give it a little thinking, get a picture of the world and see what is happening at the other end of the building and what is happening between those there and the President, see what would happen here. Look at the condition of this country and the job ahead of us, we then ask ourselves if it is good, old-fashioned horse sense from anybody's standpoint to split us from top to bottom when the Supreme Court is already definitely moving out of the field where governmental policy is fixed; and when already under the laws you passed this session a vacancy has resulted and it only awaits nomination by the President and confirmation by the Senate to fill that vacancy and to start the inflow of new blood into the Supreme Court. The work which we have got to do to make our Nation secure against the perils which are abroad in the world today only a united people have got a chance to do. Have we got any sense? I mean, have we got any real sense? This thing which is going on is just not sensible. It can be avoided.

I hope I am not being offensive to anybody. If under the zeal of trying to drive home this one point I should give offense, especially to those who have for weeks been under the strain of this controversy, I will be deeply sorry. There is no human being who can look at this situation, analyze the situation and the problems of this country and not know they are challenging us as a people to be the greatest generation of people that ever walked the earth. There is not anybody who can analyze this situation and not know that we have a situation that challenges us Representatives to be the most efficient, patriotic, level-headed men and women who ever sat in this Chamber. These are not ordinary times. The balance sheet is being struck, nations and civilizations are being brought to judgment. Those who will not be instructed by the experience of others are being sent to the school of their own experience and made to pay for their tuition.

I want to congratulate the House on its program with reference to this thing that is now tearing this country wide open today. You put through a program here at this session. You put through the same program here dealing with the Supreme Court that a good, level-headed doctor would put through when called in to treat a patient with a similar disorder. You put through the same program in this House that a good mechanic would put through.

If you went to him with the gas line of your car stopped up, if you took to him a car that was not getting the normal intake of new gas, he would not put some dynamite under the car and blow it up. No. He would open up that line and see if he could not get the engine working. He might do something later more radical if that did not work, but that is what he would do first. Then you would not hurt the car as a vehicle needed for the service of your family.

Now, let us see about this Supreme Court thing. Let us just talk common sense about it now. This House appreciated the fact that there was not a normal intake of new blood in that Court. You made an examination, a sort of diagnosis. You located an obstruction which blocked up the intake. We found that in the act of 1919, which gave to all other Federal judges the right to retire instead of resign after 70 years of age with 10 years' service, and to take light work retaining their judicial status with this constitutional arrangement, we had denied these Supreme Court judges by specific designation that right to retire. We had given to every other Federal judge in this country the right to retire instead of resigning, except Supreme Court judges. What does that mean? We have to be fair about this. It means that we said to them, "Stay on the job right where you are. You cannot have any lighter work. If you leave that bench, you have to check out and cease to be a judge."

Public opinion had something to say about it, too. About that time Mr. Holmes, who was approaching his ninetieth year, was on the bench, and the papers were writing about the grand old man still on the job. Let us be fair about this. Everybody was going over to the Supreme Court to see the grand old man nearly 90 years old, who was still on the job earning his salary. That was not all. The Constitution provides that their salaries are for life; they have their job for life, subject to good behavior. We had passed a law in 1868 which provided that these judges, at the age and with the service I mentioned a while ago, could resign and we would give them their salary for life. With that law on the statute book, Mr. Holmes came off the bench and we cut his salary $10,000 for believing in us. What did that mean to all the other men on the Supreme Bench? It meant that we had not only said to them in 1919, "We want you to stay on the bench", but in doing to Mr. Holmes what we did, we said to them, "If you fellows dare to get off the bench we may fine you the full amount of your salary, guaranteed by the Constitution only if you stay on the bench." Is that not right? I mean that is the fact. The first invitation, the first intimation given to these Supreme Court Justices that it would be agreeable for them to retire as other judges had been privileged since 1919 was given by the act passed by this House at this session of the Congress.

That is not quite all. Your committee presented a bill at the last Congress proposing this privilege of retirement, which other judges had had since 1919, and with the question squarely and specifically presented to this part of the policy-fixing body of the Nation, you said "no" by defeating the bill. That bill was not handled right, but still there was the specific denial of the right to quit regular service on the bench as that right had been given to all other Federal judges.

We removed that obstruction and gave Nature a chance. We gave these judges the same right to retire previously given other judges. Was not that the thing to do? Is not that what a good doctor would have done under similar circumstances; what a good farmer would do? Practical people dealing with practical things—and government is practical—would first recognize that God Almighty is the mighty force in the universe and that the thing to do, at least in the first instance, is to take Him into partnership, work in obedience to His laws, and give Nature a chance first.

That is what we tried to do last session. I brought that bill over here, and it was just plain, downright dumbness on my part or we would have put it through. I will tell you a secret about it, and I am ashamed to admit it: I just naturally overestimated the intelligence of the House. [Laughter.]

We did not handle it right, but this year we reintroduced it; we brought it over in the House. It was your bill; you passed it. You removed the obstruction insofar as you are concerned. The Senate passed it. The President signed it. And notwithstanding the difficulties that were brought about by the great disturbance, one of these judges quit the bench under the provisions of that law. The President can fill that vacancy when he chooses. This Justice was one who, as frequently as any other, perhaps, had decided against what is designated as New Deal legislation. That created a condition with regard to that Court which makes it possible to change the relationship as much as adding two new judges would. There was no controversy, no noise. Nothing was done that might imperil the confidence of the people in that Court as an institution. I want to tell you that it is a pretty ticklish job when you begin to hit over the head indiscriminately people who operate the functioning machinery of our system of government. Now, sometimes you have to do it, but it is a pretty ticklish job, it is a pretty dangerous job in times like these. The average man does not draw a distinction between that intangible thing that we love with the holy love called patriotism and the human beings who are operating its functioning machinery. When you destroy the confidence of the people in the persons who are operating that machine it is just one step beyond that until you have destroyed their confidence in their Government.

It was our duty to do something about the situation to make it easier for new blood to flow into that Court, a sort of surgical operation; but to be done with a surgical instrument, not a meat ax. I wish the President had given this bill which he endorsed a chance before that other proposition was turned loose. I cannot help, but believe he was imposed on by somebody who did not want results to come that route. If I may say with apology and deep respect, I believe he is being imposed on now. I wish he would, if he can find the time, give this thing a thinking through. I want to be helpful to him. This is no pleasant job for me.

We gave Nature a chance and Nature started the inflow of new blood that had been artificially obstructed by acts of Congress. That is not all, this House of Representatives has exercised in a quiet, respectful way its pressure upon that Court to try to get it moving out of the field where governmental policy is fixed. Beginning with Marshall the Supreme Court has been moving further and a little further into the field where governmental policy is fixed. Your committee, without "hollering" its head off about it, has been trying to ease them out a bit. We did not agree with the decision of the Supreme Court in the Municipal Bankruptcy Act. We brought in here as your servants another bill recently through which we hope to present again that issue to the Supreme Court; in other words, we are asking for a rehearing before that Court on that issue.

We indicated to them without getting into the press and "hollering" our heads off that we did not believe that that decision ought to stand as the law of the land, that we want to present it again. I have heard it being said around here that one of the Justices of the Supreme Court who changed his attitude and sustained important legislation of this Congress—I have heard it talked around that he "is a turncoat." Now, do you think that sort of talk is going to help the House in trying to get this Court upon a rehearing to hold that the States can constitutionally do what we believe they can do? Did you ever hear of a lawyer, who, securing a rehearing in a case that had been decided against him and got a favorable decision on rehearing, running out of the courthouse pointing back to the judge who had decided with him, hollering "Turncoat! Turncoat! I presented my matter to you, you gave me a rehearing, and upon the rehearing you decided for me; there is something crooked about it"? I am talking practical sense only. This illustrates the strain, the danger of letting this thing go on. That is why I am making this talk today. We are in no frame of mind to do the public business. There is not enough left in this controversy to justify the hurt and the danger from what we are doing.

That is not all this House has done this session. The House agreed that the acts of Congress were being too easily set aside on constitutional grounds. What did the House do about it? I am proud of this House in this hour of—well, I cannot say it, I was just about to talk about [laughter]—in this hour of hysteria. Boys, I am proud of you, sitting here in the council of the Nation with your feet on the ground and your heads on your shoulders, doing your own thinking. Under God Almighty may we do our own thinking. I do not find anywhere else in this Government the stability that I find in the House of Representatives today. When you found that the courts were too easily setting aside acts of Congress, what did you do? You passed a bill giving the Government of the United States the right in private litigation when the question of constitutionality of an act of Congress arises, to send its chief law officer into the courts to defend the constitutionality of that act of Congress and to appeal directly to the Supreme Court from an adverse decision. You also passed a bill this session making it easier to get rid of crooked judges. These are three things that the House has done at this session to straighten out this situation.

I am not going to take very much more of your time. I want to ask the people of this Nation, I want to appeal to the responsible officers of the Nation, to consider what is happening under your program in the House, and what is happening during the effort to put the other program through; and, too, if it would not be better under all the circumstances to cease attempting to press through what I believe is an unnecessary piece of legislation, considering what has already happened and what we may reasonably expect to happen when we stop shouting to each other, and things quiet down among a people who proceed with mutual respect toward each other. [Applause, the Members rising.]

Let us give a chance to the legislation which has passed this House to secure results. Two of these bills are yet to be acted on in the Senate. That is not an unreasonable request. It is not an unreasonable suggestion. This is not the last session of the Congress. If this were the last time when we can have a Congress, there might be some reason in the minds of some gentlemen for risking the solidarity of this Nation by continuing to try to put through this last bill now. This is a thing that people have very deep convictions about. It is not a matter of good people on one side and bad people on the other. This proposition in the minds of many honest, patriotic people reaches to the foundation of our governmental structure.

Even as the Court was constituted before the retirement referred to, it has upheld the program recently presented. Since those decisions one of the dissenting Justices has quit. This gives the opportunity to appoint somebody else. This would mean, unless they misjudge the man who is appointed, that reducing on one side and adding to the other, these decisions that were rendered by a vote of 5 to 4 in favor of the Government during the last term would have a vote of 6 to 3 in favor of the Government without any new bill or any more retirements. Other vacancies are inevitable soon, especially if we can get this agitation out of the way.

When you examine into the situation you will find that when we get this thing out of the way, as soon as we take the lash from above the heads of these judges over there, some more of them will retire. I mean that as a fact. Everybody knows it is a fact. What is the excuse, then, for this bill being pressed any further at this time? Can we pretend to be unmindful of the hurt? To save my life I cannot figure it out. There may be some reason, but I cannot figure it out.

Mr. Speaker, I am going to yield to any Member who wants to ask me questions. May I say first, however, I have not tried to make a speech this afternoon; but if these advisers who are counseling the President to force that bill into this House under pressure which they may be able to command, when we are trying to preserve strength and unity required to do the Nation's work, if they force that bill into this House for the sake of saving their faces or their hides, they ought not to have hide enough left to be worth bothering about. [Applause.]

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. If the gentleman and his committee maintain the present position against the presentation of this bill to the House, as I understand it, how could it possibly come to the House?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Well, there is the Rules Committee. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. I am quite sure the gentleman has had no experience with the Rules Committee reporting a bill that has not been reported by a standing committee pursuant to a request for a rule made by the standing committee?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. In other words, there is no chance over there? [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. COLDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. COLDEN. Is not the chairman of the Judiciary Committee going a little far when he assumes to protect this House from a responsibility that it now faces, and one on which the people of this country expect an answer from the House as well as from the other body?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Now, would the gentleman make that a little clearer?

Mr. COLDEN. I assume that the chairman is trying to protect this House from a responsibility that I think it should take. Why should it not take the responsibility?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I have tried to state it as clearly as I can. I believe, first, that the program this House has already put through removes the excuse, if I may put it that way, of sending into the House now a bill which will do for the House what that bill is doing in the Senate. Do I make myself clear?

Mr. COLDEN. Yes. The gentleman is assuming that some of the judges will resign, but we have no assurances that they will.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. The gentleman has not any assurance, either, that this bill will pass over there after it has "busted" us open from top to bottom. [Applause.]

Mr. KELLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. KELLER. Does the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary take the position that his committee has a right to deny the House the opportunity to vote on this subject?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. No; I do not think that, but I take the position that the Judiciary Committee of the House is an agent of the House, trusted with certain responsibilities, and at any time this House wants to assume the responsibility of taking the bill away from the committee, it has the privilege of doing so.

Mr. BOILEAU. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. BOILEAU. I take it that those of us who are desirous of having this matter brought before the House then should start filing a petition to discharge the committee?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. No. I think you ought to reconsider and decide the other way.

Mr. KELLER. But if we are unwilling to do that, what is our remedy?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I would suggest the gentleman ask his own group. I want to make an apology. You know I get up here and folks kind of laugh at me and it makes a sort of fool of me. I do not want to pull off "smart-aleck" stuff; therefore, if I seem to be discourteous, I assure the Members I do not want to be.

Mr. COLDEN. The gentleman from Texas has the exceptional ability of being able to laugh the average Member off the floor.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Yes; but the gentleman is not an average Member. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. HARLAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. HARLAN. If the gentleman is correctly reflecting the position of the Judiciary Committee, then it is incumbent upon those who are in favor of meeting the situation as it comes up to oppose any recess that may be suggested; so that we can file a petition to take this matter from the Judiciary Committee and have the necessary number of legislative days lapse. In other words, the bill was filed in the House on July 6. It will have to pend before the gentleman's committee 30 days. The resolution to take it from the Judiciary Committee will have to pend 7 days and it will take 3 or 4 days to get the necessary number of signatures to the petition.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. The gentleman cannot do it in that time. [Applause and laughter.]

Mr. HARLAN. I was submitting a question to the gentleman as a Congressman, not as a prophet. So that in order to have the necessary time elapse and the Congress adjourn within a reasonable time, and in order to have a vote, it will be necessary for us to stay here without any recess. That will be the effect, provided we want to get out of here before September; is that not so?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I do not know. That is too much mathematics for me. [Laughter.]

What I really meant, although I probably did not state it very well, was that I was hoping the leaders in the House, the leaders in the Senate, and the people who are advising the President would just sort of sit down and give this thing a "think" and figure out what had happened under the bill which you passed and what they might expect would probably happen if they sent this bill over here and what would probably happen if they continue this agitation. You know what has been happening in another Chamber. I do not want it to happen here. If I am not trying in that attitude to render a public service, a service to this House, to my country, and to my President, then I am mighty badly mistaken. In this time of year especially, when you get people rowing and rowing and rowing, they are not in any shape to do the serious business of the Government. Do you think people who are continually in this row, week in and week out, month in and month out, are in any shape at all to do the serious business of the Government? And what is it all about? What is left to justify it?

What I am trying to say is that the difference between the bill they have in the Senate and your legislative program does not justify the destruction of the solidarity of this House and the Senate and sending deep lines, possibly permanent lines, of cleavage between the legislative and the executive branches of the Government at a time when every consideration of the public interest calls for unity and that cooperative effort impossible in an atmosphere of discord.

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. In just 1 minute.

Probably I have not been temperate in what I have said, but what I am hoping is that perhaps the people who are for the bill and the people who are against the bill, all of whom love this country and want to serve it, and appreciate the danger of this hour, can get around the table and say, "Now, look here, had we better not let this thing ride awhile, and let the boys sober down and come back here next session, since this is not the last session, and see what else is to be done?" That seems to be horse sense to me.

Mr. COLDEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I yield to my good friend, and I surely will not do any "wisecracking."

Mr. COLDEN. I admit I am no equal of the gentleman from Texas in that respect.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I will not do it.

Mr. COLDEN. May I ask the chairman of the Committee of the Judiciary if the gentleman is advocating a sit-down strike in Congress on this great issue?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I say that this great issue is not the only issue in the country. I believe they would do pretty good to sit down on this issue and go to work on other issues which demand attention. [Applause.]

In all respect to the gentleman, I say that I do not think this is the only question we have in this country. I know and you know it is splitting us wide open. No one can deny that. You know and I know that we need a united people, we need a people who are working with the President. We do not want any lines of cleavage between the legislative branch of this Government and the President. You know from the votes we have been seeing here in the last 3 or 4 weeks this situation, this strife, is beginning to reflect itself in the general legislative reaction of this House, and it is a serious matter.

Mr. COLE of Maryland. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Yes.

Mr. COLE of Maryland. In view of the questions previously asked the distinguished gentleman as to the time required for a discharge petition in order to bring this subject to the floor of the House, I would like to ask the gentleman this question:

It is my understanding the original Court proposal was introduced in the House by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MAVERICK], and no one else, and with that bill now dead in the Senate and the substitute therefor being discussed at this time in the Senate, and the fact that that substitute is the subject of a new bill introduced by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. VINSON] about a week ago, would a petition seeking the discharge of that bill from the Judiciary Committee, over which the gentleman from Texas presides with such dignity, be in order under the rules of the House before the expiration of 30 days? I would like to know if this is correct, and further, if the substitute Court proposal in the Senate has been introduced by anyone in the House other than the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Not by any member of the committee.

Mr. COLE of Maryland. So there is nothing from the consideration of which the gentleman's committee may be discharged?

Mr. HARLAN. The Senate bill has been introduced in the House.

Mr. COLE of Maryland. I am talking about the substitute.

Mr. HARLAN. The Senate bill has been introduced. The gentleman from Kentucky introduced it.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Yes; it has been introduced.

Mr. COLE of Maryland. I did not know that.

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I yield.

Mr. McFARLANE. I would like to have the views of the chairman of the committee on whether or not he expects his committee to hold hearings on the substitute anytime before Labor Day, and if so, when? The original bill has been pending before the House since February 5, and the substitute bill has now been pending for some little time. About 5 months have elapsed. How much of a sit-down strike do we have to have in the House before we consider this proposed legislation?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Does the gentleman mean before we report it out?

Mr. McFARLANE. Before the gentleman's committee will begin holding hearings on it, or do something about it besides just sit here and pass the buck to the Senate.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. The gentleman wants to know how much sit-down strike he can have?

Mr. McFARLANE. I would like to know what the committee is going to do about holding hearings on the bill and considering it?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Well, Mac, you are not by yourself on that. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. KENNEDY of New York. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I yield.

Mr. KENNEDY of New York. Does the gentleman realize we have had a vacancy on the Supreme Court now for about a month or so, and that under usual circumstances the President makes the appointment and sends it to the Senate for confirmation, and usually considerable time is required to investigate the appointment, and so forth? Up to the present time, as the gentleman knows, the President has done nothing about filling this vacancy. Does not the gentleman think if the President would make an appointment the country would have an opportunity to decide what type of men the President intended to appoint to the Bench, which might help us to solve this problem?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I would not like to discuss that question, as that matter falls entirely within the discretion of the President.

May I say that, although it may not be appreciated, I am doing my best to be helpful in this situation? I may be wrong about it, but I really do believe I am a better friend of the President of the United States in trying to get this thing straightened out and this obstruction removed. If I may speak of myself, I saw this situation coming at least 3 years ago. I knew the historical background of the separation of the Executive from the control of judicial determinations. I knew something would have to be done to start again a normal flow of new blood into the Supreme Court, which would save any criticism of the President of the United States on the score that he was trying to control the decisions of the Court. The whole program of the House has been in that direction. I will venture the assertion that, when this thing is over and the President of the United States takes account of what has happened, he will say that the House of Representatives and even the committee with which I happen to be connected have been as good friends of his as the folks who gave him that other bill. I believe so. [Applause.]

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Yes.

Mr. SABATH. Knowing the gentleman as I do, I cannot believe he desires to leave the impression that the country is in danger, or that he desires to alarm the Nation because of the debate which is taking place on the judiciary.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Oh, no; not at all.

Mr. SABATH. The gentleman recalls, I am sure, the strife in the House and in the other body when we considered other important bills, such as the Federal Reserve bill. In those days, as the gentleman recalls, we heard a great many predictions on what would happen to the Nation if that legislation were enacted into law. Nothing happened and the country was benefited, and I believe what is transpiring over there now will not be detrimental to the Nation. These gentlemen will cool off and after they have given the matter due and careful consideration, I believe they will agree on a substitute and everything will be "hunky-dory", if I may use that term. [Applause.]

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I want to thank my distinguished friend from Illinois for that suggestion, because I certainly do not want to create the impression that this bill in itself would bring about any of the dire results referred to. The point I am trying to make, which I think is sound, although I may be wrong, is that this Nation confronts now as great problems as ever challenged any people on the face of the earth; and when there is friction between the Legislature and the President or a sharp cleavage in the House of Representatives and in the Senate, I do not believe we are in as good shape to do the job as where such a situation does not obtain. I cannot see how that can be wrong.

Mr. Speaker, I want to make this additional statement: I am inclined to think that while this agitation has cost us a lot, yet the sit-down strikes and the agitation with regard to the Supreme Court have done more to stir up the people and make them begin to think than all the other things combined in the country, and that is what we have needed; and what I am now trying to say is that after having got the benefit from this agitation, is it not about time that we get together? You go over there and look at those Senators on each side, one of them just as good kind of person as the other, one of them looks to me as if he has as much sense as the other one. The President wants to do what is right in this country, I am sure, and I am sure my friend KENT KELLER wants to do what is right, and I am sure that I do. I am hoping that we will at least make the effort. I am doing my job. I felt like I ought to make these statements, and if it does not work, my conscience is clear. Nobody is responsible for results. He is only responsible for doing his best and following the best judgment that God Almighty gives him, and when he does that, his conscience ought to be clear.

Mr. COLDEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I yield.

Mr. COLDEN. Aside from the question the gentleman is discussing, does not the gentleman believe it is advisable for his committee to report out a constitutional amendment that will clarify the interstate powers of Congress over industry and labor to settle this question for all time?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. It is awfully hard to settle any question for all time. If I thought we could do it, I would do it. I do not know sir. I am telling you candidly, I do not know.

Mr. COX and Mr. LAMNECK rose.

Mr. COX. The gentleman has been so temperate, so kind, and has reflected such wisdom and sympathy that I trust tomorrow morning he will be given a national audience by a friendly and kindly press. [Applause.]

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I hope if they do write anything about it they will not just take one side of what I am trying to say and use it against the Court bill, or print what may be construed the other way. What I have hoped to do is to put over the one thought which I believe with all the conviction I can have is important now, that the time has come in American confusion when sensible men who love their country ought to try to sit around a counsel table and do something about this thing that is dividing and incapacitating us to a degree, as I see it, out of all proportion to the importance of the thing which is being fought over these 5 months now passed and other months in prospect. [Applause.]

Mr. LAMNECK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Yes.

Mr. LAMNECK. I take it from the gentleman's statement that he is not of the opinion that any change in the Supreme Court is necessary to legislate for the general welfare of the country under the Constitution.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I am afraid I did not quite catch that question.

Mr. LAMNECK. I take it for granted, after listening to the gentleman this afternoon, he does not think a change in the Supreme Court as now outlined in the bill in the other body is necessary to accomplish the necessary legislation that we should pass for the benefit of this country?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. The gentleman means increasing the Court?

Mr. LAMNECK. Yes.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. No; I do not believe it, and I will tell the gentleman about that. We had this question up in 1925 when a bill was formulated which decreased the obligatory jurisdiction of the Supreme Court.

The American Bar Association in 1922, on account of the congestion of the Court, had advocated its increase to 11. The Committee on the Judiciary then took that matter under determination. There was none of this present heat about it. It was just a question of what seemed to be the best thing to do. As far as we could figure it out, nine seemed to be about the number that would be required to give the necessary variety of all the things which make up a court with its jurisdiction, variety of thinking, variety of judgment, and variety of sections of the country, and so forth; that it would be just about as good as anything could be, but we did decide that the obligatory jurisdiction of the Supreme Court should be reduced. We went that route instead of increasing the number of judges. It was our conclusion, as I recall it, that judges added above nine would probably slow up rather than speed up the work of the Court. I observe there has been some criticism of the Court because of the small percentage of applications for certiorari which had been allowed.

When you examine it you will find that reduction in obligatory jurisdiction and this small allowance is the greatest reformation that has been effected in the procedure of Supreme Court since the organization of the Government. Prior to that enactment, when this great volume of matter was going to the Court as a matter of right, the Court was so congested that it could not take care of the national questions that came up, and in addition to that we reached the conclusion—and there was none of this heat; it was deliberately done—that insofar as private litigation is concerned, when the individual has had his trial in the trial court and that case has been reviewed in the circuit court of appeals, that that ought to be the end of judicial processes and the victor should have the fruits of his judgment.

We found that the little man was being literally worn out by going to the circuit court of appeals and up to the Supreme Court and back again, that the man with the long purse had an unconscionable advantage over the ordinary individual. So we gave the Supreme Court the discretion to stop litigation as between private persons in which no public interest was involved in the circuit court of appeals. [Applause.]

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Yes.

Mr. KELLER. I am not able to understand where there could be a better council chamber around which to gather than this body here constitutes in itself, and for my part I should like very much to hear the arguments the Members of this House have to put forward for and against the measure now under discussion. There is no heat amongst myself and my friends.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. But it would get up.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

[Prolonged applause, the Members rising.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. BOREN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

THE LABOR SITUATION

The SPEAKER. Under previous order of the House, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ALLEN] is recognized for 20 minutes.

Mr. ALLEN of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, the recent labor disputes in our country convince me—and I speak for other Members of this House—that the relationship between the employer and employee is one of national concern. Good evidence of that fact has been demonstrated here by many Members in recent weeks speaking on both sides of the problem; but it seems to me that we have not yet approached this problem in an altogether fair way. We have laid too much emphasis on one side and we have not really brought out the other. In a matter as controversial and of as vital importance as this it seems to me that we should not be indulging in personalities, or slinging invectives against each other. All we do is to engender bad feeling when we refer to Mr. John L. Lewis as a racketeer and a Communist, which he is not; or to the C. I. O. as a reckless mob, which it is not. This is the national legislative laboratory of our Nation, and it seems to me we ought to combine the best thoughts, representing both sides of this problem, and try to work out a formula which will be good for America. We are never going to do it by arousing the kind of feeling that has been stirred up in this House in recent days. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Cox], a few days ago, said that the time had come to take sides in this matter. I agree with that, but there are different ways of taking sides. We do not have to form ourselves into two armed camps and declare war on each other. We can take sides by offering sincere and honest opinions, and then try to work out a good program from those differences of opinion.

This afternoon I wish to present, if I may, a different side to this picture, one that has not been brought forth except in a cursory sort of way in recent weeks. I would ask the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN] and the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Cox] if they have read the hearings of the La Follette Civil Liberties Committee, and if they have not, I suggest that they do so, and if they have read them, I feel that they should have mentioned them on the floor of this House so that the Members of the House could have seen both sides of the picture instead of only one. Certain employers in America have been guilty of lawlessness and illegal acts in their relations with their employees. Labor alone is not guilty. The transgressions of certain large manufacturers came first.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ALLEN of Pennsylvania. I will yield in a few moments. Not now.

I think that the emphasis has been laid upon the result, but not yet has any attempt been made to draw the curtains and go behind the scenes to see what is the cause of all this trouble, what is stirring up this labor unrest in America. We have paid a lot of attention to the pealing of the bell, but we have not given any thought as to who might be ringing it.

My sympathies are with the laboring men and women of America from two standpoints; a personal one, because I have witnessed in recent years the unequal and one-sided battle which they have been waging for recognition in this country. My second reason is purely economic, because upon the welfare of the working people and the raising of their living standards depends the welfare of this Nation. As I said a moment ago, for every cause there is an effect. This afternoon I would like to present to you the cause of all this trouble; the cause of strikes; the cause of labor unrest as we have witnessed it in the past few weeks. Why, in the first place, has it been necessary for labor to organize? The answer is partly obvious. The growth of monopoly in this country has made the individual laborer an impersonal and inarticulate thing, powerless to defend himself, powerless to express himself. Even if a benevolent employer would like to recognize the rights of his laborers, he has no opportunity to go to them as individuals, because the chasm between them is too wide.

Secondly, it has been necessary for labor to organize so that they can raise their own living standards.

In the third place, it has been necessary so that they can gain the fundamental right to work for their own living and have an opportunity to earn their daily bread.

Organization of labor is good for the employer as well as the employee, and I am sure that the proper organization of labor is the only thing that will help America out of this depression, by raising the living standards and increasing the wages of the working men and women of this country.

But how have some employers met the attempts of labor to organize? How have some employers cooperated with the leaders of this Nation in enforcing the laws which have been passed by this House? The law of the land is that labor shall have the right to organize without intimidation or coercion; but I say that a few employers of this Nation, some of the largest and most responsible, have violated that law from beginning to end.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ALLEN of Pennsylvania. In just a moment I will yield. Let me finish my statement, please.

They are guilty of the most serious and flagrant abuses of the constitutional rights of our citizens. It is they who have set the pace in lawbreaking and violence in America. They have broken the law with complacency. I want to say that those who have denounced the recent strikes as a violation of property rights, law, and order have remained unusually quiet and unusually tranquil during the past 2 years while this other law has been broken by the very people who are raising this hue and cry about communism and racketeering in America by labor today. Labor is a peaceful force until aroused, but it has been aroused, and I would like to recite before this House a few of the things that have stirred labor in recent months.

Was it lawful for the great General Motors Corporation to pay Pinkerton detectives and representatives from other detective agencies in this country $839,000 for espionage in the General Motors plant? Eight hundred and thirty-nine thousand dollars paid to secret operatives to spy upon the workers in that plant. Was that lawful, when the law of the land says that labor shall have the right to organize, and when the Constitution of the United States guarantees to all its citizens the right of assemblage and the right of free speech? This was an absolute and flagrant abuse, yet I did not hear the defenders of law and order in this House stand up and bring that fact before this body. I read very little of it in the newspapers of the land.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ALLEN of Pennsylvania. Not now, please.

Mr. HOFFMAN. I would like to have the gentleman cite that law he is talking about.

Mr. ALLEN of Pennsylvania. The Constitution of the United States. It grants our citizens freedom of speech and freedom of assemblage. I ask the Members of this House if they were working in the General Motors plant and knew that the man at the next machine might be a Pinkerton detective, would they dare express their union views? Would they dare attend a union meeting? They would not when their job depended upon it. This was intimidation of the worst sort.

It was not lawful, and I dare say that if those same workers went to the management of General Motors Co. and asked for an increase in wages they would be told that they could not—the company—afford it, yet they could very well afford $839,000 for Pinkerton detectives to spy upon workingmen.

Was it lawful for General Motors to hire James T. Johnson, a former Pinkerton operative, as an employee in their Baltimore plant, and that man, clever as he was, worked his way into the confidence of his fellow workers, became head of the so-called "Loyal Employees Committee", and as such used the power of that office and the influence of managerial backing to obstruct every attempt of the laboring men and women in that plant to organize into a union of their own choosing?

Was it lawful for General Motors to hire five more Pinkerton detectives for their Lansing, Mich., local, and every one of those detectives became an officer in the local union of the United Automobile Workers of America? So effective was their work that the union membership in that plant was reduced from 100 percent to zero. Is that guaranteeing the rights of the workingmen of this country to organize into a union of their own choosing?

Was it lawful for General Motors to give their addressograph and mimeograph machinery to another member of their loyal company union so that he could send out notices of a company back-to-work movement, in an attempt to break a strike early this year?

Was it lawful? And all during that time, Mr. Speaker, the Liberty League defenders and these vigilantes committees that have been formed recently were particularly silent, they were tongue-tied, and they sat by while the law of the land was being violated, silent and with pursed lips. I do not believe anyone heard a Member of this House stand up in defense of the laboring men who were being discriminated against at that time.

Was it lawful of General Motors Co. to permit a troop of so-called loyal employees, from all departments, in the Baltimore plant to go into another department where they did not work and intimidate one union man so that he had to pack up his kit and go home never to return? The man's name was Gallo. All this is contained right here in the hearings of the La Follette Civil Liberties Committee. That act of intimidation had the blessing and support of the plant management. Was it legal?

Was it lawful of General Motors, or was it conforming with the spirit of the law, when the National Labor Relations Board last summer, June 3, 1936, attempted to hold hearings in Detroit where labor troubles were then starting and General Motors appealed to the Federal court first to enjoin the National Labor Board against further hearings, and failing in that they went to the eighth circuit court where an injunction was granted? Perhaps, if last summer the National Labor Relations Board had been allowed to hold those hearings, all the trouble that followed might have been eliminated; but General Motors defied the law of this land in every respect and yet, I have not heard those champions of law and order, the gentleman from Michigan, or the gentleman from Georgia, arise on the floor of the House and denounce them for their violations and for their illegal methods.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Just a moment.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. ALLEN of Pennsylvania. Not now.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. HOFFMAN. The gentleman made a statement there that is not in accord with the record.

Mr. ALLEN of Pennsylvania. I never heard it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan is out of order.

Mr. ALLEN of Pennsylvania. And all of this time the General Motors Co. made enormous profits—and this is important, because it strikes at the root of our national economic problem—General Motors in 1935 earned profits of $199,000,000. In 1936 it earned profits of $301,000,000, or an increase of 51 percent. This was way above the profits of 1929, and yet the average individual wage in the General Motors plant was 12 percent lower in 1929. That is the sort of thing that these great monopolies and these great corporations in America are guilty of, and that is the sort of thing that should be emphasized on the floor of this House at the present time.

But it seems to me that the General Motors Co. abuses pale into insignificance compared to those of the Fruehauf Trailer Co., of Detroit. The managers of that company are intelligent men and must be familiar with the law of our land, yet they hired a secret operative from the Pinkerton Co. as an employee. He became a trusted member of the union in the factory and was later elected treasurer of that union. Each week he went to the employers and reported union activities, and each week a few union men were discharged from that plant. He even went so far as to sign men up as members of the union in the Fruehauf Trailer Co. and then at the end of the week reported them to the managers. Some were fired. That is not only a violation of the law of our land, but it is a violation of the rules of fair play that have governed the conduct of mankind since the beginning of time. That is treachery. That man was the worst kind of Judas Iscariot. You know and I know what the people of America and all those who believe in fair play think of traitors. The Fruehauf Trailer Co. have not only been guilty of breaking the law of this land but they have broken something far greater, in my opinion.

Then you wonder why workingmen in desperation do certain things. Personally I do not wonder.

The Pinkerton Detective Agency alone spent $240,000 of employers' money to corrupt individual workers and bribe them to sell out their fellow employees. That is a fine demonstration of American citizenship. There are many more cases. All you have to do is to pick up these books—La Follette hearings—and read the Harlan County cases in Kentucky, the Greyhound case and the Jones & Laughlin Steel Co. case near my own district.

I would like to turn to other sorts of violations that I do not think the Members of the House are familiar with. Employers, big business representatives, captains of industry, men who by virtue of their background and training occupy important positions in the communities in which they live have actually paid in money and in liquor men with criminal records to act as strikebreakers. We have the spectacle in America of the most respected citizens of a community forming an unholy alliance with thugs of the underworld in their war against labor.

You have heard of "Chowderhead" Cohen, who was sent to Atlanta for 4 years for conspiracy, who served 4 years more in a State prison and 4 years more in Sing Sing for burglary. He was retained as a strikebreaker by some of the largest industrial plants in America, and according to his own testimony he would "hire out to anyone who could pay off." That is a fine example!

Let us take the Railway Auditing & Inspection Co. There were 13 strikebreakers in the St. Louis strike in 1932 and 7 of them had criminal records, were being sought by policemen in their home towns for one charge or another, mostly burglary. This is an ugly picture of American industrialists and thugs of the underworld forming a coalition against the attempts of men and women to organize. Why has not such lawlessness as this been described to this House by the defenders of law and order?

Violence, I sincerely believe, is as much the weapon of the employer as of the employee. Jay Gould, one of the great industrialists of this Nation, once said, "I can hire one-half of the working people to kill off the other half if I have to."

I believe all too well that that represents the feeling of certain industrialists in America today.

I have heard it said on the floor of the House that the striking pickets in Johnstown, Youngstown, and Chicago were all armed. It was stated they were breaking the law; that they had weapons, billies, sticks, clubs, and all sorts of weapons. But do you realize that in these same plants the men were picketing there were large stores of tear-gas bombs and ammunition of all kinds? All you have to do is to read these hearings. Consider the Lake Erie Chemical Co. and the Federal Laboratories of Pittsburgh and what those concerns and concerns of like character have done. They have sold munitions to the manufacturers of America, at least many of the industries involved in recent strikes.

In all of these records we have only found where one labor union purchased $51 worth of gas. That is all that labor ever purchased by way of ammunition or gas, while, on the other hand, the manufacturers of this country have bought countless thousands of dollars' worth of this equipment to fight the attempts of the laboring men and women to organize. One Herrick Foot, a representative of the Erie Chemical Co. of New England, said in a letter which has been subpenaed, that he "hoped the textile strike of June 3, 1935, would be a damn bad one, because we need the money." That is quoting his own words. What a fine statement that was. Why have not these tactics been denounced on the floor of this House by the gentlemen from Michigan and Georgia?

We see these companies actually stirring up trouble so that they can sell munitions to the industrialists of this Nation.

I think the most open and flagrant attempt to defeat the law of this land is represented by the so-called Mohawk formula, which is a written, scientific treatise on strikebreaking. It was written by James H. Rand, of the Remington-Rand Co., whose record as a strikebreaker and violator of labor's rights is unsurpassed anywhere in the United States. He was successful in breaking a strike, so successful, in fact, that he told all the rest of his manufacturing friends how to do it.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time may be extended 10 minutes. He has brought up some very important things as between capital and labor, and I think it would be well for the House to discuss them a few moments. I have a few questions I would like to ask the gentleman. I think we can get some place if we would on the floor of the House and among ourselves talk to each other and ask questions. I think it is vitally important that we do that.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman predicate his request upon the ground that the gentleman shall yield to him for questions?

Mr. RICH. There are a number of questions I would like to ask the gentleman.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. ALLEN of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, let me read a graphic description of how to break strikes, written by Mr. Rand, which he sent out to his colleagues:

First:

When a strike is threatened, label the union leaders as agitators to discredit them with the public and their own followers.

Second:

When the strike is called, raise high the banner of law and order, thereby causing the community to mass legal and police weapons against a wholly imagined violence and to forget that those of its members who are employees have equal rights with the other members of the community.

Third:

Call a mass meeting of the citizens to coordinate public sentiment against the strike and to strengthen the power of the citizens' committee.

Fourth:

Bring about the formation of a large armed police force to intimidate the strikers and to exert a psychological effect upon the citizens.

Sixth:

When a sufficient number of applications are on hand, fix a date for an opening of the plant through the device of having such opening requested by the back-to-work association.

Seventh:

Stage the opening, theatrically throwing open the gates at the propitious moment and having the employees march into the plant grounds in a massed group protected by squads of armed police, so as to give to the opening a dramatic and exaggerated quality and thus heighten its demoralizing effect.

Eighth:

Capitalize on the demoralization of the strikers by continuing the show of police force and the pressure of the citizens' committee.

Ninth:

Close the publicity barrage, which day by day during the entire period has increased demoralization worked by all of these measures, on the theme that the plant is in full operation and that the strikers were merely a minority attempting to interfere with the right to work.

This is a written description, written by an industrial leader of America, showing an effective way to break our national law.

All I have to say is that in my personal code, lawbreaking by millionaire industrialists or financiers, or by a billion-dollar corporation is just as bad as violation of law by a lowly worker. I think it is, perhaps, more reprehensible on the part of the industrialists because the men who are guilty of such violation by virtue of their training and background should know better.

If the seeds of communism lie in the labor movement today, as my colleagues have charged in this House, the seeds of fascism lie in the tactics of the employers which I have just described. Fascism is just as un-American and just as undemocratic as is communism.

In closing, may I borrow a few words, not from a Member or a great leader of my own party, but from a great captain of the Republican Party, Abraham Lincoln, who on December 3, 1861, in his speech stated:

> Labor is prior to and independent of capital. Capital is only the fruit of labor and could never have existed if labor had not first existed. Labor is the superior of capital and deserves much the higher consideration.

This comes from Abraham Lincoln, your own great captain. I believe in these principles, and this is why I have come before the House this afternoon to defend the body of men whom I sincerely believe have been discriminated against, and whom I sincerely believe are peaceful and do not want violence and will not resort to violence unless they have been goaded into desperation by the unlawful tactics which I have tried to describe to you. [Applause.]

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ALLEN of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. RICH. The gentleman made the statement that he believed the majority of manufacturers were creating a situation where they would do almost anything to down labor.

Mr. ALLEN of Pennsylvania. If I said a majority I will withdraw it. I meant to say many of our most influential manufacturers, and General Motors is certainly one of the greatest, have done that very thing.

Mr. RICH. The gentleman mentioned the fact that somebody was employed to go into a plant and try to get individuals to sign up with a certain organization, and that individual then went back and reported to the managers that these people had signed up and had them fired. I cannot think that in this country anybody would be so damnable and so low as to do anything like that. I cannot imagine that could happen.

Mr. ALLEN of Pennsylvania. The evidence is here, and I will show it to the gentleman. I shall be pleased to have an appointment with the gentleman so I can show him this evidence. It did happen. This man did sign up employees.

Mr. RICH. They ought to have shot that fellow, I will say that.

Mr. ALLEN of Pennsylvania. Good.

Mr. RICH. The gentleman stated he objected to "big business" and the consolidation of corporations. I am with the gentleman on that 100 percent.

Mr. ALLEN of Pennsylvania. I did not say that, but I mean it.

Mr. RICH. I am with the gentleman 100 percent there. I think we ought to enforce the Sherman antitrust laws. I have tried to get Attorney General Cummings to do that with respect to certain corporations, and could not get any action. I think we ought to break down these big businesses into small component parts. Does not the gentleman believe we ought to have smaller component parts in business rather than large corporations?

Mr. ALLEN of Pennsylvania. We should prevent the growth of monopoly in this country.

Mr. RICH. Then how can the gentleman believe that Mr. Lewis and his organization should form one of the most gigantic labor organizations that has ever existed, which is what they are trying to do.

Mr. ALLEN of Pennsylvania. Labor has been forced to do this very thing by the concentration of industry into a few hands. It is the only means they have of protecting themselves.

Mr. RICH. Does the gentleman believe two wrongs make a right?

Mr. ALLEN of Pennsylvania. No; I do not believe that.

Mr. RICH. Then we should not do that, but we ought to permit the individual manufacturers to act so that we can do just what the gentleman said a few minutes ago, talk with our people about their problems and try to get the people and the manufacturers together so that the individual manufacturer and the individual laborer may know the problems they have to face. In this way we can try to accomplish what will be for the best interest of all concerned.

Mr. ALLEN of Pennsylvania. The gentleman forgets that monopoly is already here. Big business is already concentrated, and labor cannot wait and starve through the months and through the years while we disintegrate big business. We have been trying to break these monopolies for decades and have not done so. Labor cannot stand back and wait any longer.

Mr. RICH. Has the gentleman written the Attorney General and tried to break up these monopolies?

Mr. HEALEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ALLEN of Pennsylvania. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. HEALEY. May I remind the gentleman that individual manufacturers are organized in the Manufacturers' Association. I know the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH] certainly does not want to deny to labor the same right to organize.

Mr. RICH. Is the gentleman referring to me? I do not belong to any manufacturers' organization.

Mr. BRADLEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ALLEN of Pennsylvania. I yield.

Mr. BRADLEY. The gentleman has in his address directed inquiries to certain Members who have taken labor to task in connection with the recent strikes. Would the gentleman also inquire of them if they have any knowledge of the profits of the corporations involved in these strikes and of the financial structures on which their profits are based? For instance, General Motors has pyramided its capital structure from 826,000 shares of common stock to 43,500,000 shares of the new capital stock. Chrysler Motors has paid $48 in 1936 on the investment on which they paid $3 prior to the depression.

Mr. ALLEN of Pennsylvania. I think that is right.

May I say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH] in closing that I believe labor in America asks only the same right the manufacturers have taken for themselves. Labor has never been granted equal rights. It has always been submerged, or at least it has as far as my memory goes. Let us be fair. Let us treat human beings as if they were possessed of heart and soul, even as you and I. Let us not look upon them as so many factory hands to be exploited and denied the blessings of civilization.

The laboring people of America from an economic standpoint, let alone a sociological or a humanitarian standpoint, have got to be recognized.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for one more question?

Mr. ALLEN of Pennsylvania. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania for a question.

Mr. RICH. Why did Mr. Green make this statement?—

> No hostile employer in America has done the cause of labor more harm than those who have fomented, executed, and administered the policies of the Committee on Industrial Organization during the past 18 months.

Will the gentleman answer that question?

Mr. ALLEN of Pennsylvania. I cannot answer Mr. Green's statement. The gentleman is familiar with the feud existing between Mr. Green and Mr. Lewis. Why drag me into that?

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ALLEN of Pennsylvania. I yield.

Mr. KELLER. May I suggest, in answer to the question the gentleman asked a while ago, that the gentleman ask permission to quote in his address of this afternoon the record which shows the name of the man who did the infamous thing that the gentleman has referred to?

Mr. ALLEN of Pennsylvania. I do not have the individual's name.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ALLEN] be allowed to proceed for 2 additional minutes.

Mr. RAYBURN. I object, Mr. Speaker. I do not believe the gentleman from Pennsylvania wants any further time.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Tuesday next, following the disposition of matters on the Speaker's desk and the legislative program for the day, the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. CASE] may be permitted to address the House for 20 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, in view of a statement which was made on the floor with respect to the statements of certain other Members, I ask unanimous consent that on tomorrow, after disposition of matters on the Speaker's desk and the legislative program for the day, I may be permitted to address the House for 20 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. BUCK, for Wednesday and Thursday, on account of official business.

To Mr. CROSSER, indefinitely, on account of death of his mother.

To Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee, indefinitely, on account of illness.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend the remarks which I had an opportunity to express this afternoon.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

VOTE ON THE VETO MESSAGE

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Minnesota, Mr. TEIGAN, was unavoidably absent today. If he had been present, he would have voted in favor of overriding the veto of the President.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED

Mr. PARSONS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that that committee had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the House of the following titles, which were thereupon signed by the Speaker:
